What do you expect for unit costs and CPMs in spot? "It depends on the market. The East Coast is hurting now; the West Coast isn't. It depends on what will happen with the economy. Even if unit costs do vary, CPMs won't necessarily correlate. There's no way to predict [percent changes in costs and CPMs] now."
What do you expect for the upfront season? "If [the economy] continues this way, it will be soft. We're in a recession [and] advertising dollars are at a premium, so it will go back to the individual marketplace. Whether you're doing long-term buying or short flights, it's going to depend on the marketplace."
Who's holding the cards? Buyers
Did you feel the same way about last year's upfront? Yes
Is the audience guarantee issue going to be hot or cold? "In the local area, it's more or less a gentlemen's agreement."
Is the TV audience measurement issue going to be hot or cold? Cold
What's the most important issue for spot? "Being able to zero in on a program's reach. There's not a lot of research available."
Which local station is the one to watch this year? "The markets I deal with are all very complicated right now. Everyone's trying to do their best."
What's type of program is your personal favorite? "I'll merrily say sitcoms."
What shows do you regularly videotape? "L.A. Law"
What shows do you wish hadn't been canceled? "St. Elsewhere" and "Working It Out"
What is your current favorite broadcast show? "L.A. Law"

BY THE BUY: CABLE

Name: Stuart Shlossman
Title, agency: senior VP-associate director of national broadcast, BBDO Worldwide, New York
Years in current position: 4
Years in media department: More than 6
How did you wind up buying TV? "I worked at SSC&B [now part of Lintas:Worldwide] in media planning, and an opportunity came up to move to network buying.

"I took advantage of it. I'm personally very results-oriented: In buying, you can take the theory and make it reality. In planning, you put the theory on a flow chart."

Stuart Shlossman

What do you like most about buying TV? "The medium offers a lot of opportunities for creativity, whether it's promotions or a contest. . . . I also enjoy the process of negotiating, which is what we all live for."
What do you like least about buying TV? "The amount of paperwork and follow-up involved. If you spend $1 million on cable, you have some instances where you're talking 2,000 units. You have to track and analyze all those units. It takes a lot of manpower."
If you weren't buying media, what would you rather be doing? "I'd like to be in the marketing department of an advertiser. In marketing, you get to look at the bigger picture."
What do you expect for unit costs and CPMs in cable? CPMs will stay constant, while unit costs will go up 5% to 10%. "Cable's still growing. With remote control, cable has less of that 'that's not real television' attitude. Viewing levels will continue to increase, and that will drive up unit costs."
What do you expect for the upfront season? "Business as usual. Last year, things were fairly orderly. We were happy with most of the deals we cut, and we're happy with the relationships we have with most of the cable network management."
Who's holding the cards? Buyers
Did you feel the same way about last year's upfront? "No. The over-the-air networks aren't in the same position of strength as last year. I think their pricing will be more reasonable. There may not be the same rush to take money out of network and put it into cable.

"Last year, cable and Fox [Broadcasting Co.] benefited from the [networks'] aggressive attitude. If the networks are more reasonable in their pricing, it may be difficult for Fox and cable to maintain the same level of growth."
Is the TV audience measurement issue going to be hot or cold? "It depends from whose side. From the media's side it will always be hot. It's like the weather; we can't do anything about it until somebody shows us something better. We have to live with it."
Is the audience guarantee issue going to be hot or cold? "Cold. It's not an issue."
What's the most important issue for cable? Filling the demand for value-added benefits. "We're looking for the extra value, that extra hook that will convey the client's message more than a 30-second commercial. Value-added is the buzz word now."
Which cable network is the one to watch this year? "The cable network in the strongest position is probably ESPN. It's also in the most difficult position because of the burden of its baseball contract."
What type of program is your personal favorite? Sports
What shows do you stay home to watch? "MTV Unplugged": "I consider that 'appointment television.' "
What shows do you regularly videotape? Occasionally "Sesame Street"—"Not for myself, by the way"—and "Entertainment Tonight" to stay current with the entertainment industry.
What show do you wish hadn't been canceled? "Hill Street Blues"
What is your current favorite cable show? "MTV Unplugged"
Characterize the quality of the average cable show: ' There is no average cable show."

Network viewership shell game turns up empty

Last year the Big 3 broadcast networks were grasping at anything to counteract continuing Nielsen Media Research reports of declining TV viewership.

Suddenly the networks started to tout masses of undercounted college TV viewers, lunchtime snackers, tavern samplers–almost any out-of-home TV watching–as part of the reason the numbers were falling.

The once-touchy subject of audience measurement cools off as the networks say it in a word to advertisers: 'Guaranteed'

By Joe Mandese

The Big 3 TV networks are unhappy with Nielsen Media Research's ratings--unhappy enough to request a study of Nielsen's methods.

But one factor undermines their power to pass their dissatisfaction to advertisers: the lackluster sales environment.

"The key thing for the networks this year is . . . to try and secure contracts and advertiser confidence," says Richard Kostyra, exec VP-U.S. director of media services, J. Walter Thompson USA, New York.

According to a Bruskin Associates survey of advertiser and agency media executives commissioned by Advertising Age and Electronic Media, 92% say they consider the current network TV audience measurement system to be reliable.

The survey also found audience measurement ranked last among four issues as the one respondents feel TV media sellers should address first.

These findings illustrate how the issue that infuriated buyers in last year's upfront season—the Big 3's proposal to adjust viewership guarantees—is now comatose, if not dead.

"I can't even imagine the networks trying to do anything like [asking for adjusted guarantees] this year," Mr. Kostyra says.

"It's not even a discussion point this year," says Aaron Cohen, senior VP-executive media director, N W Ayer, New York.

The networks implemented a controversial viewer-counting formula in last year's upfront season to protect themselves against what they said were unexplained ratings drops—and thus to reduce their liability for underdelivering audience levels guaranteed to advertisers.

In the first quarter of 1990, Nielsen reported an unusual drop in total TV viewership. The Big 3 combined for a 39.7 rating in this period, down 4% from the first quarter of 1989.

This plunge forced the networks to provide advertisers with millions of dollars in make-good units—free ad time to compensate for shows failing to deliver a projected number of viewers.

However, the networks' decision cost them upwards of $200 million in upfront sales—money that was redirected to alternatives like syndication and cable, which continued to do business with traditional guarantees.

> "I believe that we continue to have [ratings measurement] problems that were masked by the increases from the Persian Gulf War."

Fox Broadcasting Co. also provided normal guarantees and sold $550 million of inventory last upfront season, almost twice its 1989 upfront tally.

What's more, the bargains in today's scatter market have diverted the attention of buyers away from the potentially sticky issue of audience measurement. The traditional ratings guarantees given to some scatter buyers making large purchases emphasized the weakness of the modified upfront guarantee.

According to the Advertising Age/Electronic Media survey, 30% of network TV buyers say the Big 3 networks' attempts to revise guarantees caused them to either decrease their network TV budgets or shift some of them into scatter or other alternatives.

To avoid driving business to more advertiser-friendly alternatives in this soft marketplace, the Big 3 will return to traditional sales guarantees for 1991-92 deals.

"We're in the customer satisfaction business," says Pier Mapes, NBC network president.

But these customers don't agree with the networks' claims of problems with the ratings systems.

"The first quarter of 1990 was basically an aberration," concludes Steve Sternberg, VP-manager of broadcast research, Bozell, New York. "Nielsen has not found anything wrong with its methodology."

In fact, total TV viewership is up this season, in part as a result of high viewership of Persian Gulf War coverage.

Ironically, much of that viewing has benefited network alternatives like Cable News Network, and the Big 3's prime-time ratings this season were off about 6% from the previous season.

Still, the networks emphasize that they're not happy with Nielsen's ratings.

Given the intensity of the public's interest in Persian Gulf War programming, the number of households using televisions actually should have been higher rather than even with the viewing level last season, says David Poltrack, VP-planning and research at CBS.

"I believe that we continue to have [ratings measurement] problems that were masked by the increases from the Persian Gulf War," he says.

The networks, along with the National Association of Broadcasters, last month launched a three-year study on the accuracy of Nielsen's TV ratings. This research will involve some type of coincidental study for comparative purposes, such as a telephone survey and the testing of new research methods.

"We're going to continue to challenge the accuracy of our audience estimates," Mr. Mapes says. □

Hey kids! Sit still for a minute

Kids can be such a pain.

TV network researchers insist major audience measurement problems exist in quantifying younger viewers.

"It's no secret that there is some concern about whether kids are pushing the [people-meter] buttons," says Bob Niles, VP-research at NBC. "We've seen signs of kids, teens and young adults where the largest discrepancy is."

Although TV audiences for most demographic groups are up this year, children's viewership is down. For the 1990-91 TV season, the Big 3's combined Saturday morning rating for kids ages 2 to 11 fell to 18—down 16% from the previous season—despite the fact household viewing levels are up slightly in the daypart.

Although agency representatives and the TV networks disagree on the overall validity of Nielsen Media Research's numbers—and although these numbers haven't affected this daypart's spending levels and demand for ad time—they agree Nielsen must re-evaluate its approach to measuring and reporting children's TV viewing.

Children's viewing levels have been inconsistent from quarter to quarter, suggesting some instability in the data, says Jon Swallen, VP-associate director of research, OgilVy & Mather, New York.

"One quarter they're down 10% [from the same period in the previous year] and the next they are flat. Then the next quarter they're down 10% again. There is no consistency, but how much is the ratings system and how much is real we don't know," he says.

Nielsen has gone to lengths to trouble-shoot the problem. When children's viewing levels change dramatically within sample households, for example, Nielsen staffers contact the home to learn why. However, Nielsen is loath to have too much contact with its sample participants, because it is concerned doing so might affect normal viewing patterns.

"We want to measure TV viewing in the least intrusive way possible," says Jack Loftus, VP-communications for Nielsen.

He says clients have suggested the research company increase incentives to children such as toys, T-shirts and money to get them to use the people meters more effectively.

"We don't want to pay for performance, because we don't want to influence their behavior," explains Mr. Loftus.

He admits there's no easy solution on the horizon.

"We don't think there is any quick fix to research problems associated with children's [viewership] measurement," Mr. Loftus says.

Time Warner deal set

Martha Stewart pact to include magazine, TV, video

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—Time Warner is close to signing a 10-year contract with home entertainment maven Martha Stewart that includes the rollout of Martha Stewart Living as well as broadcast TV, book and video projects.

The deal marks one of the most ambitious attempts to exploit the combined resources of Time Inc. and Warner Communications since the companies merged in 1989.

"There's been such a fundamental change in the way advertising is sold," said one Time Warner source. "If you can't offer advertisers a menu of properties and resources, I don't think you're going to stay on their list."

Time Warner executives wouldn't comment on the 10-year deal.

The media giant has increasingly tried to develop synergies among its vast array of properties, in part to secure a greater share of advertisers' declining budgets. But few of the deals to date have approached the size and scope of the Martha Stewart project.

Martha Stewart Living is being developed by Time Publishing Ventures, a Time Inc. Magazine Co. division. The home entertainment guru fits into Time Publishing Ventures' strategy of tapping into the perceived return of family- and home-oriented values among aging baby-boomers.

The project "does a lot more in demonstrating what Time Warner can do, what they're capable of," said Paul DuCharme, VP-director of print media at Grey Advertising.

The magazine launch follows the publication of two test issues of the upscale women's lifestyle/how-to title. The

4A's swerves as shops face troubled times

By Jon Lafayette

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va.—The American Association of Advertising Agencies appears to be changing direction, again, as executives searching for solutions to their mounting problems gathered at one of the group's smallest—and dullest—annual meetings in memory.

There are strong signs the industry is unclear whether it wants to go full-force toward the "new advertising" of integrated marketing or return to the "old advertising" of emphasizing creative media advertising.

Young & Rubicam Chairman Alex Kroll, who succeeded DDB Needham Worldwide Chairman Keith Reinhard last week as chairman of the Four A's, seems to be interested in promoting the value of creative "icons" rather than pushing integrated marketing, which has been emphasized over the past year.

"Well-organized communications that revolve around a central strategy are most efficient," Mr. Kroll said. But at the center

Persistent auto slump stalls ads

By Raymond Serafin and Cleveland Horton

The auto sales slump has dimmed hopes for any significant comeback in automotive ad spending in the second half.

Last week, the pessimistic outlook led two General Motors Corp. agencies to reduce staffs.

Lintas:Campbell-Ewald, which handles about $400 million in GM business, mainly Chevrolet, laid off 71 people, about 11% of the Warren, Mich.-based agency's staff. N W Ayer, Detroit, which services the estimated $40 million corporate image account, released three people, or 10% of its staff.

Media buying sources at GM agencies say category spending in the network TV upfront market is expected to be down sharply this year, despite unusual early activity by some of the imports (see story on Page 3).

While GM has yet to negotiate any new 1991-92 network deals, agency Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, is negotiating with NBC on modifications in its multiyear deal, which is estimated at about $140 million for 1991-92.

Top auto executives now forecast only a modest rebound, at best, in the second half.

Agency sources say overall 1991 GM ad spending on all media will probably come in at about $200 million, or 14%, under 1990, when the company spent an estimated $1.4 billion on advertising.

While GM divisions are honoring previously made commitments, all other ad programs are being scrutinized closely, with the emphasis on maintaining flexibility and funding for new-product launches, agency sources say.

Lintas:Campbell-Ewald was hit hard, with sources projecting agency billings will fall $80 million, or 20%, from the estimated $400 million it handled last year for Chevrolet and smaller GM units such as GMAC, Delco and AC-Delco.

"The second half looks like it's going to be a lot like the first half," said Richard O'Connor, agency chairman-ceo, who blamed the layoffs on "across-the-board client budget reductions." Mr. O'Connor didn't specifically discuss GM spending, but it's believed GM accounted for about 85% of agency billings last year.

Sources say Lintas:Campbell-Ewald unsuccessfully tried to convince GM to increase agency compensation to make up for the decline in billings.

GM, which reported a first-quarter operating loss of $1.16 billion and a net loss of $376.5 million, was said to be unreceptive to guaranteeing levels of rev-

Dai-Ichi Kikaku buys 20% of Bloom FCA

By David Kilburn and Bruce Crumley

France's Groupe FCA and Japan's Dai-Ichi Kikaku are joining forces in the U.S.

DIK, Japan's No. 7 shop with links to Omnicom Group, has bought 20% of Bloom FCA, New York, from the French agency, ranked No. 14 in its home country. FCA in February bought 100% of the U.S. agency.

"This deal is purely for the U.S.," said a DIK executive in Tokyo, where the agency is based. A link with FCA in Europe "might be possible, but . . . we haven't decided anything."

It couldn't be determined how much DIK paid for its stake.

Philippe Calleux, Groupe FCA chairman, said the deal "will allow us to accommodate Japanese clients in the U.S., as well as introduce them to the FCA network that they may one day be using in Europe.

"Secondly, we have a [Japanese] partner with a presence throughout the Far East for our American and European clients. So we expect the traffic to flow in both ways, though our growth in America is certainly one of our greatest priorities today."

Neither the French nor the Japanese executives would say which clients have expressed interest in using Bloom FCA.

GLOBAL NEWS

Mr. Calleux did say, however, that "I will tell you that among FCA's international clients, Helena Rubenstein is looking at this new structure with interest."

Other FCA multinational clients include Nestle, BSN Group, L'Oreal and Trans World Airlines. DIK clients include Kao Corp., Mitsubishi Motor Co., Suntory, Toshiba Corp. and Shiseido Co.

"We are not concerned about any client conflicts [between] Bloom FCA and DIK," said Marion Flores, Bloom FCA chief financial officer. "There are no conflicts."

DIK already has links to the U.S., owning 2.4% of New York-based Omnicom; 50% of Kresser/-Craig, Santa Monica, Calif.; and 4.7% of Mickelberry Corp., New York, which owns Partners & Shevack and Chicago agency Bender Browning Dolby & Sanderson.

Both the DIK executive and John Bernbach, president of DDB Needham Worldwide, said their ties, which are outside the U.S., aren't affected by the Bloom FCA deal.

"I don't see any reason why it would," Mr. Bernbach said.

The DIK executive said, "We have a joint venture with DDB Needham in Tokyo, Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia and [South] Korea. This is not going to change."

However, he said his agency has had difficulty bringing clients to DDB Needham in the U.S. because of conflicts.

FCA also has a working relationship with Hakuhodo, Japan's No. 2 agency, to jointly handle Mazda Motor Corp.'s European account. Though sources say the two shops once discussed a more formal link, Hakuhodo said the new deal doesn't change the status of its relationship with FCA. □

RJR shops ponder Winston

By Judann Dagnoli

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is using quantity to get more quality into its ailing Winston brand.

RJR has approached all three of its major shops, including agency of record FCB/Leber Katz Partners, for input on new "quality" projects for Winston. New packaging to retain freshness is believed to be included.

Besides New York-based Leber Katz, RJR is using both Camel agency Young & Rubicam and Trone Advertising, Greensboro, N.C., for the projects, which the company wouldn't disclose.

Maura Payne, RJR manager of external relations, said the additional agency input doesn't mean Leber Katz is in trouble on the account, which had $18 million in billings last year.

"FCB remains our agency of record," she said.

"Winston is such an important project for their success that they have brought all their agencies together for help on a particular project," said Bob Hirsch, senior exec VP-director of client services, Leber Katz. "We have been assured . . . that this is not a precursor to an agency review or agency change."

Leber Katz, which also handles Salem and Vantage, picked up the Winston account in July 1989 from McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

it's clear RJR is sticking with its quality positioning, which has drawn mixed reactions.

RJR has a history of asking its agencies of record to implement ideas created by Trone, which came up with the "Smooth character" campaign for Camel while that account was at McCann.

That effort is regarded by many as one of the most successful and innovative cigarette campaigns of the past decade, boosting the brand's share to 4.4% in 1990 from 3.9% a year earlier, according to Wheat, First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr.

A source close to the new Winston projects said the work isn't strictly related to advertising and includes intensive, long-term marketing initiatives.

Ms. Payne's only comment: "We've been reviewing the positioning of Winston to make it a quality cigarette with better cuts of tobacco. . . . Now, we're taking that same review to marketing, and there are some projects coming."

It's clear, however, that RJR is sticking with its quality positioning, which has drawn mixed reactions from observers.

Kidder, Peabody & Co. analyst Roy Burry praised the quality effort but said, "There's no indication that the campaign is working" to increase share.

Mr. Burry said RJR's cigarette volume was down 12% in units in the first quarter of 1991.

Winston had an 8.8% share in 1990, Mr. Maxwell said, down from 9.1% a year earlier. □

Sensor turns to direct marketing

By Alison Fahey and Michael Burgi

Gillette Co., after saturating the TV marketplace with spots for its Sensor shaving system, is turning to target marketing with an $8 million national campaign.

The first-ever direct marketing effort for Sensor starts late this month and includes coupons mailed to 5 million men, product samples mailed to users of competitive products and free standing inserts.

It's the biggest direct marketing campaign for any Gillette shaving product in "a number of years," said Bruce Cleverly, VP-marketing, blades and razors, Gillette North Atlantic Group. Rapp Collins Marcoa, New York, handles.

"Historically, we've depended on a broad-reach medium such as television to reach them," Mr. Cleverly said. "Direct marketing has never played a major role in the evolution of our franchise. Now we're paying attention to it."

Mr. Cleverly said the effort, which will complement Sensor's ongoing mass-media campaign, had been planned since Sensor's January 1990 launch but that supply shortages delayed it.

The first mailing to 5 million men will include coupons worth either $2 or $3 off the system, which includes a Sensor razor and three cartridges. The product retails for about $3.75.

That will be followed by a mailing of 400,000 Sensor razors to men who use competitive wet razors, in hopes of converting them. A $1-off coupon for a five- or 10-pack of cartridges is included.

On June 2 and June 9, Gillette will run FSIs featuring a $2 coupon for Sensor. The FSIs, created by BBDO Worldwide, have a combined circulation of 50 million households and are themed for Father's Day. □

THE TOP 200 BRANDS

Spending up 10.7%, but cracks start to show

By R. Craig Endicott

Despite an eclipse in fourth-quarter spending, media advertising by the nation's 200 largest advertised brands grew 10.7% in 1990, according to Advertising Age's Top 200 Brands listing.

AT&T telephone services finished the year as the top advertised brand at $502.3 million, up 41.7% over 1989 as it focused on its long-distance business, which grew 110% to $289.9 million.

McDonald's restaurants, the leader in 1989, was runner-up at $426 million, down 0.5%. AT&T sprinted past McDonald's in the first quarter never to relinquish its lead in each succeeding quarterly listing.

The Top 200 flexed its collective muscles in 1990, claiming $15.6 billion in media, up 10.7% from $14.1 billion in 1989, to grab a 37.9% share of the total U.S. media pie. In 1989, the Top 200's share was 35.9%.

Advertising in media for all brands grew only 4.9% in 1990 to $41.1 billion.

But dark clouds were stirring. Full-year data mask a dismal fourth quarter for the Top 200. Their quarterly spending in newspapers, network TV, spot TV and network radio declined 1.3%, 1.6%, 0.5%, and 6.3%, respectively, compared with the same period in 1989. There were no media declines on a year-to-year basis. Overall, Top 200 spending rose only 0.5% to $4.25 billion in the closing quarter.

Woes drag into 1991

That year-end slump extended into the first quarter of 1991. Preliminary figures show a 4.5% decline in media spending compared with first quarter 1990 for all brands, according to the McCann-Erickson General Index of national advertising (AA, May 6).

Ad totals in this report are for 10 media provided by LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service and mark the first time spot radio has been included.

A "brand" is every product or service marketed under the same name. A brand's ad total can cross LNA/Arbitron-designated subclasses, but brand ad totals in this ranking include only amounts from those subclasses where spending exceeded $2 million.

Except in network and spot radio, media expenditures for the Top 200 grew at a much faster clip than spending by all brands. Network TV, the Top 200's lead medium, grew 12.8% to $6.2 billion in 1990 compared with 6% growth in spending by all network TV advertisers. The Top 200 contributed 61.4% of total network TV spending, up from 57.3% in 1989.

The elite group infused $3.2 billion into spot TV, up 8.4%, compared with $9.3 billion for all brands, up only 2.9%. The Top 200's showing in spot represented 34% of all spending in the medium, up from 32.2%.

The Top 200 showed less growth and clout in the two other mega-media categories, newspapers and consumer magazines.

Newspapers pulled $2.1 billion from the Top 200, up 3.8%. All newspaper advertising grew only 1.7% to $9.7 billion. The Top 200 claimed a 21.3% share of that total, up from 20.9% in 1989.

The Top 200 spent $2.02 billion in consumer magazines, advancing 2.7%, compared with 2.2% growth to $6.7 billion from all advertisers. The Top 200's share of total magazine spending was 30%, up from 29.9%.

General Motors Corp. claimed brand parent honors in backing its eight brands on the list with $1.03 billion, up 13.5%. It overtook runner-up Philip Morris Cos. in the fourth quarter. Philip Morris finished with $816.6 million from nine brands, up 9.3%. GM relied heavily on network TV, claiming one-tenth of the Top 200's expenditures in that medium.

The auto category dominated the Top 200 with $3.4 billion for the year, up 13.8%. Half the category total was in network TV, which grew 20.5% in volume in 1990. Only consumer magazines showed a decline in auto category spending, down 0.4% to $715.6 million.

Growth in the 29-brand auto segment came largely from the Japanese. Eight Japanese brands contributed 52.4% of the $414.1 million in new ad dollars spent by the category in 1990 over the prior year.

The retail category, consisting of 23 brands, grew 6.3% for the year to $1.88 billion. Its leading spender, No. 3 Sears stores, increased its advertising only 1.8% to $421.6 million. Even with the minimal ad growth registered by most retailers, only four brands logged year-to-year declines in advertising.

Newspaper spending by these retailers increased 2% to $958 million, representing 50.4% of the category total. Retailers appear to have diverted spot TV dollars into network TV, the latter rising to $278.4 million, up 24%, while the former flattened out at $358.8 million, up only 1.8%.

Advertising from the 18-brand food category grew 7.9% to $1.55 billion, led by No. 4 Kellogg's breakfast foods at $379.7 million, down 4.6%. The category got its strongest boost from Kraft foods, No. 10, which pumped 22.2% more ad dollars into media in 1990 than in 1989.

The definite media bias of the food category was TV (network, spot, syndication, cable), which accounted for 90% of the category's total spending, up from 88% of the total in 1989. Network TV grabbed $822.9 million, up only 1%, while spot collected $282.3 million, up 26%.

The restaurant category grew 5.8% to $1.23 billion, although ad volume leader McDonald's skidded to a narrow decline as did No. 134 Hardee's restaurants, No. 28 Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants and No. 48 Wendy's restaurants. Taco Bell restaurants, No. 56, outgrew the rest with a 24% gain.

Entertainment and media proved one of the brighter spots. There were no year-to-year declines in spending as the 15-brand category grew 17.9% to $1.11 billion for the year. No. 27 Warner books, movies and video led the pack with $122 million, up 14.2%.

Toys, new to the full-year list, owed its presence to final-quarter spending. The category's five brands rose only 0.2% from the prior year.

But for No. 141 Tyco toys, the category's fourth-quarter ad volume would have declined from the prior year. Tyco, up 51% in that period to $26.3 million, carried the category's quarterly spending to a 6% gain. The quarter accounted for 58% of the category's 1990 expenditures.

Fourth-quarter blues

While the auto category advanced 6.8% to $984.9 million, spending from 13 auto brands declined in the fourth quarter.

Ten of those brands were foreign, including six Japanese brands. This left GM largely responsible for the increase. GM poured $353.6 million in advertising into the media, up 13.8%. Only Pontiac cars and vans had lower spending among its brands in the fourth quarter than in the prior-year period.

Retail advertising dried up in the fourth quarter as the category declined 2.4% to $592.9 million. Eleven of 23 retail brands spent less than in the prior-year period. Department stores dropped a collective 10.2% while the remaining brands grew by 0.04%.

Half of the 18 food brands experienced fourth-quarter declines as category advertising dropped 1.5% to $371.7 million. Media backing for Kellogg's breakfast foods plunged 21.6% while media support behind Kraft foods dropped 46%. Kraft still had the category's biggest year-to-year gain. The quarter is traditionally a strong one for food advertising.

The 10-brand restaurant category declined 3.7% in media advertising to $281.3 million in the quarter. McDonald's 18.9% slippage created the overall decline. Without McDonald's the category would have grown 5.3%. Lest McDonald's be overly singled out, three other restaurant brands also produced quarterly declines, while three more increased spending by less than 3% each.

Final-quarter spending for airline brands was a great deal slower than full year, where eight brands showed a 4.2% growth to $513.5 million despite the fact that four spent less in 1990 than 1989. Collective growth in the quarter dropped 10.7% to $112.3 million as five shaved their spending from fourth quarter 1989.

Beer, the only major category to spend less in 1990 than in 1989, drew $39 million fewer dollars from its four brands, a 4.1% decline to $508.2 million for the year. Virtually all reduced spending occurred in the fourth quarter, however, when category advertising dropped $32 million from the previous-year level.

While media spending for 47 of the Top 200 dropped for the year, almost twice that number showed fourth-quarter declines. □

1991 Advertisers' Guide to Newspapers

Introduction

There's a new cooperative spirit at daily newspapers. Instead of focusing only on their own strengths, newspapers are developing new initiatives for treating advertisers' needs as their top priority. This orientation has transformed newspapers into a market or client driven medium, one that says "yes" to advertisers.

The trend toward working together more closely as an industry has enabled newspapers to better serve a wide range of advertisers. The proliferation of more than 200 regional and national newspaper networks around the country reflects this team approach.

One example, the Newspaper National Network, represents the entire newspaper industry to the ad community and is jointly operated by the newspaper industry and the Newspaper Advertising Bureau. The NNN's marketing teams make it easier for advertisers to place multimarket buys. They develop newspaper advertising programs that help advertising clients achieve their marketing objectives and pre-sell the newspapers they choose in the markets they want to reach. Saturn, one of many advertisers working with the NNN, rolled out its retailer advertising in 141 newspapers reached through this network.

Individual newspapers are also developing strategies for working more effectively with advertisers and their agencies. The Tallahassee Democrat, for example, makes its extensive market research services available to advertisers in the Taliahassee market. Many newspapers have developed advertising agency relations programs, among them the Philadelphia Inquirer and Daily News. Its program features an agency hot line and a fulltime liaison who works to answer questions from agencies. The Poughkeepsie Journal created an action plan to improve relations with its advertisers based on the findings of an advertiser survey. The plan includes an "adopt an advertiser" service which covers everything from monitoring individual ads to a phone contact system that addresses advertisers' concerns.

When advertisers take advantage of the various properties newspapers own (in addition to the newspapers themselves), a mini-network of advertising opportunities opens up. To help advertisers get the most out of their newspaper advertising investment, papers are developing innovative integrated marketing and communications programs. These include, event and circulation marketing opportunities, media mix packages and group advertising buys. Campbell Soup took advantage of creative positioning on the weather pages and Century 21 is now involved with new classified tie-ins.

Newspapers provide a unique distribution channel and are fast entering the business of delivering a whole range of marketing materials that include magazines, inserts (and insert volume in newspapers continues to rise each year), catalogs, coupons and samples.

The Orange County Register has been involved with alternate distribution for four years. A more recent player is The Sacramento Bee which distributes a JC Penney home furnishings booklet with the Bee's Arrival Survival Kit that is delivered to new residents of Sacramento County. The Bee is also considering alternate distribution for Pacific Bell Yellow Pages.

Because newspapers specialize in efficiency and in cutting away waste, their distribution systems allow advertisers to reach tightly zoned market segments directly and unerringly. Today's newspapers are going far beyond traditional age, address and psycho/demographic targeting. Using advanced database marketing techniques, along with highly sophisticated alternate delivery systems, newspapers are moving quickly to target and reach individual consumers by purchase preference. That means newspapers can offer both mass and class coverage, true targeting. Among newspapers at the forefront of the database marketing movement are the Houston Chronicle and Atlanta Journal & Constitution.

Newspapers continue to deliver greater access to the consumers most advertisers want to reach than any other medium. That's because the daily newspaper commands the attention of an enormous audience, with more than 62 million copies sold on an average weekday. In addition, Sunday newspapers have been growing steadily and the number of copies sold now exceeds that of the dailies.

Perhaps more significant, the audience for newspapers is not only large, it is attractive to advertisers of all types. Majorities in every age group from 18-81 read a newspaper on the average weekday with an overall readership level of 62.4%. On Sundays, the adult audience is even greater — at 67.1%. And studies show that children and teens are drawn to the newspaper as soon as they can read. In order to maintain their appeal to both advertisers and readers, newspapers are redesigning their formats and introducing new sections. The 25-45 project at the Boca Raton News exemplifies this trend, one now being followed at other papers with the "yes" orientation.

You'll find highlights from Newspaper Key Facts '91 in the following pages. Key Facts '91 is designed to assist you in using the newspaper medium more effectively. It provides ready answers to the most pertinent and frequently asked questions concerning newspapers — readership, advertising trends, target marketing opportunities, sales impact, creative flexibility and planning.

Readership is the best gauge of newspapers' impact because multiple readers take advantage of each single copy of the newspaper

Readers-per-Copy Estimates for Total U.S.

Sources: NAB estimates based on SMRB, SMM 1990; 1990 Editor & Publisher Yearbook; Circulation 89-90, American Newspaper Markets, Inc. (now SRDS).

The vast majority of adults in the U.S. read the newspaper:

- 62.4% of American adults read the newspaper on an average weekday. Over five weekdays, adult newspaper readership soars to a saturation 86.7%
- Two-thirds (67.1%) of adults read the newspaper on an average Sunday. Over four Sundays, adult newspaper readership increases to 88.0%

Teens are readers too:

- 81% of teenagers ages 12-17 find time to read at least one issue of a newspaper over the course of a week.
- Teen readership on an average weekday is 41%.

OUR SUN ISN'T HALF AS HOT AS OUR MARKET.

And our readers have money to burn.

No matter what you've heard about the summer sun, South Florida is great all year long. Especially if you've got something to sell.

For one thing, the Miami/Fort Lauderdale ADI, the nation's 15th largest, ranks No. 2 in retail sales per household, with nearly $28 billion in total sales.△

Best of all, to reach those in the know, all it takes is one newspaper buy: the Pulitzer-Prize winning Miami Herald and the nation's biggest (and best) Spanish-language daily publication, El Nuevo Herald — winner of the Outstanding Spanish Language Daily Award†. An incredible package!

Since 1987, The Miami Herald has gained 27,000 daily and 32,000 Sunday copies.◊ And since that time, El Nuevo Herald has grown 44 percent, now reaching 102,856 daily and 118,756 on Sunday.□

When you send your client's money to the tropics, we know how to put it to work.

More Ad Dollars Are Spent In Newspapers Than In Any Other Medium

Many newspapers offer advertisers geographic targeting, from total market coverage to selective distribution:

- Nonsubscriber programs: special programs, including free delivery publications, will reach nonsubscribers. Such programs provide advertisers with high levels of penetration for distribution of inserts or ROP ads in a specific market or market subsegment. 84% of daily newspapers recently surveyed reported offering non-subscriber programs.

- Zoned editions: special sections run in certain populated zones that can be purchased for less than full-run rates.

- Customized distribution: even smaller geographic segments than zones are often available for preprint drops.

150 YEARS

THE PLAIN DEALER

1801 Superior Ave.
Cleveland, Ohio 44114

PROFILE

I. UNIQUE CHARACTER OF MARKET:

The Plain Dealer's market consists of Greater Cleveland and Northeast Ohio. It is rated among the top 20 markets in the U.S.

The area is experiencing a major economic resurgence, a case in point being its unprecedented building boom. Over $3.5 billion is being invested in current and planned construction, involving hotels, retailing, office space and a new stadium/sports complex is also on the boards.

Thanks to the lower cost of living in this thriving market, Cleveland residents are taking full advantage of the exciting new leisure-time pursuits available to them, and have welcomed the city's new retailing and entertainment opportunities with open arms.

The Cleveland market features a healthy mix of manufacturing, service, finance, research and medical industries. The result is an economic environment with the strength that such a diversity of industry creates. All Clevelanders have benefitted from this strength with a lower rate of unemployment in recent years, as compared to the State of Ohio and the U.S.

II. MARKET DEFINITION:

Cleveland's 17-county ADI is recognized as the 11th largest ADI in the U.S. The Plain Dealer attracts 39% of adult readers daily and 47% of adult readers on Sunday.

Cuyahoga County is the nerve center of this vital Northeast Ohio market, comprised of over 37% of all ADI adults and 38% of ADI retail sales. In Cuyahoga County, daily adult readership of The Plain Dealer is 71%. On Sundays, 85% of all adult readers get their news and information from The Plain Dealer.

III. DEMOGRAPHIC PROFILE OF READERS:

In the Seven-County CMSA, a single daily issue of The Plain Dealer reaches over one million adults or 49% of total adults. On Sundays, one issue of The Plain Dealer reaches more than 1.2 million adults or 59% of total adults. In addition:

Target Group	Daily PD	Sunday PD
Adults 35-54	53%	61%
Household Income $50M +	59%	68%
College Grads	58%	69%

Birch-Scarborough Readership Report '90

IV. PRODUCT USAGE PROFILE OF READERS:

The Cleveland market ranks number one in the U.S. in share of adults who:

-Own automobiles

-Own homes

-Participate in: golf, freshwater fishing, power boating

-Use: several types of baking products, baby products, automotive products and tools

V. UNIQUE QUALITIES OF THE NEWSPAPER:

Daily "Themed" Sections: Attract a wide variety of readers and keep the newspaper livelier and more involving.

Daily & Sunday Zoned Editions: Help to target specific communities and create "localized" flavor, while offering all other popular features.

New Production Facilities: Plans are now being implemented for a multi-million dollar state-of-the-art plant that will make quality and efficiency second to none.

I. UNIQUE CHARACTER OF THE CHICAGO MARKET / III. MARKET BENCHMARKS

The Chicago Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Area, which includes 11 counties—Cook; DuPage; McHenry; Kane; Kendall; Will; Grundy; Lake, IL; Lake, In; Porter, IN; Kenosha, WI—is one of the nation's strongest:

- the third largest CMSA in the country, behind New York and Los Angeles and ahead of Philadelphia and Detroit
- compared to the other 4 cities in the top 5 CMSA's (New York, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Detroit), in the last year the Chicago CMSA showed the least inflation
- an estimated population of 8,204,263
- approximately three million households
- effective buying income of $30,967 per household
- total retail sales is $58.3 billion: $19,345 per household

The Chicago CMSA is particularly solid in the business/financial sector:

- the number two market of Fortune 500 companies
- home to over 500 banks and Savings & Loans
- home to 16 major insurance companies
- manufacturing is the largest sales industry—other than general services—followed closely by retail trade and financial/insurance/real estate
- the five Chicago exchanges (Board of Trade, Mercantile, Commodities, Chicago Board of Options and Stock Exchange) employ nearly 33,000 and handle more than 75% of the world's commodities business
- Chicago's O'Hare Airport, the busiest in the U.S., serves approximately 58 million passengers yearly and supports about 180,000 local jobs
- "The nation's center of technology users"—with the largest installed base of computers in the nation (according to International Data Corp)

II. THE CHICAGO MARKET DEFINITION

According to the numbers just released by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, the Chicago Tribune total daily paid circulation is 741,345 and the Sunday circulation is 1,131,226. These numbers reveal that the Chicago Tribune leads its closest competitor in daily circulation by 200,568 copies - and continues to lead on Sunday by more than a two-to-one margin!

In the Primary Market Area, which includes Cook, DuPage, McHenry, Kane, Will and Lake counties in Illinois and Lake and Porter counties in Indiana, net paid circulation has increased to 651,448, the largest in three years. On Sunday, P.M.A. circulation stands at 1,009,677.

To more efficiently serve readers and advertisers in Chicago's growing suburban communities, the Chicago Tribune has several suburban bureaus and publishes special editions of the Tribune focusing on news and advertising of these individual communities. The Chicago Tribune continues to grow as the newspaper of choice throughout the suburbs, with daily circulation of 442,137 and Sunday circulation of 720,545. Both numbers reflect the highest suburban circulations in Chicago Tribune history, and our biggest leads ever over our closest competitor.

VI. UNIQUE QUALITIES OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The Chicago Tribune leads its competition in editorial, circulation and advertising excellence.

The Chicago Tribune has award-winning writers on the scene...

Besides having earned 16 Pulitzer prizes and awards for color reproduction, the Chicago Tribune publishes virtually all of Chicago's most popular columnists, from Mike Royko and George Lazarus to Ann Landers and Bob Greene. Plus, the Chicago Tribune has a dozen foreign correspondents permanently located in hotspots throughout the world. In fact, during the Gulf War, while all other Chicago newspapers relied on wire services, Chicago Tribune readers were receiving firsthand reports and photos from nearly a dozen additional Tribune reporters and photographers on the scene in the Mideast.

For the most complete local news coverage, the Tribune produces localized metropolitan news sections focusing on the news events of individual communities. These special editions are published from bureaus located in the heart of those communities.

More advertisers choose the Chicago Tribune as their #1 vehicle...

Advertisers throughout the country have found that the Chicago Tribune is the best environment for getting their message to the Midwest. The quality of readership that the Chicago Tribune brings to its advertisers, as well as flexibility in targeting, color and editorial environment, delivers consistent response and results. In the past year, the Chicago Tribune's dominance in advertising space placed with the two major Chicago papers has risen to — over 66% - that's two-thirds of Chicago's advertising linage!

The Chicago Tribune provides an advertiser with the flexibility to reach the desired targets with timeliness and efficiency. Not only are there up to 14 geographic zones that offer both black-and-white and color availabilities, but every day, in virtually every section of the Chicago Tribune, advertisers can find opportunities to target their messages through zoning. Whether it's in the suburban editions or regular sections of the newspaper - including the Wednesday Style section, the Thursday Food Guide, the Friday section and the Sunday Transportation, Home and WOMANEWS sections, to name a few - zoned advertising is available.

Plus, for even greater coverage and flexibility, there are countless advertising availabilities in selected-area inserts. And the Tribune publishes Local Values, a direct mail package sent only to non-subscribers. No other Chicago paper delivers such broad opportunities and strong results.

The Dallas Morning News:
A History of Excellence
by Dan Hanrahan

Times are tough for the newspaper industry.

The recession has caused a slump in advertising that some analysts are calling the worst in twenty years. Profits and ad linage are down considerably at some papers. But there is hope. In the darkness that surrounds the newspaper industry, one major daily is shining brighter than ever: The Dallas Morning News. At a time when newspapers' budgets are calling for cutbacks and numerous other defensive measures, The Morning News has consistently asserted a dominance in its own market and within the newspaper industry itself.

An Increase In Numbers

The Dallas Morning News sells more than 412,000 copies daily in the Dallas-Fort Worth ADI (33 surrounding counties in North Central Texas) -- a 44% increase from 1980 and 197,250 more than its closest local competitor. On Sunday, The Morning News sells more than 611,000 copies - a 73% increase from 1980 and 303,268 more than its closest rival.

It's the same story with readership figures: On the average weekday in the D-FW ADI, The Morning News reaches 912,100 readers -- 331,900 more than its closest competitor. On Sunday, The Morning News reaches 1,265,900 readers - 431,300 more than any rival in the area.

A Better Editorial Product

Since 1980, The Morning News has been honored numerous times, achieving some of the highest awards accorded any newspaper nationwide, including three Pulitzer Prizes in the last five years. The most recent Pulitzer received was in 1991 for Feature Photography.

In the last year alone, other journalistic recognition has included:

*For the seventh time in the past eight years, Sports Day (The Morning News' highly acclaimed sports section) swept awards for the best daily, Sunday and special sections in the Associated Press Sports Editors' (APSE) contest -- the only paper to have swept all three categories in seven out of the eight years of the APSE contest.

*Three Morning News staff reporters received the George Polk Award for Regional Reporting. Gayle Reaves, David Hanners and David McLemore were recognized for their six-part story on drug trafficking and its effect on life in two Texas counties.

*Six Morning News writers won Charles E. Green Journalism Awards from the Headliners Foundation of Texas. Honors included "Star Reporter of the Year," "Investigative Reporter of the Year," "Editorial Excellence," "Excellence in Newspaper Specialty Reporting" and "Excellence in Feature Writing."

The Morning News* became the only paper with two winners of Associated Press Sports Editors' Red Smith Award for outstanding contributions to sports journalism. Dave Smith, executive sports editor and deputy managing editor, joined sportswriter Blackie Sherrod, who won the award in 1985.

Graphic Improvements

A great deal of the newspaper's success has to do not only with what is read, but how easy it is to read. Over the last decade, The Morning News has consistently improved its appearance.

In 1985, The Morning News invested in a multi-million dollar offset printing facility, and recently installed a Scitex color correction system.

In the summer of 1990, The Morning News began using two specially formulated low rub-off black inks to print the paper, and soy-based colored inks with low rub-off characteristics are currently being tested.

As the switch to low rub-off inks and continued improvement in production areas indicate, The Morning News is serious about presenting the best looking, easiest read newspaper in the business.

"Our improvements have proven a major boon to both readers and advertisers," said Harold Gaar, Morning News' vice president of marketing. "Servicing an area with such important corporate bases as Exxon, JCPenney, MCI and GTE, as well as an extremely well-educated work force (6th in national rankings) demanded a superior product. And we delivered."

Community Involvement

A great newspaper not only informs, educates and entertains, but is also a key corporate member of the community. Over the last 106 years, The Morning News has committed major resources to sponsorship of civic, cultural, sports and educational events that enhance the quality of life in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. More than 1 million people each year participate in or attend programs sponsored by The Morning News.

The Morning News has also been active in the community through editorial and marketing support of corporate and individual recycling programs.

Future Developments

The Morning News' success story is encouraging, with steady projected growth for the rest of 1991. But the question is: How does the paper plan to maintain the level of excellence Dallas and Fort Worth residents are responding to in record numbers?

"As always, by maintaining our commitment to producing the best possible newspaper which meets the needs of our readers and advertisers, every day," says Gaar.

We Think You Should Know Our Position On Advertising.

#1 in Classified Advertising Linage
#2 in Full-run Advertising Linage
#3 in Retail Advertising Linage

In 1990, The Dallas Morning News took the top three positions in classified, full-run and retail ad linage, respectively. The reason is simple. A lot of advertisers are obviously getting a lot of very good results.

And if you have something to sell, that's a very good reason why you should think of us first. And second. And third.

A LOS ANGELES TRADITION

Hispanic culture is at the root of today's Southern California, and the Hispanic community is a vital part of a thriving Los Angeles. For sixty-four years, La Opinion has been the voice of that community. Hispanic marketing isn't new to us — it's our heritage.

THE EMERGING MAJORITY

The Los Angeles market is growing at a rate well above that of the U.S. population as a whole. That growth comes primarily from the Hispanic population, which experienced a growth rate twelve times that of non-Hispanic whites during the 1980's. Sheer numbers make this community a sound investment for targeted advertising. Los Angeles is number one in Effective Buying Income, totalling over $63 billion in retail sales . . . and Los Angeles is one-third Hispanic.

UNDUPLICATED REACH

Unlike many other metro dailies, La Opinion's primary market is not defined geographically, but rather demographically. Of the nearly 2 million Hispanic adults in Los Angeles and Orange counties, 82% are Spanish-dominant, preferring to obtain and exchange news and information in Spanish. La Opinion's penetration of this Spanish-dominant Hispanic market is 386,700, or 24%, over a 6-day week. La Opinion has virtually no duplication with other area newspapers, either Spanish or English.

LA OPINION READERSHIP

The majority of La Opinion readers are 18 to 34, and most have been in the area less than five years. This gives advertisers a premium opportunity to establish brand awareness and shopping loyalty. In addition, our larger-than-average household size means increased product consumption.

EDITORIAL PRODUCT

The La Opinion reader is highly interested in our regular editorial features and special sections. 90% of readers rated La Opinion's overall coverage as excellent/very good, and 91% judged La Opinion to be "complete, covering all the news I want or need." La Opinion offers readers daily coverage of international, national and local news, sports and entertainment, as well as a Thursday food section and Sunday entertainment tabloid. Sundays also offer full-color comics, a TV guide, and a family/lifestyle section.

SPECIAL SERVICES

Additional information on La Opinion and the Los Angeles Hispanic market is available through the Marketing Department, LA OPINION, 411 W. Fifth Street, 11th Floor, Los Angeles, CA 90013, (213) 896-2020.

Recession felt, but direct shops gain

Surprisingly strong volume increase of 15% keeps agencies mostly optimistic

By Kenneth Wylie

The direct-response industry seemed to defy the recession as it held its own through most of 1990.

According to the 1991 Advertising Age direct-response agency survey, the recession's heaviest blows still had not been felt by yearend.

As a result, total 1990 U.S. direct-response dollar volume for surveyed agencies rose 15.2% to $4.1 billion.

This gain far surpasses the 9.5% growth predicted by agency executives last year. It also outstrips U.S. direct-response volume gains of 12% in 1989 and 9.6% in 1988.

"We're quite optimistic despite the recession," says Ronald Greene, president of Devon Direct Marketing & Advertising, Berwyn, Pa. "We're finding the marketplace terribly buoyant."

"In recessionary times . . . if [companies] have $60 million in advertising for awareness and $10 million in direct marketing, they can afford to take $3 million from advertising and move it to direct for tactical purposes," says Murray Bowes, chairman-ceo, Bowes Dentsu & Partners, Los Angeles. "Historically, companies in high-tech, automobiles, package goods and financial services will make such reallocations," he says.

On a roll: Data-base billings soar 32.7%. Page 35

Even so, some recession-induced uneasiness is evident in the industry.

"The recession has been felt," says Russell Kern, president of Kern/Mathai Direct Marketing, Los Angeles. "But there are two good areas for us: the high-tech [market], which is still showing good results with direct mail, and financial services, which slowed from July 1990 to January 1991 but is now coming back with caution."

The survey shows little juggling at the top of the industry rankings.

Leading the field among direct-response agencies, as they have for the last five years, are top-ranked Ogilvy & Mather Direct, New York, followed by Wunderman Worldwide, New York.

O&M Direct showed a substantial 16.1% increase over 1989 U.S. total volume, climbing to $[illegible] million in 1990. No. 2 Wunderman saw U.S. volume grow 9.3% to $254.4 million in 1990.

"Microsoft, which we started with in 1989, showed good gains in 1990," says O&M Direct Chairman-CEO Jerry Pickhardt of the 16% gain. "Avon CARD, American National Bank and Xerox, plus new business from existing clients American Express and AT&T [all contributed to the] gain in volume."

Rapp Collins Marcoa, Chicago, retaining the No. 3 spot, saw U.S. volume grow 7.6% in 1990 to $243.2 million. Direct Marketing Group, New York, the No. 4 agency, slipped 2.3% to $146.2 million in 1990. DMG's commitments to finance-related clients may have played a part in the drop.

"1990 was a year of recession on a national scale," says Chairman John de Pasquale. "It was hard on the service industries, and direct marketing is a service." He hopes the industry's attempts to "penetrate the package-goods business" will counter losses in other markets.

Among agencies with direct-response billings, Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, Chicago, held No. 1 again by a comfortable margin. The agency's direct-response volume inched up 1.9% in 1990, to $214.3 million.

No. 2 on the list is Lintas:Marketing Communications, Warren, Mich., with its U.S. direct-response volume up by 14.4% in 1990, to $123 million. Volume at the No. 3 agency, Clarion Marketing & Communications, Greenwich, Conn., rose 13.8% to $52.9 million.

Direct mail continues to be the main medium carrying the direct-response message. Direct mail accounted for nearly 66%, or $1.4 billion, of total direct-response media spending.

Total U.S. direct-response media billings climbed 18.3% in 1990, to $2.1 billion. This total applies only to agencies that broke out billings by media on survey forms.

Commissionable billings for direct-response media rose about 19.5% to $780.1 million in 1990. Materials and services—mark-ups for outside work—jumped 28.3% to $411.1 million.

> "In recessionary times . . . [some companies] can afford to take $3 million from advertising and move it to direct for tactical purposes.'

Capitalized fees—derived by equating agency fees with billings—rose 17%, to nearly $2 billion in 1990. Worldwide volume of reporting agencies increased 16% reaching $5.1 billion, compared with $4.4 billion in 1989.

None of the fiscal advances shown this year deny the larger economic realities of 1990 and 1991, however.

"The recession has had an effect," says Barbara Lask, president of Smith Lask Associates, Chicago. "But the economic difficulties are more precipitated by the postage increase," she says. "As a direct result of the recession, clients canceled projects, plus they cut down the number of mailings and the quantity per mailing."

"We lost two retail clients," says James Bloch, president of James & Thomas, Chicago. "We're running into a group of marketing managers who want tighter control, so they take work in-house."

For the immediate future, hopes are up among most U.S. direct-response agencies. Among all agencies responding to the survey, nearly two-thirds look for an upswing in 1991.

Nearly 64% expect business to increase, with 28.4% looking for 1% to 5% increases in direct-response spending by clients, and another 18.8% looking for a 6% to 10% rise.

McCann Direct President William Morrissey, who predicts a 6% to 10% rise, expects business to be solid and growing for a long time—even 10 years down the road. But it's not an all-bright horizon.

"Long term, as the cost of information goes down and the need for targeting specific consumers goes up, the direct-response industry will benefit," he says.

"With the demand by consumers to be treated as individuals, and the recognition by clients that direct response can deliver that targeting, we can look for a merger of general advertising with direct marketing. The mix will create something new that better meets the needs of consumers."

"1991 is . . . a time to be cautiously optimistic, to wait and see," says Mr. Pickhardt. Beyond 1991, however, "The future looks very hopeful. We're on the growth side of the [marketing] equation. We are moving into a good environment for one-on-one marketing, relationship marketing."

Less than a quarter of respondents, 23.1%, expect client spending to drop in 1991. One of those is Mr. Bloch, who doesn't expect clients to bounce back soon. He predicts business could be down 6% to 10% in 1991.

"We do have a significant portion of clients holding back on advertising, promotion, brochures, catalogs until they see the light at the end of the tunnel," he says. "Now, in the spring of 1991, we are seeing some light, but they are not opening their wallets." □

METHODOLOGY

Agencies ranked in this report were separated into direct-response agencies and agencies with direct-response billings.

Direct-response agencies must draw 50% of their total billings from direct response. They are ranked, however, by 100% of their billings. If a direct-response total can be isolated for an advertising agency division or subsidiary, the unit appears as a direct-response agency.

The second ranking identifies agencies whose direct-response activity is less than 50% of total billings. This group largely consists of direct-response billings from advertising agencies.

Rankings are by volume or capitalized billings. Capitalizing brings fees to a billings equivalent by using a 6.67 multiplier. The terms "billings" and "volume" are used interchangeably. □

Costlier mail to get more intelligent

Despite February's postal rate hike, U.S. direct-response agencies are sticking with the U.S. Postal Service.

That's the majority decision of the 1991 Advertising Age direct-response agency survey. More than 53% of survey respondents say they are not likely to use alternate-delivery options in 1991.

"Most of our clients . . . take the attitude, 'You've got to live with it,' " says William Morrissey, exec VP-worldwide director, McCann Direct, New York.

But the industry is reacting to increased rates. To cope with higher mail costs, agencies are turning to tactical regrouping.

U.S. direct-response agencies are paring lists, using them more selectively and winnowing data bases to make sure they reach the most qualified prospects.

Because of the rate increase, 52.4% of respondents expect to lower direct-mail production costs, 51.2% plan fewer mailings, and 66.7% expect to cut the number of prospects receiving direct-mail efforts. Overall direct-response budgets are safe from cuts, say 51.2% of respondents.

"Mail will be used much more intelligently," says David Hefter, chairman of Rapp Collins Marcoa, Chicago. "We will make more use of data bases, find out more about the prospect, mail more directly to each prospect."

Bowes Dentsu & Partners, Los Angeles, "is getting better [at data-base marketing] all the time, so we're dropping less valuable names," says Chairman-CEO Murray Bowes.

"The difference is we've sorted and know who are prospects and who are merely suspect, so even with 25% higher postage we can stay even with costs."

In reaction to the postal increase, 57.1% of respondents say it is "likely" or "very likely" they will increase their use of non-mailed media.

Respondents don't expect the Most Companies Do Targeted Direct Marketing By Default.

Most direct marketing today suffers a double whammy. A lack of vision as well as aim. The key is identifying your most profitable target. The challenge is knowing how and where to look.

And the place to turn, like so many national companies have discovered, is to Targetbase Marketing from MARC. We've spent the last quarter of a century analyzing, understanding and predicting consumer behavior. So we can leverage both our knowledge and experience in improving your direct marketing results.

With Targetbase, how we target is just as important as who we target. For example, traditional direct marketing looks at your database as a whole. We see a number of segments, each one motivated by different reasons for purchase.

Through research and analysis, we identify profitable segments within your total audience. Then we determine the most important product benefit, appeal and message to stimulate purchase from each targeted segment.

By feeding the responses from those programs back into your database, you establish ongoing relationships with customers and prospects. You communicate with customers as individuals, not just as postal hike to hurt U.S. dollar volume in a big way. More than 38.1% say it will have no impact, while 16.8% say their dollar volume projections would either be flat or increase up to 4.9% without the postal hike. Another 10.7% say the hike will hit them harder, projecting business would have improved 5% to 9.9% over projections without the postal increase.

The postal-rate jump also is pushing direct-response shops to come up with more creative solutions to problems, say some respondents. "Postal increases," says Mr. Bowes, "force us to be better marketers."

Data-base billings soar 32.7%

Speculation about the potential of data-base marketing is fast being replaced with hard data testifying to its revenue-generating power.

Advertising Age's survey of direct-response agencies shows a 32.7% jump in billings, to $59 million, generated by internal data-base operations in 1990. Actual data-base business volume is believed much higher because only 17 agencies provided information on their data-base activities.

Also keep in mind data-base marketing still is in its infancy, says David Hefter, chairman of Rapp Collins Marcoa of Chicago, who along with 42.9% of survey respondents says data-base marketing has "high" growth potential for 1991.

Targeting customers by means of computerized information will become further refined as new demographic and U.S. Census data are included, says Mr. Hefter.

He says targeting also allows clients to purge less-qualified prospects from their circulation. "It's the future of all marketing," Mr. Hefter says.

Survey respondents' gross billings from telemarketing also saw a big leap in 1990: up 46.6% from 1989 to $5.6 million.

But survey respondents expect little to no growth for 800 and 900 numbers and telemarketing solicitation in 1991.

That response may result from negative consumer reaction to out-bound telemarketing, says Murray Bowes, chairman-ceo of Bowes Dentsu & Partners, Los Angeles. Those pressures could bring the medium under governmental regulation if the industry doesn't do something soon, he says.

"There are some real issues of privacy. I believe if the industry doesn't regulate itself, it will be regulated," Mr. Bowes warns.

Survey respondents report catalogs—the great-granddaddy of direct-marketing tools—showed a 36.7% increase in revenues, but 57.2% of respondents expect little or no catalog growth in '91.

Added costs from the postal increase and a crowded field of competitors will weed out weak contenders in the catalog market in 1991, says Mr. Hefter.

Nevertheless, "the big positive that will keep catalogs going is the fact that no one is at home anymore," Mr. Bowes says.

Direct-sell TV hits a hot button

Don't touch that dial!

Executives at direct-response agencies say there is strong growth potential for direct-response television, some of that coming from advertisers who have never before used direct response in their media mix.

Advertising Age's direct-response agency survey shows TV billings grew 36.8% from 1989 to 1990, compared with 19% growth in print and 15.7% in direct mail. Radio billings decreased 4.11% in the same time period.

Respondents say the use of television will continue to grow in 1991—39.3% give it high growth potential. Despite decrying the postal-rate hike, more than 45% of respondents expect high growth for direct mail in 1991; 39.3% see high growth for print.

Ogilvy & Mather Direct, New York, is projecting high growth for direct-response TV. Pam Reese, the agency's VP-general manager, says several clients recently have reallocated direct-response dollars from print to TV.

TV also is becoming more of an entry-point medium for first-time direct-response marketers, she says.

"We have a couple of clients that weren't doing any direct-response advertising starting with direct-response TV. . . . In the past they most often started with direct mail," Ms. Reese says.

William Sutherland, president of Chapman Direct, New York, sees growth in TV coming from clients who have spent most of their TV dollars in general-awareness advertising.

"They're shifting money into a medium they know, but making it response-oriented," he says. "These kinds of clients want to continue consistency in brand awareness, but at the same time measure [the effectiveness of] their advertising."

Mr. Sutherland sees a new "hybrid" of direct-response TV that is not as hard sell as traditional methods.

"It's a softer sell compared to where the direct-response industry has been in television, but a harder sell for clients who have not been in direct sell," he says.

Ms. Reese sees some growth potential in business-to-business direct mail and says radio—although limited in its appeal—can be used as part of a media plan as well as in markets where TV is not dominant. She also sees growth in non-traditional media such as laser discs and on-line computer access.

Cost-cutting regime: Bring work in-house

Tough times are changing, rather than diminishing, business at direct-response shops, some executives say.

Nearly 27.4% of the agency executives surveyed by Advertising

Age say some of their clients have brought some direct-response functions in-house since 1989.

More than 31% of respondents also say clients are subcontracting work independent of their direct-response agencies, cutting shops out of a portion of direct-response activities to contain costs or exercise greater control.

"Direct-marketing agencies are slowly getting out of the business of mass production because the clients can't afford it," says John Coe, president of Integrated Target Marketing, Cleveland.

Clients are aware of the actual costs of production, he says, and some are learning to just say no to comparatively high agency mark-ups.

Mr. Coe predicts agencies that continue to mass produce for clients and charge steep mark-ups will become obsolete, losing out to clients' in-house production departments.

Pam Reese, VP-general manager of Ogilvy & Mather Direct, New York, says although she has seen a trend toward in-house production by clients in the last few years, she also sees agencies growing in the area of strategic consulting.

"In light of the new postal regulations . . . some of our clients are using us as consultants because of the expertise we bring," Ms. Reese says. "They want an objective viewpoint to really make sure they're doing their production the most effective way."

The additional consulting work has "more or less" offset losses in production-generated revenues, says O&M Direct President Shelly Lazarus.

Agencies that have lost work to clients' in-house departments have suffered, she adds. "I think those agencies would have to rethink their whole compensation scheme."

As a result of the shift, some agencies are forming joint ventures and strategic alliances with ancillary service providers, such as computer-service bureaus and telemarketers.

Of the agencies surveyed, 19% have established formal relationships with such service providers, and Ms. Reese predicts that number will climb.

Agencies, however, still need to have an expert on staff to ensure the work is done correctly, she says.

"You have to have people on staff who have a very clear understanding of the area . . . because ultimately you're responsible to the client, so it's your job to make sure you're delivering a high standard," says Ms. Reese.

bulk of their revenue-generating business over more than five clients.

Although 64.3% of respondents have agency-of-record status with clients, it appears to be more of a goal for larger agencies.

"I feel more comfortable having a small number of clients and serving them as best I can," says Harris Brandt, president of Brandt Advertising, a smaller direct-response agency in Woodmere, N.Y.

Mr. Brandt, who has no agency-of-record clients and one client responsible for more than half his volume, says he has never lost a large customer and does not worry about the consequences.

"I recently stopped working for a rather large client . . . only because I felt I wasn't able to do my best work. I was able to actually decline work from them and pick up work from other clients," he says.

Mr. Brandt also finds project work more lucrative for his agency than retainer work.

"I feel I would have to lower my price [as agency of record]. Otherwise what's in it for the client? Why would a client commit to me on an annual basis if he could get the work cheaper?"

With project work, he says "I don't have to drop my price [on] project."

Kobs & Draft, Chicago, has agency-of-record status with 15 of the 20 corporate clients it has maintained over 1989 and 1990.

"Being agency of record gives us an opportunity to be more of a marketing partner [with the client]," says Sid Liebenson, the agency's exec VP-director of marketing. "The alternative is getting just a few projects and not having a good client relationship."

But agency-of-record status does not guarantee a steady cash flow, says Mr. Liebenson, who says his agency charges the same amount for project work as it does for work done on retainer.

Kobs & Draft did see more activity from agency-of-record clients than from others last year, says Mr. Liebenson, but "in a tough economy everybody's going to get burned."

Having agency-of-record status, however, "does mean that if there would be any work, we get it," he says.

Notes: Dollars are in thousands. See Page 32 for methodology.

The '2%' solution gets diluted

Agencies that repeatedly trot out the 2% return rate as the benchmark of a successful direct-response campaign should stay on their toes. Some direct-response executives are becoming cynical of waving such a general measure before clients.

For years, a 2% return has been touted as the benchmark for judging a direct-response effort's success. The Advertising Age direct-response agency survey asked if that measure still holds true. The answers brought up an interesting contradiction and raked in more impassioned write-in replies than any other question.

Almost 40% of respondents say they still consider a direct-response campaign successful if it pulls a response rate between 1% and 2.9%.

Yet the industry is too complicated and sophisticated for such a simplistic guideline, according to more than a few respondents.

The 2% rate "was a myth from the beginning and a myth that should be laid to rest," says Murray Bowes, chairman-ceo of Bowes Dentsu & Partners, Los Angeles.

Other direct marketers agree.

"Success should be defined on the basis of net profitability of the advertising campaign for the client," says Ron Greene, principal and managing director of Devon Direct Marketing & Advertising, Berwyn, Pa.

"Net profitability is dependent upon such variables as margins, pricing and overall elements of the campaign," Mr. Greene says.

A campaign generating an apparently high return rate of 25% might not make money if other factors are not in line, says another respondent.

Let the client beware if he hears what Mr. Bowes calls the "2% illusion. To say that is a goal in every campaign makes no sense. I don't know how it ever got started."

Big 3 TV nets play it safe

New season's tight ratings race to offer no 'breakout' programs

By Joe Mandese

The new fall TV shows are now in place, and there's no clear projected network leader as advertisers get ready to plunk down billions of prime-time dollars over the next two months.

After a sneak preview of the new schedules last week, agency media executives said the possibility exists either ABC or CBS next fall could overtake NBC, last season's narrow ratings winner.

The executives also said the relatively conservative scheduling strategies unveiled by the networks did little to break up a pack that's grown increasingly tighter in both household and demographic audience delivery.

Agency executives maintained NBC's just-concluded May sweeps victory doesn't necessarily suggest new momentum for the network, which finished last season just barely ahead of ABC and CBS in household ratings and behind them in some key demographics.

"We're looking at a situation where just a little tweak here and there could cause a change in the standings," said Jack McQueen, senior VP-general manager of FCB/Telecom, Burbank, Calif.

Overall, Mr. McQueen said, the new lineups are based on "familiar stars, safe premises and no big surprises. This is not a situation of one network doing a really good job of scheduling at this point. It's sort of even across the board."

"I've only seen pieces of shows, but there doesn't appear to be anything that is of breakout potential," said Joel Segal, exec VP-director of national broadcasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York. "I don't see anything that is going to take a network in a time period from a 15 to a 30 share, but I've only seen pieces of the shows."

However, even one or two successful new series launches could make the difference that catapults a network from third to first place, said Paul Schulman, president of Paul

Texas questions GM ads

DALLAS—The Texas attorney general is threatening to sue General Motors and agency McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, for alleged deceptive adver.. ng. At issue is a corporate campaign for the Cadillac division's winning of the U.S. Department of Commerce's 1990 Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award. Representatives of the attorney general and GM plan to meet this week to try to reach agreement on a consent judgment. The formal notice of intent to sue contends the ads misrepresented the award in six instances, including the number of applicants and a statement that the department had praised Cadillac's 4.9-liter engine and its Customer Relations Center. A GM spokesman said the company already corrected advertising regarding the number of applicants but said GM contends the advertising otherwise was "accurate and not misleading."

Camel vs. Marlboro

New Ninety Nines entry will box with the leader

By Judann Dagnoli

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is trying to break from the pack with a line extension of Camel cigarettes being promoted as if it were a new free standing brand.

The company in July starts marketing on the West Coast Camel Ninety Nines, which despite its name is equivalent to a 100-millimeter-size Camel filter. Ninety Nines will come in hard-box style only.

With the introduction, RJR appears to be following an industry trend of giving established brands new twists to make news in the $40 billion market, already jammed with nearly 400 brands.

Though a line extension of RJR's 75-plus-year-old flagship brand, Camel Ninety Nines' different name "is to make it stand out from the competition," s d Peggy Carter, manager of r edia relations.

RJR said Camel Ninety Nines is aimed at both women and men, specifically smokers of Philip Morris USA's market leading Marlboro. But industry experts are confused at the target audience, noting that while cork tips and box styles appeal to men, 100-millimeter brands have their biggest following among women.

What is clear is that with Camel Ninety Nines, RJR is trying to play catch-up to the Marlboro box.

Camel's current hard-pack share is estimated at 0.8%, compared with 12.4% for box versions of Philip Morris' Marlboro, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., an industry analyst at Wheat, First Securities. Overall, Marlboro held a 25.7% market share in 1990, compared with 4.4% for No. 6 Camel, he said.

Competitive sources dismissed the new moniker as a gimmick to attract attention to what amounts to new packaging.

RJR already markets three Camel line extensions in 100-millimeter sizes: Camel Filters, Camel Lights and Camel Ultra Lights. But only Camel Ultra Lights is now sold in a box.

Camel Ninety Nines will be sold in lights and filter versions only.

Competitive sources, noting that RJR's Camel is underrepresented in box styles, dismissed the new moniker as a gimmick to attract attention to what amounts to new packaging.

But rivals such as Philip Morris have tried similar strategies, industry executives said, although with less gimmickry.

One example is new Marlboro Medium, which has less tar than regular Marlboro but 1 milligram more tar than Marlboro Lights. Medium is cork-tipped, while Lights is not.

Advertising for Marlboro Medium breaks in June issues of consumer magazines via Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.

Camel Ninety Nines is being supported with a teaser outdoor campaign that broke earlier this month. Created by Camel agency Young & Rubicam, New York, advertising shows the Hard Pack, a group of cartoon camel characters playing musical instruments.

The drummer, dubbed "Eddie,"

AGENCIES SLOWER TO ADD BENEFITS FOR FAMILIES

To workers putting in steady overtime, concern for their home life may seem like the furthest thing from the corporate mind. Yet, personnel managers at marketing, media and advertising companies claim family-oriented benefits increasingly are the focus of plans.

"The average core benefits plan was put together when Daddy was working and Mommy was home with 2.2 kids. Today something like 4% of the work force meets that profile, so companies are trying to respond," says Freddy Gamble, personnel director for Conde Nast.

After examining the benefits of major companies in each field, agencies are furthest behind in family-oriented benefits.

Only 13.3% and 53.3% of shops polled offer job sharing and part-time tracks, respectively, while 66.7% of marketers offer both and 73.3% of media companies offer job sharing and 80% part-time tracks. Shops also fell well short of the other companies in offering childcare and elder-care referrals, paternity leave and flex time. □

Channel.

A one-hour video conference between the U.S. and the U.K. now costs about $1,330 on Sprint Meeting Channel; the highest rate is about $3,500 to Moscow.

"That's about what a plane ticket costs for one executive to get to the Soviet Union," says Mr. Miller. This way, "you can have several in one meeting."

Three years ago, it cost Unisys $228,000 to install video conferencing equipment in a Detroit meeting room. Now the company could purchase "better equipment, bigger picture screens, using half the band [transmission] width, for half the price," says John Champa, manager and chief engineer, Unisys Video Conferencing Network.

In 1990, Unisys held 962 video conferences with 12,200 conferees, using 5,664 video conference hours at 11 video conference sites.

"We realized a net savings of $2.7 million in our travel budget," Mr. Champa says.

But shaving the travel budget is "not how we justified the system," Mr. Champa says. Video conferencing has allowed executives to meet more regularly, in a face-to-face situation, he says.

Apple Computer Co. uses its video conferencing network both internally between designers, engineers and marketing executives and as a sales tool to confer directly with potential customers.

"In the course of a day, [Apple Chairman-CEO] John Sculley can drop into a session, along with VPs and product managers, and we find that's a very effective selling element," says Donna Collins, project manager of Apple's Video Conference Network in Cupertino, Calif.

Apple also has wired Macintosh computers into its video conferencing network, allowing full-color graphics and animation to be transmitted during a meeting.

Apple averages 80 video conference hours monthly and has installed seven video conference rooms—six in the U.S. and one in Paris—at a cost of $115,000 to $300,000 each.

The newest meeting room in Paris "has been booked constantly since we opened it in January," Ms. Collins says. "At first, I thought it was due to the Gulf War, but usage levels have not dropped since it ended." □ about 90 employees have computers; however, 30 are Donovan terminals in the media unit that will be replaced by PCs.

The most difficult part of the whole process is how to integrate the media department, says Gary Wenzel, senior VP-director of account planning.

The agency has decided against Donovan because of its need for dedicated terminals and inability to be tied into the network, says Mr. Mancuso.

"Donovan is the industry standard, and it's very good," he says. "But any time you want to manipulate data in a Donovan terminal, it has to be rekeyed into a Mac or IBM terminal and downloaded into a PC. If we achieve this network, an account executive with a Mac on his desk can get [a client's] media expenditures by tapping a key."

RP&A executives are leaning toward acquiring a DSI Datatrak package but are still analyzing whether it can perform all of the networking functions they require. If they pick up Datatrak, they will run it through a Hewlett-Packard minicomputer and will use Macintosh software for creative functions and Lotus programs for most accounting and back-room functions.

RP&A is spreading out expenses over two years and will pay cash for the system out of agency profits. "We're also going to lease what we can," Mr. Mancuso says. "Vendor financing is generally the better way to go. So we won't have to go to the bank." □

April still a cruel month

By Scott Donaton

The second quarter's magazine ad page volume is beginning the way the first quarter ended: on a sour note.

Publishers Information Bureau reported ad pages dipped to 15,037.2 in April, down 11.1% from last year. Pages for January through April totaled 50,647, down 10.1% from the same period in 1990.

Ad revenues through April hit $2.02 billion, a 5.1% decline. Seven of the top 10 ad categories (ranked by revenue) were down after four months, with nine categories also down in pages. The top 10 accounted for 74% of the total magazine revenues through April.

"There are no signs here yet of a broad-based recovery," said James Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development for Magazine Publishers of America. But he pointed to revenue gains in the automotive, direct response and computer categories as bright spots.

The number of magazines mired in the ad slump continued to grow in April. Only one of the top 10 ad page leaders was up in pages through April, compared with three through March: Entrepreneur continued to thrive, carrying 703.6 pages through April, up 3.9%.

While Bride's remained the ad page leader, its 1,251.5 ad pages were down 3.4% from the first four months last year. People, which managed to post a 1% gain in pages for the first quarter, saw pages dip 30.2% in April to 283. That loss dragged its year-to-date total to 946.1, a 10.9% decline.

In the newsweekly field, Time's 656.2 ad pages were down 18.1%, Newsweek's 529.7 pages were off 23.2% and U.S. News & World Report's 515.2 pages marked an 11.4% decline.

"The market is very competitive, and I don't think it's going to get better until 1992," said Peter Eldredge, U.S. publisher of News-week.

The women's service field continued to post fairly strong numbers through April, though several publishers in the category said they expect figures to drop off in May and June.

Four of the Seven Sisters registered ad page increases after four months and one, Ladies' Home Journal, was flat with 497.5 pages, down 0.1%.

Good Housekeeping led the pack with 526.9 pages, up 0.5%. Also up were Better Homes & Gardens (415 pages, up 9.5%); Redbook (361.2 pages, up 0.6%); and McCall's (333.9 pages, up 9.2%).

Family Circle carried 515.2 pages, a 4.2% dip. Woman's Day's 307.6 pages were off 31.7%.

Black-oriented magazines are also feeling the sting of the recession. Category leader Jet saw pages through April fall 1.3% to 334.5. Ebony, with 322.8 pages, was down 12.8%. Black Enterprise's 248 pages marked an 11.7% falloff. And Essence's pages were down 15.9% to 229.4.

The Sunday magazines published by The New York Times and Los Angeles Times posted ad page declines of 23.4% and 31.1%, respectively, with 967.3 and 242.3 pages. National Sunday magazines fared better: Parade's 252.4 ad pages through April were up 18.3%, and USA Weekend, with 213 pages, was down 3.2%. □

Media prefer shared liability

ATLANTA—A February survey of 700 media companies showed joint and several liability is the most pervasive form of contract, reports Szabo Associates, a media collection specialist.

"Though there is no industry-wide liablity clause, joint and several liability does appear to be the trend," said Szabo President Peter Szabo. Under joint and several liability, both agency and advertiser are liable for all payments.

The American Association of Advertising Agencies earlier this year recommended its members adopt sequential liability as the basis of their contracts with the media, making agencies liable for payments only after advertisers have paid the agencies. The Four A's in the past had endorsed sole agency liability.

With defaulted and delinquent media payments on the rise, the change in Four A's thinking has sparked disputes among agencies, advertisers and media. Few agencies have implemented sequential liability; even fewer media companies have accepted it.

Other forms of liability favored by the media include sole agency; sole advertiser; and the Broadcast Cable Financial Management Association's compromise clause, which holds agencies liable until they become insolvent, at which time liability shifts to advertisers.

Overall, 43% of Szabo's media company clients favored joint and several liability; 21% used sole agency liability; 15% used sole advertiser liability; 13% used the BCFM clause; and 7% used other means of liablity.

Joint and several liability contracts account for 39% of contracts at companies worth less than $10 million; 42% at $10 million to $50 million companies; and 53% at companies worth $50 million or more. □

Tough talk upfront

TV buyers ask for new price protection, guarantees

By Joe Mandese

As the 1991-92 network TV upfront market gets under way, extensive changes are being made in the way advertisers negotiate deals.

In sharp contrast to last year, TV buyers are seeking deals that expand on the options and guarantees the Big 3 networks normally give marketers, virtually demanding protection against the kind of fluctuations that occurred in the scatter marketplace this year.

The Big 3 earlier reinstated traditional ratings guarantees, after trying last year to reduce the conditions of upfront deals by switching to a modified ratings guarantee system that placed more risk on the buyer. But TV buyers are now out for even more.

General Motors Corp. is negotiating with the Big 3 networks to expand the carmaker's scatter market options to include more protection from fluctuating prices. GM has yet to secure them, but if they're granted, other top advertisers are expected to follow suit, agency sources say.

'Redbook' narrows in on new look

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—Hearst Corp. this fall will redesign and reposition Redbook in a bid to more clearly distinguish the magazine from the rest of the Seven Sisters women's service titles.

Hearst's goal is to solidify Redbook's position as a magazine for 25-to-44-year-old working mothers and establish it as a "bridge book" between its Cosmopolitan, aimed at young, single women, and Good Housekeeping, a service-oriented magazine for a middle-age audience.

To lead in the '90s, "you've really got to . . . narrow in on a niche and be able to define it and address it editorially."

The 88-year-old Redbook already has the youngest readers, smallest rate base and tightest editorial focus of the Sisters. But Hearst now wants to narrow the focus even further to strengthen its position in the marketplace.

"The big thing for [Redbook] or any magazine that's going to lead in the '90s is you've really got to . . . narrow in on a niche and be able to define it and address it editorially," said K. Robert Brink, exec VP-group publishing director at Hearst Magazines.

The median age of the Redbook reader, now at 39, is expected to drop one or two years with the repositioning. That compares to a median age of 29 for Cosmopolitan and 41 for Good Housekeeping.

"We're basically taking Redbook and building it into the real transition book," Mr. Brink said. "It's going to sit there

Safety themes aim at boomers

Auto ads follow Volvo, Chrysler lead

By Raymond Serafin and Cleveland Horton

Safe is sexy, growing numbers of automotive marketers are saying, and there's no indication that's a passing fancy.

With many car models relatively equal on design and technology, safety features stand out as a remaining product differentiator. And marketers that aren't now stressing safety themes in their advertising are at least considering incorporating elements into their campaigns.

The most recent to join the chorus was General Motors Corp., which on May 24 broke a corporate TV and print campaign from N W Ayer themed "Safety isn't one thing. It's everything."

For three decades, Volvo Cars of North America was the lone marketer that consistently challenged the axiom that "safety doesn't sell"—a general industry view that talking about things like crashes didn't draw customers.

The recent trend can be traced to baby-boomers' evolving sense of the importance of family security, said John Johnson, VP-account director on Cadillac at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. The GM division has run a comprehensive effort built around the theme

LAST MINUTE NEWS

Texas probes fat-free claims

DALLAS—The Texas attorney general's office is probing Kraft General Foods over claims for its fat-free mayonnaise, Assistant Attorney General Stephen Gardner said. Kraft confirmed it's discussed fat-free products with Mr. Gardner and others, but said it was unaware of a formal investigation by the state. Separately, Mr. Gardner said he's confident of reaching a settlement with General Motors over allegedly deceptive advertising related to the Malcolm Baldrige quality award. But by late Friday, a formal agreement hadn't been reached. GM said a meeting with Mr. Gardner provided a "positive and constructive exchange of views" and that more meetings were possible.

Playboy, Spectradyne set hotel title

NEW YORK—Playboy Enterprises and Los Angeles-based Spectradyne will jointly launch a monthly entertainment magazine/listings guide tied to Spectravision, Spectradyne's hotel room pay-per-view TV service. The as yet unnamed title, bowing with a September issue, will be distributed in the 750,000 hotel rooms where Spectravision is available and will target frequent travelers. Playboy is also developing, with Italian publisher Rizzoli, a U.S. edition of the young men's magazine Max for a spring 1992 launch.

An Advertising Age roundup

Some world markets are seeing advertising growth even though spending in major countries is being hit by tough economic times, according to Advertising Age's survey of agencies, advertisers and industry associations internationally.

While the U.K., Australia, Canada and South Africa are hoping for 1991 spending to be flat at best, markets such as Spain and Thailand continue to grow. Many healthy markets, however, have been hurt recently by the sluggish world economy and the Persian Gulf War.

"On an overall basis, [1991 worldwide ad spending growth will be] 2% to 3% in constant terms because of the heavy weight of the U.S., U.K. and Australia," said Robert Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting, McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York. "If your country has 3% real growth, it's a good year."

Ad Age's figures are in real terms (not adjusted for inflation) and based in local currency.

Europe

In the U.K., "it's been an appalling year," said Steve Winram, media research and information director at Zenith Media Worldwide, London, a Saatchi & Saatchi Co. subsidiary.

"Factors that have really caused the recession—high interest rates, falling consumer expenditures and falling corporate profitability—have started to ease off now," he said. "It's still pretty miserable out there, but we think the corner has been turned."

Mr. Winram expects a recovery in the second half.

Ad spending in the U.K. fell 6% in real terms in 1990, the U.K. Advertising Association said. For this year, Mr. Winram said Zenith predicts real ad spending will fall 2.5%.

As the two Germanys became one last year, real ad spending growth in what was West Germany hit an estimated 3%, said Volker Nickel, spokesman for ZAW, an advertiser-agency-media organization. In addition, about $300 million was spent in eastern Germany.

This year, real growth of 1.5% for the entire Germany is expected.

"Most of the growth of the '91 ad spend will come from East Germany," Mr. Nickel said.

Bernd Michael, chairman and partner of Grey Duesseldorf, said an expected tax increase this summer could slow consumer spending. He added, however, that in eastern Germany ad spending could soar to $640 million.

French ad spending grew 5.6% in real terms in 1990, and this year is likely to be a repeat performance.

With most predictions of 5% to 7% growth, Alain Grange-Caba, president of the Union of Advertisers, said: "That's still twice as high as the French GNP and has better promise of exceeding expectations."

Meanwhile, ad growth in southern Europe remains hot.

The prediction for Spain is Europe's sunniest, with 12% to 15% real ad growth expected. Last year, spending jumped 18%.

The slowdown reflects a normalization of ad spending and the impact of the Gulf war, said Maximo Romero, general director, Association of Spanish Advertisers.

Italy is looking to match 1990 spending growth of 5%.

"Fears related to the Gulf war stifled investments at the beginning of the year, while the economic situation—still stagnant in certain sectors—continues to restrain ad spending to a certain extent," said Felice Lioy, director of the Italian association of advertisers.

Asia/Pacific

Australia's troubles will continue through this year, but there's hope for the future.

In 1990, Australian ad spending dropped in real terms by 1.9%, reported the Advertising Federation of Australia.

"It will be even more dismal in 1991—possibly negative growth up to 5%," said Alex Hamill, ceo of Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s George Patterson Pty., Sydney.

Twenty accredited ad agencies folded in the 12 months ended March 31, compared with an average of two or three small shops, he said. But there was some good news; the top agencies showed an average 10% increase in billings in the same period.

Meanwhile, much of Asia continues to grow.

In Thailand, a military coup in February won't slow ad spending from growing at least 8.9% this year.

"Most firms were anticipating cuts from [consumer goods] clients. . . . but since controls were lifted, budgets have in fact been increased," an industry analyst said.

Though this year's projected growth seems impressive, it follows a booming 1990 in which spending grew 24.5%.

"Some companies with many multinational clients may be affected by the downturn [around the world] but then perhaps only temporarily," said Don Scott, creative director at Far East Advertising, Bangkok.

Hong Kong is cautiously optimistic, hoping the launch of an Asian satellite TV service, plus a new commercial radio station and positive developments in China, will boost ad spending as much as 15%, said Ben Barnes, chairman of the local ad agencies association and managing director of Grey Advertising.

"In Hong Kong, there is a slowdown, not a recession," said Cheong Shin Keong, controller of marketing and sales at TVB, the territory's dominant TV station.

Taiwan is hoping for a 3.5% real increase in 1991 ad spending, after 1990 spending fell 0.7%.

Growth of 4.2% is expected this year in Japan, where ad spending grew 6.9% in 1990.

"The advertising boom of the late '80s is over," said Don Dillon, exec VP at McCann-Erickson Hakuhodo, Tokyo.

Americas, South Africa

Brazil saw ad spending drop 5.5% in real terms in 1990, according to local trade magazine Meio & Mensagem.

The drop began in March 1990 when the government instituted a drastic anti-inflation program. The result is now being called the country's worst recession since World War II, reducing the middle class' purchasing power by an estimated one-third. Spending is likely to tumble to $2.2 billion, a 30% decline from 1990, agency executives say.

McCann's Mr. Coen, however, said he believes Latin American markets have bottomed out.

"I think the South American countries are starting to show some improvement, if you look at it in constant terms," he said.

In Canada, where the recession is well entrenched, ad spending is expected to pick up in the second half to produce a flat year.

In the first half, ad spending is expected to fall 1%, thanks to the Gulf war coverage that preempted many TV spots and the implementation of a new 7% goods and services tax.

"I expect that we should be out of the recession starting as early as this summer," said John Foss, president-ceo of the Association of Canadian Advertisers. "But we won't see the kind of return we saw after the recession in the early 1980s."

In 1990, Canadian ad spending grew only 0.6%.

South Africa welcomed flat spending in 1990. The release of Nelson Mandela in February 1990 brightened the troubled economy during the early part of the year. By fall, however, violence and strikes dampened consumer spending. The troubles and the attitude continue, with spending expected to drop about 8.1% this year. □

THE SECRETS OF NEW PRODUCT SUCCESS. A FREE SAMPLE.

1. Great ideas aren't the answer.

Just as a good idea may stop you from going on to discover a great one, a great idea may stop you from going on to discover the right one. After you get a great idea, continue to look for the right idea.

2. Exact appropriateness.

Every product has a small group of words and pictures that are exactly appropriate to it. When the time is taken to discover them and weave them together expertly, recall goes way up and top-of-mind awareness in the category is preempted.

3. News, with style.

The excitement of a concept board or test commercial must come from the clear communication of news about the product. Style comes from clarity and precision, not cleverness that subordinates the news. Even when image is all important, it takes the form of news, not so much inherent in the product, but invented.

4. Efficiency in communication.

Maximum efficiency in mass communication is one word—a name that says everything. Second is a slogan that contains the name. After that, people have to remember two or more things to know your message. Efficiency goes down, and media expenditures lose impact.

5. The disappearing concept board.

Most people test concept boards and commercials. The right concept board or commercial tests the product—by allowing the consumer to see right through it to the product shown in its best light.

We're top, award-winning creative people who've specialized in new products for over 15 years. So we've discovered a lot of unique secrets that have helped bring success to many leading companies.

Minn. group shows toll of ad taxes

By Bob Geiger

MINNEAPOLIS—In an effort to blunt future ad tax legislation, a cartel of Minnesota marketing groups on June 24 will unveil a yearlong study of the effect of ad taxes on the state's economy.

"The days of rhetoric are over with legislators. . . . You have to show them the direct results of a sales tax" on advertising, said Dean Buresh, president of Kamstra Communications, St. Paul, and chairman of the Communications Industry Coalition, which funded the study and is sponsoring a symposium on that day.

Encompassing 12 ad tax scenarios ranging from a collateral service tax to taxing of all advertising activity, the "Minnesota Model" study projects that all businesses statewide would lose as much as $288.7 million in revenues and 5,961 jobs. Of that, $158.9 million in revenues—55%—and 1,789 jobs, or 30%, would come from communications industries.

The study projects that an effort similar to Florida's short-lived 1987 media ad tax would cost Minnesota businesses $211.7 million in annual revenues and 4,346 jobs.

"Minnesota Model" surveys were sent to 940 member companies of Communications Industry Coalition organizations in 1990. Revenue figures from the 205 respondents were cross-checked with the Minnesota Department of Revenue, federal government and industry data, Mr. Buresh said.

The coalition is in a continuing battle with the state Department of Revenue, which is proposing guidelines that expand the state's 6% sales tax to collateral services. The study projects that would cut $2.8 million and 32 jobs from Minnesota's communications industries.

Assuming a 5% decrease in collateral demand because of a tax, the study estimates those losses would rise to $24.3 million and 278 communication industry jobs.

Three Minnesota bills introduced this year to tax advertising services failed to get a hearing before state lawmakers adjourned May 20.

Coalition members include the Advertising Federation of Minnesota, Twin Cities Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, Minnesota Newspaper Association, Minnesota Broadcasters Association, Printing Industry of Minnesota and the state chapter of the Public Relations Society of America. □

Revenues near $2 billion, but stormy times ahead

Researchers grapple with their changing role

By Scott Hume

Mix an economic slowdown into a churning cauldron of change and what comes out is the research industry in the 1990s.

The current economy has exacerbated and accelerated changes in marketing and media research more than it has created new troubles, executives at many top companies say.

Among the 71 companies responding to Advertising Age's research industry survey, total 1990 gross U.S. research revenues increased 3.2% to $1.96 billion. In comparison, the companies responding to last year's survey saw U.S. research revenues rise only 5.6% from 1988 to 1989.

But the stronger 1990 results don't ease research company executives' concerns about fundamental changes in the competitive environment and their role in the marketing process.

The wave of mergers in the 1980s that resulted in the consolidation of marketing departments at top package-goods companies has had an immediate impact on the competitive environment.

"When a Philip Morris absorbs a General Foods and then a Kraft, or when an R.J. Reynolds acquires a Nabisco, there's only a certain number of service companies and a certain amount of service those [conglomerates] are going to use," says David Learner, president of MRCA Information Services.

"One of the efficiencies of combining companies is the elimination of duplicate services, and the most damage that has been done to marketing research has been done [from mergers]," he says.

That, more than the economy, has spurred consolidations and alliances among research companies as they battle for business among a smaller client universe.

It also intensified price competition among researchers, with earnings for some top companies sliding even as revenues grew.

"Research has been moving into a third phase that will be challenging, certainly, but also provide opportunities," says John Costello, president of Nielsen Marketing Research USA.

> "The most damage that has been done has been done from mergers."

"The first phase was collecting information. The second was turning that information into insights. This third phase will be converting those insights into results."

Because of the recession, that third phase has been hastened along, Mr. Costello says. It has focused client attention on productivity and cost of sales more than pure growth.

The down economy also has meant cutbacks in client companies' marketing and research budgets and staffs, and slowed new-product development. Risk taking is out; short-term thinking is in.

That, in turn, has hurt advertising agencies and media companies. And they've tipped over the next domino: companies seeking to sell research to those same operations.

"The recession has tweaked up

IRI bounces back via scanner data

By Kenneth Wylie

What's been bad for the research industry has been good for Information Resources Inc., says Chairman-CEO Gian Fulgoni.

He says the industrywide shift from qualitative to quantitative, scanner-based data analysis has helped IRI post the top growth among the 10 largest research companies in Advertising Age's 1990 revenue ranking.

"IRI is built on this scanner technology. We're on the right side of this equation with only one competitor in scanner-based information technology, Nielsen," Mr. Fulgoni says.

IRI's 1990 U.S. research revenues climbed 19.8% to $136.3 million, making it No. 4 in Ad Age's ranking. The top 10 companies' combined U.S. research revenues rose only 7.6% in 1990. IRI reports first quarter 1991 revenues jumped 25.4% from first quarter 1990 to $48 million.

Founded in 1979 and taken public in 1983, IRI weathered several years of financial stress, but now is operating its two divisions in the black.

Its Information Services Group supplies package-goods companies with marketing data bases that range from broad strategies to shelf position and includes the fast-growing InfoScan supermarket purchase information system. Group revenues rose 16% to $115.3 million in 1990.

Its Software Products Group, which produces business and governmental decision-making models and systems, saw revenues hit $51.4 million, up a substantial 39% above 1989 revenues.

"As information becomes more and more in demand, organizations must have the software that makes it accessible," says Mr. Fulgoni. "What's happening is software is becoming the strategic competitive element."

IRI is hoping to sell its software to an ever-broader customer base.

"Health and beauty aids are an important new area for us," says Senior VP Robert Bregenzer. "We've been in supermarkets. In January 1991 we went into drugstores [using the newly acquired SAMI system]. Starting in July 1991 we'll be in mass merchandisers. We're going head-to-head with Nielsen."

In a mix of sales and licensing agreements at the end of 1990, IRI acquired from Arbitron Co. contracts and usage rights to its SAMI warehouse-withdrawal system, drugstore-withdrawal information, plus TV and radio ratings.

the competitive environment," says Verne Churchill, chairman-ceo of Market Facts. "There are so many more people claiming to do market research because a lot of them are people who had responsible positions [at client companies] who have been let go.

"A lot of them have very low overhead or are willing to compromise their margins. The big companies have had to respond. . . . Last year our revenues were up slightly, but our earnings were off."

With fewer buyers and lower budgets, the business of selling research has become more difficult.

"It's tougher to sell, but the reality that shines through is companies are choosing one research company or the other instead of buying it all as they did in the old days," says Bernadette Cognac, VP-syndicated studies for Simmons Market Research Bureau.

"We're finding that client service and the quality of the data have taken on new meaning and importance for our clients, and that's not a bad thing," she says. "They're still buying, but they're double-checking what they're getting. . . . There may be fewer early renewals on syndicated research. But they're buying."

Simmons recently offered a new syndicated study on the children's market that Ms. Cognac says has been well-received. "We knew the market for this study was there. But we also know we're at the mercy of the economy."

New research development may suffer if the recession continues or deepens, says Alice Sylvester, senior VP at J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

"It's no secret that agencies have been downsizing, and there are fewer developmental [research] dollars available," she says. "The big exploration heyday of the '80s is over. The exploration process for agencies has been derailed to a great extent.

"Information Resources is marketing a [$50,000] study on 'How Advertising Works' that I think may be the last big project of that kind offered for a while."

IRI's James Andress, president-ceo, disagrees.

"Agencies don't account for a large percentage of our business," he says, so their downsizing doesn't severely hurt.

Clients such as Procter & Gamble Co. and Unilever are as committed to research as ever, he contends, and the company doesn't intend to scale back plans to expand or develop its research projects.

For media researchers, however, the marketplace may have changed more dramatically and more permanently.

"Even before this recession the industry we serve was undergoing changes, and that had a greater impact on us than the recession," says Ken Wollenberg, exec VP-sales and marketing at Arbitron Co. "We're reacting to the possibility that the broadcast business may never again be the same as it was a few years ago.

"Our customers have more of an eye on the bottom line. The broadcast companies are being run by financial people, and many of the companies are carrying a heavy debt load.

"So they ask, 'What's the payback of research?' This can be a tough question to answer any time, and then in economic hard times clients further question spending on research," he says.

While many researchers may agree with Mr. Wollenberg when he says, "It won't ever be like the '80s again," they won't say the outlook is hopeless.

"I don't see a diminution of our business as a result [of the recession], but I do see our requirements change as our clients change," MRCA's Mr. Learner says. "Clients expect more from us than they may have before when their own staffs were larger. And that's a big plus for us." □ growth rate is M/A/R/C, which ranked No. 6 with 1990 U.S. research revenues of $56.9 million, up 18.8% from 1989. The company attributes the surge to its new Macro Products simulated test-marketing product, new clients and existing clients' data-base development activities.

Among the 71 research companies responding to Ad Age's survey, Myers Marketing & Research, Parsippany, N.J., posted the greatest growth. Its 1990 U.S. revenues shot up 423% to more than $1.9 million as a result of the successful launches of two new services, Worldwide Marketing Leadership Panel and Market Media Influence, says President Jack Myers. □

Gentle rain turns to torrent

Marketers claim now there's still too much data

By Joseph M. Winski

Ah, for the good old days.

The Nielsen binders would come in. Research would write up reports and send them to marketing. Two months later, the cycle would begin again.

In market research, those days are over for good. Technology can be thanked—or blamed: Scanners and computers have changed the data flow from a gentle rain every other month to a vast river of monthly and even weekly data, often down to store level.

Market research executives at consumer products companies say they're drowning in it all.

"There are just too many numbers and too many things that you can potentially do with them," says Mario Abate, market research director for Warner-Lambert Co.'s American Chicle Group.

The sheer volume of data "has been a nightmare for a lot of client market research directors," says Robert Bailey, director of marketing services at BBDO, Chicago, which does research for clients such as Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co.

"With regard to Wrigley," Mr. Bailey says, "when scanning came along, the amount of data that we were trying to work with . . . multiplied by a factor of five."

The hottest permutation of scanner data, so-called single-source data on the buying behavior of individual households, has added substantially to the overload.

In a late 1989 Journal of Advertising Research survey, 71% of company market-research directors questioned agreed that "single-source research has caused an information explosion which is hard to control."

One problem with all the data is that it costs more, simply because there is so much more to buy. The more perplexing issues, though, concern how to handle and interpret the numbers.

Corporate downsizing in the late 1980s has meant companies often have smaller market-research departments. At the same time more people are clamoring for usable data from the research department.

> "The complexity is getting greater and greater."

Today, salesmen have come to appreciate the value of a pitch buttressed by scanner research.

"We really are starting to put together some very specific account presentations based on hard data that the salesman can use to go in and make pitches with," Mr. Abate says.

Thus the quandary: Fewer research people are handling more numbers than ever and are being pressed for answers from more users than ever.

That's leading to a fundamental shift in how research data are handled at some companies.

For example, Colgate-Palmolive Co. has switched to "distributed data processing," a move to decentralize data management and put research in the hands of more staff members, says Jim Figura, VP-consumer research and insights.

Instead of doing the interpreting, research people increasingly are being called upon to show marketing staffers and salespeople how to do it themselves.

That, in turn, means a new type of person in the research department: Someone who understands how to use computers to gather and analyze data but also knows how to help others learn to do so.

Kraft USA has embraced this approach by installing 100 computer workstations in its marketing, sales, promotion and marketing information departments and training 300 people in those departments to use them, says Larry Stanek, VP-marketing information director at parent Kraft General Foods.

The cost, volume and complexity of the data generated by new technologies also are reshaping the relationship between companies and their research suppliers.

Increasingly, companies are relying on just one supplier for numbers they previously may have bought from several vendors. BBDO's Mr. Bailey predicts that by the mid-1990s, "almost all" companies will use just one primary vendor for sales and market-share data.

Already, client-research company partnerships are becoming popular. Thirteen percent of those executives responding to Advertising Age's 1991 survey of research companies say they are involved in some form of partnership agreement.

Marketers also are demanding research providers work far more closely with them. American Chicle, for example, has set up on-site office hours for analysts from its research suppliers, Mr. Abate says. These analysts come in at least once a week to interpret data and write reports as if they were part of American Chicle's own staff.

Providers of scanner data insist existing and planned software will make using data easier and wean client companies off their dependence on suppliers for interpretation.

Information Resources Inc. Chairman-CEO Gian Fulgoni contends "data overload" as a lament of research users peaked in 1987.

In fact, 38.2% of the market research companies surveyed say their clients are "very able" to use the volume of data available, and another 51.5% say they're "somewhat able." Only 10.3% say clients are "not very able" to use the data.

Mr. Abate, among others, has his doubts clients are so adept at data manipulation.

"The complexity of these analyses is getting greater and greater even as we're working with them," he says. "I think there are still going to be lots of things that we'll have to go to the suppliers for."

Mr. Figura agrees the age of do-it-yourself analysis for client companies is far off.

"Most people still haven't figured out how to grapple with all this stuff," he says.

"There's still a big gap between what's being sold . . . and what actually is delivered when you are trying to make decisions." □

Picking up the slack

As marketers cut, researchers are stepping in

By Julie Steenhuysen

Research companies' client-service departments are working longer these days —not always with extra pay for the effort.

A soft economy and downsizing in corporate research departments have led marketers increasingly to lean on their research partners for guidance and analysis.

AHF targets companies that have cut back in-house research.

Most research companies have seen clients' research departments undergo cuts: 84.1% of research companies surveyed by Advertising Age report their clients have trimmed in-house research staffs.

"When clients cut back in their own staff, they still have the need to do research. And what they do is rely more on companies like us to do their own work for them," says William "Jay" Wilson, president-ceo of research company Starch INRA Hooper.

Such downsizing has resulted in a change in clients' expectations, says Rod Cober, senior VP-marketing and client services at Burke Marketing Research.

Where once clients would design a research project, now they're focusing on setting the objectives for the project and leaving the design, implementation and analysis to the research company, Mr. Cober says.

Client-service departments in particular have felt the change. As many as 70% of the companies surveyed say they have increased their client-service functions as a direct result of cuts in clients' research departments.

The majority of survey respondents say they charge clients for these extra services, reasoning that good client services ought to be compensated.

Some companies, however—more than 20% of those surveyed —are absorbing the added service demands.

Arbitron Co., which serves the recession-battered media industry, has seen employees' workloads increase in tandem with client cuts.

"My staff has offered to bolster media clients' efforts when we can," says Henry Laura, VP-sales advertiser/agency services.

AHF Marketing Research is another company that doesn't charge for additional client-service demands. Instead, it's using client service to gain a marketing advantage.

AHF has been advertising its services as a way for downsized companies to make up for deficiencies in their own research departments. Calvin Greenbaum Creative Services, Sea Cliff, N.Y., created the campaign.

Nielsen Marketing Research USA President John Costello says the cutbacks have provided an opportunity for Nielsen.

"The tight economy has come at the same time as a real growth in information needs in some areas. . . . That's provided us a chance to step in and work with the existing [in-house] staff and provide a supplement to their research," Mr. Costello says.

Nielsen increasingly is sending employees on-site to work with clients on a day-to-day basis in such areas as promotion evaluation and analysis support and category management, Mr. Costello says. These employees remain on Nielsen's payroll, and fees for the services provided are charged to clients.

Although some research company executives see client cutbacks as a way to build new revenue sources, most generally say the long-term impact of client downsizing is negative.

"It brings into question among corporate management the need for research," Mr. Wilson says. "They say, 'If we can downsize, maybe we don't need it.' That has hurt the businesses' image among top corporations."

But Frank Walker, president of Walker Research, remains sanguine.

"In the long run, perhaps, putting the industry through the problems will make it healthier," he says. □

Patrons of the arts

Sports-shy sponsors applaud theater, exhibits

By Scott Hume and Marcy Magiera

The producers toasted the Broadway opening of "City of Angels" with champagne, but when the show opens June 12 in Los Angeles, glasses likely will be filled with Johnnie Walker Black.

That's because Schieffelin & Somerset Co.'s scotch is the sole corporate sponsor of the musical's 43-city tour, following a marketing path blazed last year when "A Chorus Line" began its national tour with Visa International as its sole sponsor.

Stephen Disson, a principal with D&F Group, Washington, which arranged both deals, foresees greater corporate involvement in the performing and fine arts in the next decade. Some of that money will come from sports sponsorships, he said, and some will be new investments from companies looking to enter the sponsorship arena.

Companies spent $150 million on the arts in 1990, or 6% of the $2.5 billion spent on all corporate sponsorships, reported industry newsletter Special Events Report. Sports sponsorships accounted for 68%, or $1.7 billion.

This year, $2.9 billion will be spent on corporate sponsorships, the newsletter reported. Sports' take is projected to hit $1.9 billion, but its share may drop as more sponsorship dollars are funneled to cause marketing, festivals, popular music and the arts (projected to maintain about a 6% share with $176 million).

"The economics of sponsoring the national tour of a Broadway show are very appealing," Mr. Disson said. "You get to be the one and only sponsor; it's not diluted as it so often is with sports. And the cost for sponsoring a tour over many months is less than [for] one nationally televised sporting event on one weekend."

"Broadway doesn't know how to market itself, let alone work with corporate sponsors. But it's learning. . . ."

Adam Sanderson
Director of marketing, Affiliate Artists

Liquor and tobacco companies are looking for event marketing opportunities outside sports, where their presence has been criticized and advertising opportunities are limited.

Johnnie Walker Black's sponsorship of "City of Angels" will be mentioned in all TV and radio spots, media typically off-limits to the product. Serino Coyne, New York, handles the show.

The real growth in corporate involvement will come in performing and fine arts programs that tour several markets, Mr. Disson said. That lets sponsors arrange local-market programs for entertaining customers, distributors or staff.

Sara Lee Corp.'s L'eggs Products division last week signed a two-year deal to be the first—and only—corporate sponsor of the Ice Capades' national tour, to build awareness for its Sheer Energy pantyhose brand and Little L'eggs tights for children.

"We promised them there wouldn't be sponsorship clutter," said Thomas Abramson, VP-marketing and advertising for International Broadcasting Corp.'s Ice Capades/Harlem Globetrotters division. The Ice Capades also will customize its logo to include the Sheer Energy name and L'eggs egg. The Kempton Group, Cincinnati, negotiated the deal.

L'eggs has been involved in sports sponsorships since the 1970s and sponsored a series of concerts by the Judds, the country-western singing duo.

The fine and performing arts are latecomers to the sponsorship arena and will need more time to catch up to sporting events' slickness, execs say.

"Broadway doesn't know how to market itself, let alone work with corporate sponsors," said Adam Sanderson, director of marketing for Affiliate Artists, New York. "But it's learning, and the major corporations that have been involved with arts sponsorships have set a good example. Other companies will follow."

The fine arts have even more learning to do.

"The arts used to be protective about not commercializing themselves, but with the drop in [government] funding, the arts now need to turn to corporate sponsors," said Linda Morganstern, event marketing director at Leo Burnett Co., Chicago. "It's nice to get philanthropic grants, but [the arts] are going to have to open their minds to what sponsors may want from them. It's a new frontier for them."

The Smithsonian Institution has signed Xerox Corp. as sole sponsor of "Seeds of Change," an exhibit celebrating the quincentenary of Columbus' voyage that will visit eight cities during 18 months, beginning in October.

Xerox sees the sponsorship as "a reinforcement of the brand's equity," said Michael Kirby, director of advertising and sales. The company may try to take the exhibit overseas once its run at the Smithsonian is over.

But as with all marketing categories, arts sponsorships have their potential pitfalls. Hitachi America is in litigation over the collapse of a planned three-city International Opera Festival tour, in which it had a nearly $1 million sponsorship stake. But despite that experience, the company is looking at other cultural events.

"It's made us more careful about what kind of event we'd get involved with, but in no way have we given up on the arts or entertainment," said Harry McGrath, Hitachi deputy general manager. "With our budget, it's difficult to get into sports sponsorships without getting lost in the noise or settling for minor events. We're a worldwide company. We don't want to be involved unless we can in a major way." □

And now a few dollars from our sponsor

Sports' share of total sponsorship dollars is large but declining, accounting for 64% of the $2.94 billion expected to be spent in 1991, down from 72% in 1988. Sponsorship of the arts has remained steady at 6% during that period, but industry executives say that share may begin to grow. Here's a breakout of 1991 spending:

Operation Welcome Home Parade, a June 10 parade down Broadway in New York, is being promoted by this official poster. A stylized picture of a skyscraper festooned by yellow ribbons instead of ticker tape, the poster was designed by artist Milton Glaser and printed by D&L Offset, pro bono, on the only 8-color press remaining in the city. The mile-long parade is expected to attract 2 million people.

Snyder seen as next AAF president

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Wally Snyder, exec VP of the American Advertising Federation, is the likely choice of the AAF's board to succeed Howard Bell as president of the 52,000-member trade group, industry sources said. The board was scheduled to vote today at the AAF national conference here (see story on Page 4) on who will take over at yearend when Mr. Bell retires. Mr. Snyder came to the AAF in 1985 from the Federal Trade Commission, where he was associate director of advertising practices.

Goldstein Chilko suit settled

CINCINNATI—A wrongful-death suit filed against Omnicom Group and its DDB Needham Worldwide unit by the widow of Robert V. Goldstein, former Procter & Gamble VP-advertising, has been settled out of court. The case had been slated for trial June 17. Mr. Goldstein and four others were killed during an August 1987 rafting trip on Canada's Chilko River organized by executives in DDB Needham's Chicago office. Terms of the settlement weren't disclosed. Nancy Goldstein had sought $20 million in damages.

Dentsu board gets more int'l

TOKYO—Dentsu has named four new executive directors to its board, increasing the board's international focus. New board member Nobuo Momose, 57, director of account service division 7, has built a reputation as a talented client-service director especially with foreign clients such as Nestle and Philip Morris. Other new executive directors on the board are Gunshiro Nemoto, 54, director of account

AmEx shops around

New marketing answers sought beyond O&M

By Jon Lafayette and Gary Levin

NEW YORK—American Express Co. is seeking new marketing solutions for its troubled credit card division and is looking beyond its primary ad agency, Ogilvy & Mather, for help.

Although AmEx is seeking new work from O&M, the company has also turned to Wunderman Worldwide and Chiat/Day/Mojo, two agencies already on its roster, for new ideas.

AmEx is taking a broad look at the brand image of all its credit cards but is also looking to replace O&M's "Membership has it privileges" umbrella marketing theme, sources said.

"They outlined an opportunity to current agencies and asked for their thinking," said an executive close to the company.

Wunderman, a unit of Young & Rubicam, handles direct marketing and media advertising for AmEx's corporate card and Optima card while Chiat handles both for the Gold card.

O&M has handled advertising and direct marketing for the $60 million green card account since 1962, and the agency has come under pressure since several key staffers who worked on the account left the agency.

Last month in London, Wunderman was named to handle a new campaign to stimulate card use, beating out several agencies, including O&M, which retained the green card account.

AmEx denied a shift in strategy or agency lineup is imminent.

"We always talk to [our agencies] about strategy, and

The Eating Right brand looks like it's going to be Kraft General Foods' healthy choice.

Determined to find a brand name to showcase a multicategory line of "healthy" foods, the nation's leading food marketer is readying a product line under the Eating Right banner that would encompass dry grocery, dairy and frozen foods.

Such a line would be the first direct competition for ConAgra's Healthy Choice, which is rapidly expanding its own supermarket presence beyond the freezer case.

An Eating Right line would replace Kraft Alternatives, a similar group of low-cholesterol, low-fat "foods for healthier eating" that Kraft General Foods has been testing in two markets since February.

Tennis star Chris Evert stars in new spots for the Eating Right line from Kraft General Foods.

Subsidiary All American Gourmet Co. rolled out Eating Right frozen entrees this spring after a short test.

Kraft General Foods confirmed it's considering putting the Eating Right name on the six-category Alternatives line, which includes salad dressing, mayonnaise, chunk cheese, processed cheese slices, table spread and cream cheese. But the company declined to comment on specific marketing plans for the line.

However, Chris Evert, spokeswoman for the new Eating Right frozen entrees, has already filmed two TV commercials for an Eating Right frozen dessert and Eating Right frozen pizza, said the tennis star's representatives at IMG.

Also, supermarket buyers around the country have been advised by Kraft General Foods representatives that the company is going to present to

In the South, it's become almost commonplace to dub any promising new ad agency "the next McDonald & Little"—a tribute to a shop that put Atlanta advertising on the map in the 1970s.

McDonald & Little went out of business in 1985, four years after being acquired by Ted Bates Worldwide. One day in 1989, Michael G. McDonald, co-founder of the original agency, retired and restless, had an idea:

"I thought, 'Gee, I know something about being the next McDonald & Little,' " he recalls.

His new agency, McDonald Group, started with a flourish, hurtling from letterhead to $10 million in billings even before officially opening its doors in January 1990.

Things haven't gone quite so well since. Advertising Age, with Mr. McDonald's cooperation, has monitored his return to the advertising business and reports on a celebrated adman's effort to recapture the magic.

Summer 1991: Retired since 1986 and just 57 years old, Mr. McDonald is bored. Nothing in his life has matched the fun and challenge of building McDonald & Little, which at its peak billed more than $60 million and was the largest independent agency in the South.

McDonald & Little, he remembers with pride, turned out some of the South's most memorable advertising. It had big-name cli-

The Triple Crown

Last month, U.S.News won three of the most prestigious awards in journalism.

1. Overseas Press Club Award

The Overseas Press Club Award for the Best General Magazine Article on Foreign Affairs for "The Most Dangerous Man in the World," a grave warning about the menace of Saddam Hussein – published ten weeks before Saddam invaded Kuwait. It meticulously outlined the size and scope of the arsenal being accumulated in Iraq.

Commenting on this cover story, the Washington Post said, "U.S.News can lay claim to some remarkable prescience.... Such editorial decisions are not flukes, but evidence of thinking ahead of the curve."

2. National Magazine Award

The National Magazine Award for Feature Writing for "Vietnam Story," a powerful reconstruction of the first major battle of that war and a tough analysis of its lessons and consequences -- written by Joseph Galloway, the only journalist present at that engagement 25 years ago.

Galloway also covered the war in the Persian Gulf for U.S.News, where his reporting was part of the extensive war coverage that Forbes magazine called "a journalistic coup.... Just as CNN left the networks running to catch up in TV coverage, U.S.News pulled off a similar feat over its newsweekly rivals."

3. Sigma Delta Chi Award

The Sigma Delta Chi Award for Magazine Reporting for "Death at Sea," an expose by Peter Cary of the Navy's investigation into the explosion aboard the U.S.S. Iowa. Within two months, the Navy reopened the case.

It's one example why government and business leaders in Washington, in a recent survey by Washingtonian magazine, rated U.S. News more accurate than any other newsmagazine. And why Forbes calls U.S.News "the most useful, readable newsweekly."

These three awards, plus the White House Correspondents' Association's Award for Presidential Coverage and sixteen other major awards received for 1990, confirm our commitment to deliver the best newsmagazine journalism in America.

Weak season ahead

Agencies expect lackluster results for new shows

By Joe Mandese

Only five of the 25 new series scheduled by the Big 3 networks for the 1991-92 TV season are predicted to have winning audience shares, according to an informal survey of agency executives by Advertising Age.

Only one of the new series, ABC's "Home Improvement," is expected to be a "hit" by those polled.

Twelve of the new series are projected to have dubious fates, each generating estimated audience levels of 15 share points or less.

A share point is equal to 1% of TV households watching TV during a given time period. A show is usually deemed successful if it captures at least a 20 share.

Agency executives deemed the balance of the new series to be "borderline."

In addition to "Home Improvement," shows expected to win their time periods with more than a 20 share include ABC's "Step by Step", CBS' "The Carol Burnett Show" and NBC's "The Torkelsons" and "Nurses."

The estimates are based on the strength of a new series' pilot episodes and are generally more conservative than a network's own estimates.

Agency executives base their estimates on the audience flow of shows leading into and out of the new shows and weigh the appeal of the new programs against the strengths of competing shows scheduled on the other networks.

Overall, agencies predicted the Big 3 will lose about 2 share points during the fourth quarter of 1991, compared with the same period last year. The losses will come at the expense of NBC, while ABC and CBS are expected to remain flat in their overall audience delivery.

Based on the new estimates, agency executives said a new ranking of the top 20 shows will emerge with the new season, both in terms of household and demographic delivery.

According to estimates from New York-based Bozell, ABC's "Family Matters," CBS' "Sunday Night Movie," and NBC's "The Goiden Girls" and "Unsolved Mysteries" will drop out of the top 20, along with NBC's canceled "Matlock."

At the same time, ABC's "The Wonder Years" and "Home Improvement," and NBC's "In the Heat of the Night," "Wings" and "L.A. Law" will enter the top 20, Bozell said.

While "Home Improvement" is the only new series to join the top 20 ranking on a household basis, several new series will emerge as demographic leaders, Bozell said.

"Home Improvement" will deliver top 20 shares in all the major demos, while ABC's "Step by Step" will rank highly with women ages 18 to 34, teens 12 to 17 and kids 2 to 11. CBS' "The Carol Burnett Show" is predicted to be a leader in delivering men and women 50-plus, as is NBC's "I'll Fly Away."

NBC's "The Torkelsons" and "Nurses" are projected to deliver high shares of women 50-plus.

Fox Broadcasting Co.'s series aren't expected to deliver winning household shares, but the fledgling network's "Roc" series is expected to rank in the top 20 with men 18 to 34 and "Shut Up, Kids" with kids 2 to 11.

Although Fox's new series may not generate high household shares by Big 3 standards, agency executives noted that "Roc" and "Shut Up, Kids" with projected 14 and 13 shares, respectively, should still be considered successes, because Fox's ratings average about half of the Big 3's.

Moreover, agency executives noted that even "borderline" and "failing" series on the Big 3's schedules must be weighed against the objectives of specific time periods.

"Any of the other networks would be happy to have a 15 share opposite CBS' "60 Minutes" on Sunday nights," said Bozell Director of Broadcast Research Steve Sternberg. "But that might be considered a failure on any other night."

He added that the relatively low share estimates for new shows initially touted by agencies, including CBS' "The Royal Family" and ABC's "The Commish," reflect the difficulty of their time slots.

"It's a tough time period for CBS," Mr. Sternberg said. "You have 'Dinosaurs' and 'Wonder Years' getting the kids and teens on ABC and "Unsolved Mysteries" getting the older viewers on NBC."

The definition of a successful share for the 1991-92 season is complicated by the current parity in the three-network race, said Dave Marans, senior VP-research at J. Walter Thompson USA.

"It's difficult to say what's a winning share, because a show like 'thirtysomething' was doing an 18 share with excellent audience composition, but the network programmers felt it didn't merit returning," he said. □

Claiborne attire tries on ads . . .

By Pat Sloan and Gary Levin

NEW YORK—Liz Claiborne Inc., the country's largest women's apparel marketer, is looking to Madison Avenue after building to more than $1.7 billion in annual sales during the past 16 years with little or no advertising.

The company has given a preliminary nod to a $15 million print campaign scheduled to break this fall, industry sources said.

Official approval for the plan is expected this week.

The effort is slated to break in late fall and will consist of multiple-page spreads in a variety of magazines, from Altschiller Reitzfeld/Tracy-Locke.

Wendy Banks, senior VP-corporate marketing for Claiborne, said she couldn't confirm the company's marketing plans, but sources close to the company said bids are now being taken from photographers. Once final approval is given, shooting will start within the next several weeks.

"I have heard there was a marketing program coming," said retail analyst Walter Loeb of Loeb Associates. "They're one of the biggest, so it doesn't surprise me."

A $15 million ad budget would make Claiborne possibly the leading ad spender in apparel.

Leslie Fay Cos., the second-largest women's wear marketer with sales estimated at $850 million, spent only $2.9 million on measured media in 1990, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

Ellen Tracy, another major women's wear company, spent $1.3 million, while Calvin Klein Inc. spent $7.3 million (men's and women's apparel) and Guess Inc., $12.3 million (men's, women's and children's apparel).

"Claiborne is one of the few and maybe [the] only major apparel manufacturer that's not done image advertising," said one executive close to the company. Instead, the company has relied on co-op newspaper ads with retailers and mini-catalogs.

In today's tough retail climate, "retailers and their suppliers have to market themselves better," Mr. Loeb said. "Claiborne has such a dominant position that they have to help the retailer. They can't stand still. They have to move forward."

Sources speculate the goal of the campaign is to bring new buyers into the market and to put Claiborne in control of its image, recently extended to men's clothing and women's jewelry.

Claiborne currently advertises its fragrances via Altschiller. □

. . . As Neutrogena boosts use of TV

By Pat Sloan

Neutrogena Corp., a longtime print advertiser, is increasing its use of TV to counter intensified competition and flat sales.

The toiletries marketer has been working with Dailey & Associates, Los Angeles, on a project basis since last year to incorporate TV into its media mix. Neutrogena plans to allocate a greater portion of its $38 million budget to the medium.

"We never have spent more than $1 million on TV, and that was back in the '70s," CEO Lloyd Cotsen said, adding, "It wasn't done well, and it didn't work."

The company took a second crack at TV last year, starting a $3 million-plus test campaign for Neutrogena shampoo in Los Angeles and Boston. That effort, also from Dailey, will roll out nationally this month, after having been extended to markets representing 59% of the country during the past five months.

The ad budget is expected to increase with the rollout of that effort. Neutrogena's agency of record is Eisaman, Johns & Laws.

The spots focus on product benefits and are themed "Neutrogena shampoo. A breath of fresh air for your hair." That campaign spurred at least a 20% increase in shampoo sales, said Martha Pease, senior VP-marketing.

In August, Neutrogena will start a second national TV campaign, for its core skincare business.

Ms. Pease said the $6 million skincare campaign will run through October, supported by a free standing insert in Sunday newspapers.

"What we want to do is bring the Neutrogena message to a broader audience," Ms. Pease said.

Both Ms. Pease and Mr. Cotsen cited the aggressive use of TV by Neutrogena rivals—notably L'Oreal's Plenitude and Procter & Gamble Co.'s Oil of Olay—as one reason for the media shift.

Last year, L'Oreal spent more than $16 million in measured media on network TV for Plenitude and P&G more than $25 million for Oil of Olay.

"The other thing that's forcing us to look at our business differently is the way industry sales are shifting in terms of outlets," Mr. Cotsen said. Because of retail consolidation, "there are today fewer drug outlets doing more of the business," he said.

As a result, the company is broadening its distribution, both by adding newer retail formats, such as combination food-and-drug outlets, to its U.S. accounts and by increasing its presence in Europe. □

Distribution strikes out

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—The National, the grand experiment in sports journalism that was never embraced by the advertising community, in the end may have been done in more by distribution problems.

The 16-month-old paper, the nation's first all-sports daily, ceased publication with its June 13 issue after losing more than $100 million since its launch.

The National was published by National American Sports Communications, a partnership controlled by Mexican media mogul Emilio Azcarraga Milmo, president-ceo of Televisa.

Current and former National executives and industry observers indicate the paper's distribution problems presented a long-term, costly challenge to survival. Those problems may have outweighed "eroding business prospects for the publishing industry," cited by The National as the main reason for the paper's demise.

Media analysts and buyers also say the failure may signal that the sports media marketplace has reached saturation.

The paper's daily circulation when it closed was less than 200,000, said Frank

Jan. 31, 1990: The National is launched amid much fanfare in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles with a rate base of 250,000.

Nov. 1990: President-Publisher Peter O. Price is ousted and replaced by Jaime Davila, a trouble-shooter for owner Emilio Azcarraga. Suspends Sunday editions.

Dec. 18, 1990: The National, admitting it's fallen far short of circulation guarantees, lowers its rate base to 200,000 from 275,000.

Jan. 21, 1991: The National raises its cover price to 75¢ from 50¢.

Jan. 31, 1991: Editor Frank Deford denies rumors the paper will be folded or sold, saying Mr. Azcarraga's "commitment remains strong."

June 13, 1991: Publishes its last issue, having lost $100 million.

Ad tax to fund pols?

Idea floated at House hearing on election reform

By Steven W. Colford

WASHINGTON—A congressional task force is considering a national tax on all commercial advertising as a source of public funding for federal political candidates, their campaigns and their ads.

U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson (D., Conn.), chairman of the House Administration Task Force on Campaign Reform, disclosed the ad tax option last week during a hearing on political advertising and campaign reform.

An aide later confirmed the idea as one of a half-dozen revenue-raising "trial balloons" being examined by the task force, formed earlier this year to develop comprehensive reforms to federal election practices and finances.

Under the proposal currently being considered, a 0.25% tax would be assessed on virtually all advertising, to be collected by broadcasters and publishers quarterly and turned over to the general treasury, said Perry Pockros, staff director for the task force.

Those funds could be used to finance a candidate's political ads and all other campaign expenses.

Another idea is to use the funds to "pay for finance reform and some other proposals before the Ways & Means Committee," such as low-cost housing, Mr. Pockros said.

The task force expects to introduce legislation soon and hopes for a vote by the House before August.

The legislation would face considerable opposition in the House, but both Congress and the White House have said they want campaign reform legislation in time for the 1992 elections.

Mr. Pockros said the task force's current calculations

Clio-tastrophe at show

By Jon Lafayette

NEW YORK—One of advertising's best-known awards shows turned into a farce late last week, with upset finalists rushing onto the stage to claim statuettes they had no way of knowing if they'd won.

The 31-year-old Clios may find it impossible to recover from a disastrous free-for-all at the print and radio awards presentation June 13.

Late Friday, managers of Lincoln Center said they were canceling tonight's gala TV awards show.

Bill Mealey, Lincoln Center's executive secretary, said he was sending a letter to Clio President Bill Evans stating that the site reservation was canceled because he hadn't received the $50,000 required for rent and expenses.

Also several large agencies said they were reconsidering whether to send representatives to the TV awards, once regarded as one of advertising's most glamorous affairs. Some agencies were trying to find out whether they could stop checks already sent to the Clios.

Clio Inc. is an independent for-profit organization, but Clio judges are selected from within the ad industry.

The print/radio awards fiasco came after rumors circulated about unpaid bills and the health and welfare of Mr. Evans, and the departure of nearly the entire Clio staff.

Clio generates about $2 million a year through $95 entry fees, $125 and $175 tickets to its shows and $140 charges for extra copies of the Clio statuette for staffers, clients and production houses sharing an award.

The company also makes money from syndicated TV shows featuring what it calls the world's best TV commercials.

Mr. Evans couldn't be reached at press time, but Clio staffer Kit Lebar insisted the event would go on as planned.

New Y&R post for Pollak

NEW YORK—Tim Pollak, president of Young & Rubicam's flagship office, is expected to get a new worldwide assignment at the agency as early as this week, sources said. It wasn't clear whether Mr. Pollak would keep his current post, which was diminished earlier this month when Y&R New York Chairman John McGarry was promoted to Y&R USA president, while continuing to run the office here.

Decision near on Subaru

CHERRY HILL, N.J.—Subaru of America plans to decide this week on an agency for its $60 million account. Chris Wackman, Subaru VP-marketing, said there won't be a final decision until a compensation package has been negotiated. Finalists are W.B. Doner & Co., Baltimore; Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore.; and incumbent Levine, Huntley, Vick & Beaver; Warwick Baker & Fiore; Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; and DCA Advertising, all New York.

Magazine ad pages fall

NEW YORK—Magazine ad pages last month totaled 13,148.4, down 13.7% from a year earlier, Publishers Information Bureau reported. It's the steepest one-month decline since the industrywide ad drought hit in late 1989. After five months, pages totaled 63,550.6, down 10.9%; ad revenues fell 5.4% to $2.6 billion.

Fast-food chain may try in-store TV network

By Alison Fahey and Scott Hume

Turner Broadcasting System is negotiating with Burger King Corp. to test an in-store TV network.

The fast-food venture would be Turner's third out-of-home network; six others are in development.

Clearly looking to expand its non-traditional media reach, Turner recently formed Turner Private Networks, devoted to identifying and developing customized video outlets.

"We're looking at a number of locations to capture attractive demographics," said Scott Weiss, exec VP of the unit. He wouldn't comment on whether Turner is close to signing a deal with Burger King.

Burger King spokesman Michael Evans wouldn't confirm or deny talks with Turner about an in-store project, adding that "we are examining a lot of different applications of technology for Burger King."

John Barbera, president of Turner Broadcasting Sales, singled out the fast-food market as a potential target for the company's next place-based TV network in a recent interview with Advertising Age. He said then such a network could start testing by yearend.

In the deal, TV monitors could be placed in Burger King dining areas or be positioned for consumers to watch while waiting in lines.

Agency media buyers also say programming could be segmented throughout the day to reach specific audiences.

In late 1987, McDonald's Corp. briefly tested an in-store "Video Theater" entertainment center for children, but the project never moved beyond test.

At least one major franchisee is skeptical of Burger King's commitment to such a program.

"I'd be surprised if Burger King management goes ahead with this," said a multiunit Burger King franchisee who asked not be named. "I can't see it after they've been so embarrassed over this ridiculous commitment to Whittle's 'Channel One.' " The 1989 agreement reportedly committed Burger King to spending $10 million annually for five years on the ad-supported classroom network, he said.

"The Whittle thing is so unpopular, I think franchisees would tar and feather them if they came to us with a project like Turner," the source said.

Besides developing new ventures, Turner Private Networks will oversee the company's existing place-based media ventures, "Checkout Channel" and "Airport Channel."

Of the projects in development, "how many will come off the drawing board I don't know," Mr. Weiss said.

Turner last week named John McMenamin, 37, to the new post of VP-sales, Turner Broadcasting

Dial ups spending to $60M

By Bradley Johnson

PHOENIX, Ariz.—Dial Corp. will boost its ad spending by about 50%, to an estimated $60 million, over the next 12 months.

Dial Chairman-CEO John Teets said in an interview with Advertising Age that the increased spending will be spread across various Dial soap and detergent products, with most of the money going into TV.

J. Teets

The recession has been "a nonevent" for Dial, he said, noting that its package goods sell equally well in good times and bad.

Mr. Teets said Dial made the midyear revision in media budgets on a brand-by-brand basis rather than a sweeping plan to boost the company's spending.

"Most of [our] top brands are getting increases," he said.

Dial spent $42.3 million on media advertising last year, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

"It's not just national advertising we're talking about but selective [spot] TV advertising," he said.

In the coming months, Dial will boost spending by 50% to an estimated $18 million for its flagship Dial soap, with most of that earmarked for network TV as well as national cable, he said. The brand last year got $12.8 million in media spending, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Liquid Dial, the top-selling liquid soap, will also get a heavy increase in spending on network, in spot markets and on cable, Mr. Teets said. The company spent $3.7 million on the brand last year.

DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, handles the Dial brand.

Spirit, a combination deodorant and moisturizing bar in test in the Midwest, will get more spot and regional cable support this summer when it moves into the West Coast, expanding its coverage to 40% of the nation.

Spirit is handled by Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson, New York.

Tone, a moisturizing bar soap that's received little support for about six months, will be back this fall with a network effort. Dial last year spent $6.4 million on Tone via Bozell, Dallas.

Dial will also increase spot TV advertising for Purex detergent, which hadn't received any ad support for several years until Dial introduced a new Bozell-created campaign early this year (AA, Feb. 25).

On top of the increase of product advertising, Dial will spend $1.5 million starting in July on a six-month corporate image campaign explaining changes in the company to the financial community.

In recent years, Dial has lopped off many assets from its conglomerate past, including its original Greyhound bus line, culminating in a name change last March from Greyhound Dial Corp. to Dial Corp. But Mr. Teets said some shareholders still haven't figured out their company has been in the soap business for 20 years.

Bozell created the corporate campaign, which will run in business magazines and newspapers. □

Nielsen ready to track toiletry sales

By Scott Hume

Nielsen Marketing Research USA this week unveils Procision, a new scanning-based integrated information service designed for marketers and retailers of health & beauty aids.

The service for the first time integrates information on health & beauty aids sales through major multi-outlet channels—food stores with annual sales of $2 million or more, food/drug combination stores, drugstores and mass merchandisers—with information on media and in-store advertising, and on consumer demographics.

Procision equips Nielsen to better compete with longtime rival Information Resources Inc., which has been collecting sales data from scanner-equipped drugstores since January.

The Nielsen service will have all its data sources hooked up in October, though Nielsen has been delivering data from some mass merchandisers since April and from some drugstores since May.

The total retailer base includes 2,700 food stores, 330 food/drug combination stores, 300 mass merchandisers and 400 drugstores.

IRI's service collects from 350 drugstores with plans to increase to 500 this summer. Also, IRI has exclusive access to the SAMI Drug Outlet Warehouse Withdrawals data base, which provides historical information on category sales over the past decades.

"No one can touch this," Richard Derr, Nielsen VP-product planning, said of Procision. "No one else has this much information from so many sources."

Procision clients can get information on in-store merchandising (aisle displays, shelf signage, etc.) and media advertising support for health & beauty aids brands (compiled by Nielsen Media's MonitorPlus TV advertising tracking service and the NCH Promotional Services unit for free standing insert and coupon data).

Consumer information on product purchasing is integrated into Procision as well, through Nielsen's 15,000-household National Household Panel. □

AIDS group tells mission

Sadly, Sid Bernstein's column, "Who wins in the new AIDS fight?" (AA, May 27), repeated many of the myths and half-truths that have characterized the worst in our society's response to the AIDS epidemic.

Mr. Bernstein decries "single disease exploitation," suggesting that AIDS requires no more special attention than other health issues. We disagree. As epidemic disease was thought to be under control in the U.S. before the AIDS crisis, this new, infectious, life-threatening disease raises specific concerns that must be addressed clearly and directly. Ads Against AIDS was developed to encourage our industry to use its talents and skills to inform and educate the public about this disease, and to raise much-needed funds for community-based organizations that are creating solutions to the medical, social and political crises presented by the epidemic.

Perhaps the most pernicious falsehood repeated by Mr. Bernstein is that "AIDS is still heavily concentrated among the homosexual population and certain entertainment and artistic circles." Mr. Bernstein seems to feel that this disease can be contained in certain limited, disposable populations. Right now, more than a million Americans are infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. This number includes our own professional colleagues, members of our families and our friends. Furthermore, recent statistics indicate that 2% to 3% of teen-agers in some cities may be infected, ensuring that this disease will decimate yet another generation.

All funds raised by Ads Against AIDS will go to People Taking Action Against AIDS, a nonprofit AIDS fund-raising organization which is co-producing the awards presentation event. Since its founding in 1987, PTAAA has donated nearly $1 million to community-based research and education efforts.

The AIDS epidemic affects us all, and we the organizers of Ads Against AIDS are proud to be at the forefront of our industry's informed and compassionate response to this crisis. Mr. Bernstein asks if we believe that advertising can help to end the AIDS epidemic. Yes, by replacing misconceptions with clear and explicit information. Our competition and ads can raise funds and awareness that will improve the lives of people with AIDS and contribute significantly to the fight against this terrible disease. How many other awards shows can promise the same rewards?

Mr. Bernstein asks if we believe that advertising can help to end the AIDS epidemic. Yes, by replacing misconceptions with clear and explicit information.

A good Four A's meeting

I was surprised and disappointed to read Jon Lafayette's description of the American Association of Advertising Agencies annual meeting as "the dullest" in recent history (AA, May 20).

As a new Four A's member and first-time attendee, I found the meeting to be interesting, informative, demanding, rewarding and quite challenging. I question the motivation and expectations of any individual finding the vital issues discussed to be less than timely and essential.

If this meeting was dull, previous meetings must have been electrifying!

Barkley wrong role model

A news account recently mentioned that Charles Barkley of the Philadelphia 76ers had been mailed a disorderly conduct citation from Milwaukee for tossing a tray of Gatorade on some fans during a playoff game. This followed a well-documented incident in which he spat on a young female fan. And, of course, he has received fines for other on-court antics, including fighting and disrespect for officials.

Barkley, then, is obviously one of the least desirable role models for our youth. Yet Nike has chosen Mr. Barkley to appear in a "Mr. Robinson" commercial which pokes fun at this ill-mannered behavior. While tongue-in-cheek (Barkley is shown with a halo!) the commercial sends absolutely the wrong message; that anti-social, boorish, illegal behavior shall be rewarded!

This all began, I suppose, with the John McEnroe spots a couple of years ago which parodied his temper tantrums and disrespect for authority.

Perhaps advertising should not be the arbiter of the national moral stance, yet it has a responsibility to uphold respect and proper values. To condone, reward and wink at Mr. Barkley's attacks on authority, courtesy and respect for the law performs a disservice antithetical to our American sense of right and wrong.

Double whammy for cable

The phenomenal growth of cable is well-known. It's grown from 23% to 60% household penetration in the past 10 years. The cable industry predicts penetration will hit 65% by 1994, but that estimate now seems overly optimistic in light of recent legislative developments.

First, Congress held months of hearings on whether to re-regulate cable or, at the very least, allow competition. There's strong evidence that consumers, municipalities and business would benefit by the opening of cable to competition and/or some minor re-regulation. Yet Congress, in its infinite wisdom, decided to let cable systems retain their status as America's only unregulated monopoly. (A cynic might ask how many congressmen own stock in cable systems.)

The second blow came a few weeks ago when the Supreme Court ruled that local governments can tax cable systems without having to do the same to other forms of media as well. You can well imagine the impact this ruling is going to have on every city and town council in the country who are forever looking for new sources of revenue.

One of the major consumer complaints against cable is its uncontrolled cost increases. When a tax is imposed it will certainly be passed on to the subscriber. This is bound to be the last straw for many who will then cancel or cut back their subscription.

The term used by the cable industry is "churn"; you lose some old subscribers and gain some new ones. Up to now this has resulted in a net gain. But unless the existing laws are changed, the outlook for cable is not very good.

Holiday Inn drive working

I was sorry to see that Bob Garfield chose to comment on our company's discontinued campaign in his review of advertising in the hotel category (AA, April 15). If he would have referred to Advertising Age's Feb. 25 issue, he would have known that our new campaign represents what your magazine calls a "major advertising shift" and focuses on pleasing customers, not knocking the competition.

We feel this customer-driven approach will build loyalty and convince people that nobody understands the traveler like Holiday Inn as, indeed, it already has with occupancy and call volume up substantially since the campaign broke.

Of course, as with all reviews, we'll consider Mr. Garfield's opinions in light of writer Elbert Hubbard's advice: "To escape criticism—do nothing, say nothing, be nothing."

A little help from Bob

Bob Garfield, you may remember you did a column on our Marriott advertising a couple of weeks ago (AA, April 15).

Overall, it was a positive review (three stars), though you noted that it wanted for any tangible evidence that Marriott was, in fact, different from its competitors.

Ask and ye shall receive.

Actually, we thought your criticism was valid, and decided to include a reference to specific Marriott services at the end of the commercial.

Herein, a redo of the abovementioned two spots, incorporating your thoughts.

Research: Do it right

Your article "To buy, or not to buy" (AA, May 13) concerning J.C. Penney's computerized approach to forecasting merchandise sales through consumer surveys reminded me of our similar efforts in the Sears Merchandise Group in the '70s.

Yes, Virginia, you can use survey research to help plan retail inventories provided:

1) You take great care in selecting the correct sample population.

2) You show the respondents being interviewed what they will see in the actual buying situation.

3) Your client (the merchant) does not feel threatened by marketing research.

4) The research is integrated with other knowledge rather than simply applied alone as if it were a Band-Aid.

5) You are willing to spend a great deal of money to do the research correctly. People looking for good research that is cheap are the Ponce de Leons of the research world.

Will Aussies win the Lion hunt?

CANNES 1991

Despite a war and recession taxing creative juices, a healthy crop of innovative TV and cinema spots is ready for the International Advertising Film Festival June 24 to 29, and creatives are already speculating on who will capture Lions.

During a recession "it's not an easy time to persuade clients to do the crazies," said Dave Horry, creative director at Still Price:Lintas in London and one of the two U.K. judges at Cannes this year. "And budgets are down."

Nevertheless, there's plenty of innovation, said Donald Gunn, senior VP-director of creative resources at Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, and regarded as the ad industry's most accurate soothsayer in predicting Cannes winners.

He's betting an ad from Australia—where the recession is much older and deeper than elsewhere—could snag the Grand Prix.

The spot for Natural Gas, via Omon, Sydney, starts with Nero condemning a Christian to the lion's den. After a nervous walk down a dank corridor, the Christian finds himself in a cozy lion home. Daddy Lion lounges comfortably, with Mama Lion cooking dinner on a gas stove and Baby Lion resting in a bubble bath.

"It's perfect in so many ways," Mr. Gunn said. "It's so unexpected."

From the U.S., he sees Nike's "Bo's Family Reunion" ad, from Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore.; Du Pont Co.'s Stainmaster carpet's "Jontoo" and "Food Fight" spots by BBDO Worldwide, New York; and Hallmark Cards' "100th Birthday" ad by Burnett as Grand Prix contenders.

"Common sense says that the USA might win," Mr. Gunn said. "There is some great work being entered, and there are two pretty forceful judges." The U.S. last won the Grand Prix in 1986.

Mr. Gunn, along with U.S. judge Bob Kuperman, president-ceo of Chiat/Day/Mojo, Venice, Calif., said Eveready Battery Co.'s Energizer bunny advertising from Chiat will win at least a Gold Lion this year. Last year's biggest controversy concerned an Energizer spot, with accusations that it too closely resembled a spot for Bass' Carling Black Label from WCRS, London.

"It really should have won something last year," Mr. Gunn said.

Mr. Gunn predicted two French Source Perrier spots from Ogilvy & Mather France, Paris—one showing an aging John McEnroe and another featuring a woman who roars back to a lion—will be among those finalists considered for the top prize.

Two Reebok International spots by Lowe Howard-Spink in London were also singled out by creative directors.

In one, a construction worker in Reeboks runs and jumps along a skyscraper's girders.

The other spot features Reeboks and a white line that keeps changing from one sports setting to another, becoming in turn a high jumper's bar, the top of a net at a tennis court and finally the tape at the end of a foot race.

Cannes judging vets: New rules fall short

By Julie Skur Hill and Laurel Wentz

As some 6,000 delegates prepare for the industry's most prestigious international creative awards, former U.K. and U.S. jury members are already debating whether rules for judging instituted this year have gone far enough.

These former judges of the International Advertising Film Festival at Cannes say that despite the changes to encourage fairer balloting, the perennial accusation of vote trading hasn't been addressed.

The honor of being nominated as one of the 23 judges from one of the 15 countries participating often carries a heavy burden. Failing to bring home more Lions than the previous year can mean humiliation and disgrace, so judges may go to great lengths to persuade colleagues to vote for their countries' entries.

On the other hand, some nationalities, such as the Japanese, are so humble they consider voting for their own commercials bad manners. For them, trading votes with other judges is unthinkable.

The voting changes include eliminating the highest and lowest scores for each ad and dividing the judges into three groups, each seeing one-third of the entries, instead of two groups, each viewing half.

The balloting change was made to eliminate the extremes and control favoritism, said Anne-Marie Marcus, senior VP at Screenvision Cinema Network, the festival's U.S. sponsor.

"During the [first round of] voting, people loaded up on their favorites, hitting 10 for what they wanted to win and gave everything else a zero," said Marcio Moreira, vice chairman at New York-based McCann-Erickson Worldwide and jury president in 1989.

It wasn't difficult to detect certain judges giving top marks to commercials that weren't very good, said Tim Mellors, creative director at Publicis, London, and president of the 1990 jury.

"I just had a word with them and said there's more of us [voting fairly] than there are of you and that we could start doing it, too," he said.

Mr. Moreira said as president he also kept his jury in line by pointing out certain voting patterns to members.

"One country on the face of it had three Lions. After the next day's voting, however, they had something like 12," he said. "The problem is that if the delegate doesn't come home with enough Lions, his reputation is at stake in the country."

Screenvision's Ms. Marcus said the jury president has the authority to make reprimands, and if voting abuse is blatant, the president can lodge a complaint with festival organizers. However, there are no set regulations of how the festival authorities would handle such a situation, she added. As far as anyone can recall, no one has ever lodged a formal complaint.

"One country on the face of it had three Lions. After the next day's voting, however, they had something like 12."

"These are not schoolboys. I don't think it would be appropriate for us to start the festival by saying whoever is caught cheating will be thrown out," she said.

Although Rick Fizdale, president-chief creative officer at Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, wasn't approached directly about exchanging votes last year when he was a judge, he had the impression that he was handed such an opportunity.

"Someone kept coming up to me and kept saying how much they liked an ad from the Leo Burnett Co. I said fine, if you like it, vote for it," Mr. Fizdale said. "I think I was being tested to cut a deal, but I'll never know because I let it drop."

There are some, however, who see vote trading as a normal part of any contest. People always form voting blocs, said Andrew Cracknell, vice chairman and creative director at BSB Dorland, London, and a U.K. judge at Cannes in 1989.

While Cannes judges are often accused of teaming up with neighboring nations or countries with similar native languages, Mr. Cracknell said at other festivals it's clients against agencies, or agencies against other agencies.

The most important change, Ms. Marcus said, is the division of judges into the three groups in the initial round.

Mr. Moreira disagrees. For an overview of the entries, "I think it should go back to the old days when the jury looked at everything and came in early," he said.

The 27 product or service categories will be split into three, with each jury evaluating nine complete ones. Previously, reels were arranged by the order the entries arrived, regardless of country or category.

Judges have complained about the grueling job of evaluating so many ads. Mr. Fizdale has urged that judges get a break. "You need time off," he said. "You do get a little weary as you get into the final day." □

TV campaign that changed community attitudes toward driving, drinking and speeding, via Grey Advertising in Melbourne, is one of the country's strong contenders for gold at Cannes.

Each 60-second commercial for the National Road Safety Council was shot around actors mixing with real emergency workers at highly realistic yet simulated auto accidents. The resulting footage, cut from several hours of film, is stark and graphic.

Swamping the New Zealand entries is Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising. The Auckland office has submitted nine and the Wellington office eight. Ayer New Zealand is next with four entries.

Given a strong chance for a medal, say local creatives, is an Ayer, Auckland, spot for Presbyterian Support Services that lingers on the faces of elderly and needy people.

An entry from Saatchi's Wellington office, featuring wild animals moving to music for Telecom New Zealand, is also considered a front-runner. The spot was named "best loved" campaign judged by public voting.

Brazilian jurors agree W/Brasil's spot for Schering-Plough Corp.'s Coppertone suntan lotion will be a winner. The spot shows frenetically moving naked back sides of beachgoers of all shapes, sizes and sexes as a voice-over announces the types of swimsuits that kept some of the body parts white.

From Germany, one hot spot is for 3M's Scotch Magic tape, from Grey, Duesseldorf. A torn photograph of a girl is magically restored by a man with very large ears with the help of the tape. After he sees what a great job it does on the picture, he tapes his ears back.

South African creatives are hopeful that "Backyard TV," a spot for the South African Broadcasting Corp. via Hunt Lascaris, Sandton, can capture a Lion. The spot uses a traditional black "township" back yard to sell the advantages of radio as an advertising medium. □

VW chief honored

CANNES—Daniel Goeudevert 49, chairman of Volkswagen's brand management board, has been selected as the first Advertiser of the Year by the organizers of the International Advertising Film Festival. The award will be presented at the festival, June 24 to 29.

The Volkswagen executive was picked because of his professional achievements and Volkswagen's success in establishing an easily recognizable brand backed by key values such as quality and reliability. Volkswagen has been a loyal client of DDB Needham Worldwide for more than 30 years in the U.S. and Germany, and more than 20 years in France.

Mr. Goeudevert started as a salesman at Citroen in 1965, then moved to Renault and Ford Motor Co. before joining the board of Volkswagen in 1989. He took his current post at the end of 1990. □

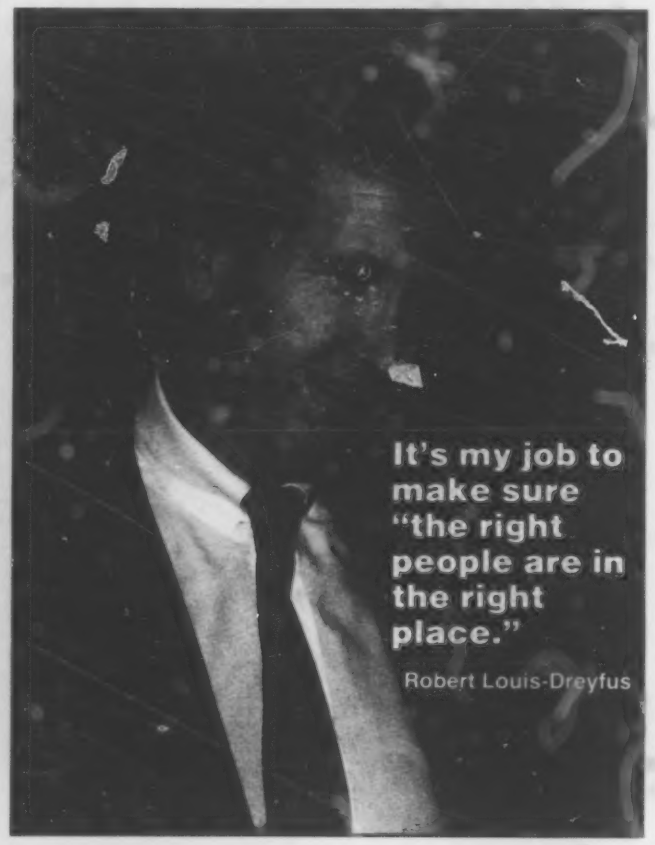
Louis-Dreyfus making his moves at Backer



Doug Goodman

By Jon Lafayette and Laurel Wentz

Saatchi & Saatchi Co. Chief Executive Robert Louis-Dreyfus is taking a stronger hand in the management of troubled Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide.

In exclusive interviews with Advertising Age, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said part of his job is to ensure that "the right people are in the right place," and that it was clear he had to step in when Backer began hemorrhaging during the past year.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus' increased role in the day-to-day affairs of Backer is significant because, until now, those duties had been the closely guarded and exclusive province of agency CEO Carl Spielvogel.

Since he was hired as chief executive in 1990, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus has concentrated primarily on the financial restructuring of Saatchi while maintaining a hands-off policy toward the management of the holding company's agency units.

"I really believe in decentralization, except for financial control," he said. "If people are successful, don't bother them. Don't second-guess them."

Mr. Spielvogel recently signed a new contract with Saatchi that

$100M in TV buys consolidated

By Alison Fahey

Eastman Kodak Co. and its Sterling Drug subsidiary have consolidated $100 million-plus in TV media buying assignments at Lintas:USA.

The Kodak/Sterling decision consolidated media buying for all major brands and most leading dayparts, effective last week. The move is the latest example of marketers looking to gain clout in the marketplace through consolidation.

The move strips J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, of all broadcast buying responsibilities for Kodak and Sterling, including Sterling's L&F Products and Glenbrook Laboratories divisions.

JWT had handled all network prime-time buys for Kodak brands, including film and cameras, and such Sterling products as Bayer aspirin.

Ironically, Lintas doesn't have any creative assignments for Kodak brands and, in April, resigned the $25 million Bayer aspirin account citing "strategic differences" with Sterling.

The resignation didn't include media buying responsibilities for the brand for certain dayparts, which sources said remained at the agency.

Lintas:New York currently handles daytime network and syndication buying for Kodak and Sterling as well as cable TV through its sister agency Lintas:Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich. As part of the consolidation, Lintas will also be handling Olympics buys.

JWT also bought sports, specials and late-night programming for Kodak brands. It will continue to handle media planning and print buying as well as the creative assignment for Kodak film, including Photo CD, a system being introduced in '92.

Sources say JWT will lose an estimated $50 million, at least, in media buying responsibilities; the remainder has been at Lintas.

Roger Morrison, Kodak's director of media and programs, declined to comment on the exact size of the account but cited several reasons for the consolidation.

"By placing all our broadcast media buying through one agency, we feel we can get better strategic focus on our overall broadcast buys and gain an advantage in terms of our ability to leverage our business," Mr. Morrison said.

"And it goes beyond keeping [costs per thousand] down, although that's a critical issue

Slumping Pepperidge Farm turns up the heat on O&M

By Judann Dagnoli

Serious sales declines at Pepperidge Farm are straining the relationship between the Campbell Soup Co. subsidiary and agency Ogilvy & Mather.

While a review isn't considered imminent, sources familiar with the situation say profit-hungry Campbell slashed Pepperidge Farm's ad budget 55.5% to $8 million for the year ending July 31.

As a result, O&M is being forced "to take a bath" on the account, one source said.

That's prompted talks between the agency and client on a new compensation setup that could involve a fee payment system in lieu of Pepperidge Farm's traditional percentage-based compensation rate.

An O&M spokeswoman said the New York-based agency doesn't comment on client contracts. Pepperidge Farm President Dick Shea didn't return phone calls.

Will Pepperidge Farm's Old Timer be retired?

One company insider said, "Dick isn't pleased [with O&M]. He's pushing them to do better advertising. There is a strain there."

Exacerbating tensions is the loss of Pepperidge Farm VP-Marketing and General Manager David Albright, who last month became president of Campbell unit Godiva Chocolatier. No successor has been named.

The search for better advertising is leading the company to rethink its "Pepperidge Farm remembers" campaign, originally created by master adman David Ogilvy in 1956. For the past 14 years, the commercials have featured the folksy Old Timer currently played by actor Charlie Welch.

Pepperidge Farm clearly remembers better times.

Usually a star performer in the Campbell lineup, the $582 million unit suffered an 8% decline in volume while sales were down 1% to $12.8 million in the quarter ended April 28, said Donaldson Lufkin & Jenrette analyst William Leach.

Analysts say the recession is

P&G keeps cooking with new food entries

By Jennifer Lawrence

Procter & Gamble Co. will remain an aggressive player in the food and beverage business, even as it conducts a strategic review of that $3.3 billion division.

The real unknown is whether increased marketing activity is aimed at boosting value in preparation for the sale of some or all brands or whether P&G is in it to stay.

Following the surprise departure of Exec VP B. Jurgen Hintz this month, speculation was rampant that P&G would get out of food and beverages, but Chairman-CEO Edwin L. Artzt said the company remains committed to and active in the categories.

Major marketing changes are now under way for Crisco and Puritan oils, with a healthier version of Crisco testing in the Midwest and plans afoot to boost Puritan, a 100% canola oil product, by adding the Crisco logo.

Other initiatives include a new product from Duncan Hines, baking mixes called Pantastics.

Duncan Hines' new Pantastic cakes are P&G's latest entry in the food market.

The line extension is a complete kit to make a decorated cake in special shapes. Five varieties—Garfield, Miss Piggy, Kermit the Frog, a baseball diamond and a football field—will start testing in the Southeast in July.

Even troubled Citrus Hill orange juice hasn't been sitting still. P&G is just completing a test of a not-from-concentrate juice positioned as a seasonal product in five southeastern states.

That product marks P&G's first entry into the growing not-from-concentrate orange juice market dominated by Tropicana Products and Coca-Cola Foods' Minute Maid.

Mr. Artzt has identified Crisco and Duncan Hines as brands that haven't performed well in recent years, while he's characterized Citrus Hill as "the challenge we face in the beverage business."

Because P&G doesn't have the food equivalent of a Tide detergent in its brand lineup, industry analysts believe its food and beverage sector is a questionable strategic fit. Even a recent letter to employees from Mr. Artzt did little to dampen analysts' opinion that parts would be sold.

The letter was made public after The Wall Street Journal reported P&G was considering selling parts of the food and beverage

Promise cheese in works

By Judann Dagnoli and Julie Liesse

Unilever's Van den Bergh Foods is developing a line of low-fat, low-cholesterol cheeses under its Promise brand name.

It isn't known how close Van den Bergh is to introducing Promise cheese, but sources confirmed preliminary plans are under way.

The line, tentatively dubbed Promise Reduced Fat Cheeses, would be the marketer's second stab at bringing a well-known margarine brand to the $3.7 billion cheese market now dominated by Kraft USA.

In 1989, Van den Bergh began limited distribution of a line of spreadable cheeses under its Shedd's Country Crock brand, but it never reached national distribution.

Promise, long supported with the "Get heart smart" theme in advertising from McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, is the sixth-largest seller in the $1.4 billion margarine category, with a 7.6% share.

Promise cheese would tap into the increasingly popular "light" cheese market, which Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service measured at $200 million in 1990.

Established products include Dorman's Light from Dorman-Roth Foods and First World Cheese's Alpine Lace. But Promise's most direct competitor would be Kraft's Light Naturals line of reduced-fat, reduced-calorie chunk cheeses. Light Naturals has about a 3.5% share of the natural chunk cheese segment.

Kraft last week began a national rollout of Kraft Free Singles, a fat-free version of its American pasteurized process cheese slices. Kraft Free Singles has 45 calories, half the calories of regular Kraft Singles. Kraft will continue marketing both regular and light Kraft Singles in addition to the new product.

TV and print advertising will support, via J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

Kraft has about 30% of the combined chunk and shredded natural cheese segment, and 49% of the American cheese segment, industry sources say. □

Time Inc. revamps sales

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—Time Inc. Magazine Co. will announce today a fundamental restructuring of its ad sales force, sparked as reported earlier by the success of its corporate sales efforts.

Under the new structure, sales reps for the Time Warner unit's individual magazines will report to one of four corporate regional sales managers rather than each title's ad director.

The restructuring affects a staff of more than 300, believed to be the nation's largest media sales force.

"Behind it is the desire to do two things: On the one hand, we're trying to retain the focus of the selling activity as essentially a title-by-title, brand-selling activity," said a source familiar with the changes. "On the other hand, we want to create an availability to manage that activity for the benefit of the company as a whole when it's appropriate to do that."

Time Inc. today promotes four senior sales executives to the new title of regional VP-sales.

Steven Seabolt, 39, now ad sales director of Time, will be based in Los Angeles; Jack Haire, 39, now ad sales director, Entertainment Weekly, will relocate to Chicago; Jim Graham, 40, now national ad sales manager, Fortune, will be based in Detroit; and John Jay, 49, ad sales director of Fortune, remains in New York.

Time Inc. Magazine Co. is "really elevating the job function of advertising sales in this company, giving it some teeth."

Also, David Long, 45, now ad sales director of People, will be named to the new post of VP-marketing for the company. He will work with parent company VP-Sales Richard Heinemann, 52, to whom the regional sales executives will report.

"We're putting the best people that we have hands-on in the marketplace," the source said. "We're giving our best advertising management personnel a common agenda, which we've never done before, and reallly elevating the job function of advertising sales in this company, giving it some teeth."

Successors haven't been named for the executives, but the key slots aren't likely to be left vacant for long.

Sources say that as a result of Mr. Seabolt's departure, flagship Time soon will fillll the publisher's slot vacated lasst February by Louis A. "Chip" Weil III. The new publisher is expected to come from within; Robert L. Miller, exec VP, group president and

MORNING REPORT:

Coffee sees rise in ground as instant sales keep falling

By John C. Maxwell Jr.

Coffee sales held steady last year.

As more premium coffees came on the market, a slight increase in ground roast sales offset the continued decline in instant coffee.

In dollar sales, the market remains at about $3.9 billion, excluding specialty shops, an estimated $1 billion business.

Philip Morris Cos.' General Foods USA narrowly holds first place in the ground roast segment with a 33% share, vs. Procter & Gamble Co.'s Folgers at 32.7%.

Nestle increased its share to 16% last year, and Chock Full O' Nuts Corp. is fourth with 3.4%.

In instant coffees, General Foods continues to be No. 1 with an estimated 36.3% of the market, just ahead of Nestle at 33.3%. Folgers is a strong third at 24.7%

Although the industry's volume and dollar growth were flat in 1990, conditions were favorable due to the continuation of the free market for coffee, rather than a quota system.

This increased the availability of higher-quality arabica beans at lower prices, which in turn contributed to the trend toward new or improved products. That also enhanced gross margins, which allowed more marketing support for coffee brands.

Ad spending for the first nine months of 1990 increased 35% from the same period a year earlier, according to media measuring services and our estimates.

These two trends—increased marketing support and higher-quality specialty coffees—helped stabilize volume and per capita consumption.

The National Coffee Association reports the number of cups per person per day was practically flat, going to 1.73 cups in 1990 from 1.75 cups in 1989.

The percentage of the population that reported drinking coffee was stable—52.4% vs. 52.5% in 1989. □

Cold cereals feel the chill as oat bran boom fades

By John C. Maxwell Jr.

Cold cereals felt a shiver in 1990.

Though dollar sales in the industry rose 6% to about $2.7 billion from 1989, volume was up just 0.4% to 2.61 billion pounds.

The poor showing related to the peaking of interest in oat products and the lack of interesting new products.

Kellogg Co.'s dollar share dropped 2.4 points to 37.2%. The company has gained much of that back in recent months while managing to stabilize older brands such as Corn Flakes, Frosted Flakes and Rice Krispies.

General Mills gained 1.5 points in dollar share to 28%. That surge was led by some of its children's cereals as well as newer products, including Oatmeal Raisin Crisp and Apple Cinnamon Cheerios.

General Foods USA's Post division was up 0.7 share points to 10.7%, having turned around some older brands such as Grape-Nuts, Pebbles and Alpha-Bits, as well as adding Honey Bunches of Oats.

Ralston Purina Co. gained 0.1 points to 6.7%, though it experienced some decline in licensed products and saw the demise of a new product, Bran News.

Nabisco Brands continued to lose share, falling 0.3 points to 4.2%. Most of its products from Shredded Wheat on down declined slightly.

Gains from the new Teddy Grahams cereal partially offset other losses.

During the three-month period that concluded at the end of February, Kellogg picked up about 1.5 share points with aggressive marketing.

General Mills and Post also saw share growth, but Nabisco and Ralston were off a share point or more. □

Top books punch out slight gains despite page loss

By R. Craig Endicott

Advertising dropped and newsstand sales fell, but the nation's top magazines still eked out a slight gain in revenues.

The 300 largest magazines saw 1990 gross revenues inch up 3.9% to $17.3 billion, according to Advertising Age's second annual Magazine 300 report.

The magazines countered the ad slump and newsstand decline by pushing up subscription fees and page rates; the latter, added to declining circulation, drove up the cost per thousand for advertisers.

The Magazine 300 in 1990 collected 2.1% fewer ad pages and 2.7% fewer dollars from single-copy sales, while subscription revenues advanced 6% and ad revenues grew 4.3%.

In pre-recession 1989, the Magazine 300 turned in robust growth of 7.9%, including an 11.5% growth in ad revenues and 3.7% advance in overall circulation. But, as in 1990, fewer single copies were sold—down 5.5%—yet a higher cost-per-issue kept newsstand reve-

It do, it do: For the second year, TV Guide leads all titles in total, circulation and newsstand revenues.

The graying of America again has made AARP's Modern Maturity the subscriber leader.

A real-estate recession? Hard to believe when Real Estate Today tops trade subscribers.

Plugged into a good thing: Cable Guide bumps page rates more than any consumer title.

PC* may have its clones, but none come close to its lead among all trade books in total, ad and circulation, revenues, ad pages—and page rates.

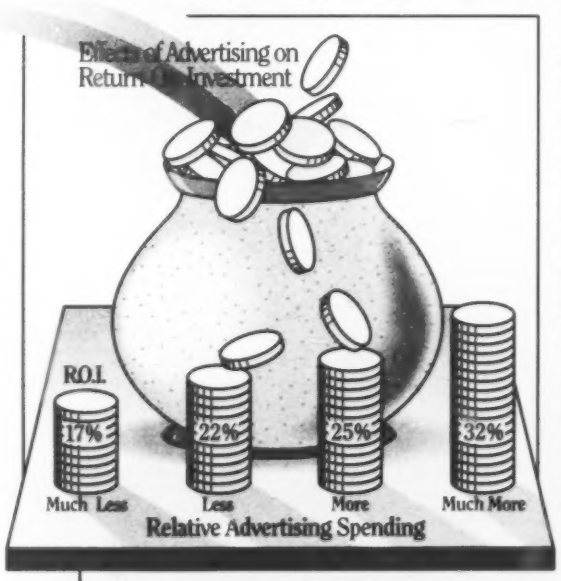
Far from making cosmetic moves, Mirabella raised its b&w page rate more than any women's magazine.

THE R.O.I. ON ADVERTISING IS NOW A HARD NUMBER. AND YOUR COMPETITORS MAY ALREADY HAVE IT.

What is the real impact of advertising on profitability? If you spend less, how much do you hurt your brand? If you spend more, is there any real gain?

Now some hard answers to these perennial questions have come from a comprehensive study* conducted by The Strategic Planning Institute with the Ogilvy Center for Research and Development.

For more than 15 years, the Institute's Profit Impact of Market Strategy (PIMS) study tracked 700 consumer businesses through good and bad economic cycles, in both North America and Europe.



Using this substantial data base, researchers were able to determine the extent to which the level of advertising influences the "perceived value" of a product, and how this perception affects both the relative market share and the relative market price of the product.

Measuring these factors against what really happened in the marketplace, scientists were then able to quantify the direct impact of different advertising strategies on profitability and growth.

Their finding: "Brands that advertise much more than their competitors average a 32 percent return-on-investment, while brands that advertise much less than their competitors average only a 17 percent return-on-investment."

In other words, it not only pays to advertise – it pays more to advertise more.

And it proves that, even today, there is still no better way to build a consumer perception of added value than through the use of advertising.

For more information, write to The Committee on the Value of Advertising, Department A, American Association of Advertising Agencies, 666 Third Avenue, New York, New York 10017.

We'll send you a booklet that will lead you to one, and only one, conclusion. When it comes to determining your advertising budget, there truly is "strength in numbers."

Magazines

nues from falling.

This year's report, which ranks the 300 magazines with the highest revenues from advertising and circulation, includes 217 consumer magazines and 83 business publications.

Entries to the chart fell between hands-down winner TV Guide, at $915.3 million in gross revenues, and No. 300 Audubon, at $12.1 million. (See methodology on Page S-10 for selection criteria.)

TV Guide's figure, though imposing, nevertheless represents the third consecutive year the News Corp. publication has failed to show a gain. Most of its decline in revenue in 1990 can be traced to a 4.8% drop in single-copy sales.

Time Warner led parent companies of the Magazine 300 with gross revenues of $2.6 billion, up 2.9%, from its 13 ranked publications. Its total ad pages slipped 0.7% but ad revenues grew 2.7% because of an 8.5% average growth in ad rates (one-time b&w); subscriber revenues expanded by 2.8%; newsstand revenues grew 4% although average single-copy sales dropped 7.2%.

The major change in ranking among the Top 10 involved an in-house scrimmage at Time Warner in which People overtook last year's No. 2 Time. People's revenue growth of 5.5% only was surpassed in the Top 10 by No. 7 Parade at 12.9% and No. 10 Good Housekeeping at 6%.

While Time showed no growth at $636.1 million, sister publication, No. 4 Sports Illustrated, registered a decline of 2.7% to $551.1 million after charting 7.5% growth in revenues in the prior year. Time's newsweekly rival, No. 6 Newsweek, grew 1.2% to $402.8 million.

Two other magazines in this year's Top 10 experienced revenue declines: No. 8 Business Week at $283.8 million, down 3.7%, and No. 9 Better Homes & Gardens at $275.5 million, down 0.1%.

BH&G appears vulnerable to hard-charging Good Housekeeping, which rose a notch to No. 10 on the basis of a 6% growth in revenues to $259.8 million. Total ad pages declined 11.3% at the pricier BH&G, while ad pages rose 2.2% at GH.

Fellow Seven Sister publication Family Circle, No. 18, was the only magazine to tumble from the 1989 Top 10. Its revenues declined 3.6% to $240.2 million. FC is seeking this year to plug the revenue drain by charging $4

Sibling rivalry hits Time Warner as People passes Time to become the No. 2 magazine behind TV Guide.

High road to readers: High Plains Journal's CPM tops all consumer books at $98.56; Hemmings Motor News scores the lowest CPM at $3.38.

Parade's* 1990 b&w page rate hit $341,800—tops in the business—yet its CPM was one of the lowest. Its 12.9% growth also was best among the Top 10 magazines.

So what if People pinched its No. 2 spot? Time tops all magazines with 1990 ad revenues of $381.9 million.

Computer Shopper* leaps 28 slots to No. 64 on a 33% revenue jump and newsstand performance.

Family Circle* tumbles from the Top 10 as Good Housekeeping moves up.

more per subscription and 9.3% more per b&w ad page.

That remedy capitalizes in part on its ability in 1990 to convert newsstand sales to subscriber revenues. FC's subs rose a phenomenal 46% to 2.4 million from the prior year while newsstand sales dropped 20.4% to 3.1 million. The trade-off was a $6 million gross revenue gain. FC's higher ad rate also softened the impact of losing 16.5% of its ad pages in 1990.

Such ad-page losses have become de rigueur. Consumer magazines ran 9.8% fewer ad pages in first quarter 1991 over the prior-year period, according to Publishers Information Bureau. But higher ad rates slowed the ad dollar decline to only 2%.

On average, consumer monthlies hiked one-time b&w rates for 1991 by 8.1%; consumer weeklies boosted rates 10.1%; business monthly rates rose an average 5.7%; business weeklies, 4.2%. These average increases, generally reflected across the rate card, are not extraordinary as publishers became increasingly sensitive to competitive pressure.

Among categories, newsweeklies dominate dollar-volume: Their $3.6 billion in revenues—up 2%—represents 20.7% of the Magazine 300. Newsweekly advertising, totaling 52.4% of total revenues, gained 2.4% as circulation dollars rose 2.1%.

Price increases, however, accounted for year-to-year growth because overall ad pages dropped 2.8%, average paid circulation grew only 0.4% and single-copy issues declined 2%.

The average cost of a one-time b&w rate grew 6.1%. Publishers in the category have raised b&w prices an average 9.8% in 1991 to blunt further erosion in revenues.

U.S. News & World Report, among the better category performers with gains in subscribers and newsstand sales, couldn't escape the advertiser's thinning pockets as ad pages dipped 2.1%.

The general editorial category had the second-highest revenue volume of $2.5 billion, up 5.1%. Advertising among the 24 publications rose 6.2% to $1.1 billion, or 44.5% of total revenues.

Circulation dollars advanced 4.3%, although newsstand revenues declined 2.1% as 6.2% fewer copies on average were sold. The category's subscription revenues double those from the newsstand. Paid subs rose an average 2.8%.

The average cost of a one-time b&w rate grew 7.1%, offsetting a 2% decline in ad pages. B&w prices have increased an average of 8.3% in 1991 to counter further recessionary erosion.

Reader's Digest was category leader with $436.1 million, up 4%. Six had double-digit revenue growth—Parade, USA Weekend, Consumer Reports, Vanity Fair, Atlantic and Saturday Evening Post—and six suffered single-digit declines.

Women's magazines pulled $2.4 billion in revenues, up 1.7%, from its 33 entries, the third-largest dollar volume among categories. The category drew 50.6% of its total revenues from advertising, or $1.2 billion, up 0.7% as circulation dollars advanced 2.8%.

Ad-page price increases—averaging 15.4%—largely produced the year-to-year growth, as overall ad pages dropped 3.3%.

On the circulation side, the major revenue component was subscriptions, which grew 10.1% to $623.4 million to replace single-copy sales as the dominant component. Single-copy sales, on top in 1989, brought in $560.8 million, down 4.3%.

The average b&w rate hike among category participants was 11.7% in 1991, although the category's newest magazine, Mirabella, boosted its rates a sizzling 48% this year. That is not unusual for a relatively new launch; Mirabella came out June 1989.

> The major change among the Top 10 involved an in-house scrimmage at Time Warner in which "People" overtook "Time."

Four other magazines in this segment recorded 30%-plus growth in revenues—Child, YM, Parenting and Cooking Light. Only Woman's Day among the category's Top 10 was mired in a major slump with total revenues down 15.3%.

The home service and home category generated $1.1 billion in revenue, up 3.7%, from 21 titles, with 51.1% of that coming from advertising, or $562.6 million, up 2.2%. Circulation dollars, 85% of which come from subscription sales, advanced 5.5%.

Ad page rates, up an average 11.7% for a b&w page, produced higher ad dollar volume because overall ad pages dropped 2.5%.

Subscription sales grew 6.3% in dollar volume. Single-copy revenue was flat, the result of higher per-copy prices that offset a 6.1% average decline in single-copy sales for the category.

Publishers in the category have raised b&w prices an average 10.8% in 1991. Six publications in the category—Yankee, Country, Practical Homeowner, Decorating & Remodeling, Midwest Living and Southern Accents—showed revenue gains of more than 12%.

The computer category attracted just more than $1 billion in revenues, up 21.2% from 24 titles. Advertising among computer books rose 23.1% to $895.7 million to account for 86.7% of total revenues. Growth in advertising occurred in all quarters as ad pages grew 7.4%. Paid circulation grew an average 17%.

While circulation dollars advanced 10.2%, even this hot category registered sluggish newsstand sales, down an average 4.4% from 1989.

The average cost of a one-time b&w page grew 18% in 1990. Publishers in the category probably will be able to carry their average 15.1% hike in b&w rates in 1991 because of the unparalleled revenue growth in the category. Only three magazines in the category declined in 1990, while virtually all others—beginning at the top with PC Magazine at 25.9%—had double-digit revenue growth.

No major category declined in CPMs. CPM growth among the top five categories: 5.1% for computer magazines; 9.4% for home service & home; 12.8% for women's; 9% for general editorial; 9.3% for newsweeklies.

Absent from this year's report were Psychology Today and Mother Earth News, ranked No. 160 and No. 204, respectively, in last year's report. Publication of the two magazines was suspended in 1990 by New American Magazine Co. The publisher this month found a buyer in Sussex Publishers. A fall revival is planned.

Publication ceased for five magazines ranked in last year's report, led by VNU's Personal Computing, No. 90 at $46.4 million. Others were Family Media's Savvy Woman, ranked No. 215 by 1989 revenues; Goldhirsh Group's Business Month, No. 272; Cap Cities/ABC's MISWeek, No. 285; and Advance Publications' Woman, No. 289.

Three publications in this year's ranking bear the imprint of merged partners in 1990: TV Entertainment was merged into No. 27 Cable Guide; International Data Group folded PCResources into PC World, No. 66; and M inc., No. 263, got its new name from a union of M, The Civilized Man and Manhattan, inc.

Joint venture deals continued. Cahners Publishing Co. and Ziff Communications formed Cahners/Ziff Computer Publications Ltd. to publish existing titles: No. 146 Datamation and Systems Integration (a non-Magazine 300) from Cahners and No. 223 Digital Review and No. 262 Government Computer News from Ziff.

The depressed ad market has made magazine titles in general cheaper to buy.

The biggest deal in several years was concluded last week when K-III Holdings paid Murdoch Magazines $600 million for No. 50 Soap Opera Digest, No. 53 Seventeen, No. 61 New York Magazine, No. 130 Automobile, No. 152 Premiere and No. 173 European Travel & Life. The purchase also included The Daily Racing Form and Soap Opera Weekly.

Reed International, through Cahner's Publishing Co., purchased No. 277 Sail from Meredith Corp. and Broadcasting from Times Mirror Co. Broadcasting, ranked No. 277 in the prior year, dipped below the cutoff in 1990.

Affiliated Publications' BPI Communications group purchased 80% of A/S/M giving it No. 165 Adweek. Chicago, No. 272, was sold by Adams Communications to Landmark Communications. No. 260 Travel Agent was sold by Cap Cities/ABC to a partnership headed by Richard Friese, publisher of Unique Homes, No. 265.

Apparently waiting in the wings for next year's list is PC Sources, a monthly aimed at new computer buyers. Launched in October 1990 by Ziff Communications' Coastal Associates unit, the premiere issue drew 418 ad pages, and subsequent issues have carried at least 350 pages. □

Methodology

The Magazine 300 participants emerged from a list of 450 magazines on which Advertising Age collected advertising and circulation data to determine gross revenues, the basis of the rankings in this report.

Most ad revenues were obtained from the ad monitoring services listed below.

If unmonitored, the magazine's ad revenues were determined by multiplying total ad pages by the one-time b&w rate, an industry standard. Most unmonitored magazines readily volunteered ad pages. This equation was not used if there was a monitored figure.

Circulation revenues were the sum of subscription and newsstand gross revenues. Subscription revenues were the product of paid subscriptions × subscription price. Single copy sales × price per issue × frequency determined newsstand gross revenues. However, where a magazine is published by an association, circulation revenues included only the portion of membership fee accorded the magazine.

Newspaper-distributed magazines were not credited with circulation revenues.

Publishers were contacted to verify the data and were allowed revisions.

Ad monitoring sources

Publishers Information Bureau monitors 175 consumer publications; MMS-Rome Reports was the primary source for data on 690 business-to-business publications; AdScope Inc. covers 65 computer magazines; Patterson Advertising Reports follows 166 trade and consumer magazines; PERQ Research Corp. tracks 450 magazines in the healthcare industry; Media Industry Newsletter, a leading source for regional city publications, prepares a monthly report on ad pages and revenue for consumer magazines; Ad Age's Consumer Linage Report is a monthly compilation of ad pages volunteered by publishers of 350 magazines.

Circulation services

Audit Bureau of Circulations' Fas-Fax Report for Dec. 31, 1990, provided most circulation data for consumer publications.

Business Publications Audit of Circulation was another source for trade publications. Annual subscription price and single-issue prices for corresponding years were obtained from Standard Rate & Data Service or the publisher. ❑

AMERICAN PARK NETWORK

Why are America's top companies participating in the American Park Network?

• Because visiting national and state parks is the #1 recreational activity in the country today. Over 83 million active, upscale adults and families make up America's largest, untapped captive audience.

• Because American Park Network magazines cover 22 of the country's most famous parks including Yellowstone, Yosemite, Grand Canyon, Great Smoky Mountains, and Everglades.

• And because the American Park Network creatively integrates advertising, promotion and merchandising in a way that is unmatched by conventional media... sponsors receive free park vacations, and passes for tours and activities – all ideal for promotional tie-ins, sweepstakes, or trade incentives.

It's no wonder that companies like AT&T, Chevrolet, Hershey, HFC, Kodak, Kraft General Foods, Nike, Pentax, and Prudential Insurance have participated in one of the most powerful marketing tools in America today. Some major product categories still available.

IF YOU THOUGHT PARK BENCHES WERE ST. PETERSBURG'S MOST POPULAR SEATS...

You'd better sit down for this.

While St. Petersburg — and the entire Tampa Bay area — was once considered a sleepy place, full of retirees, this is no longer true. In fact, the volume of new, young residents arriving in the St. Petersburg area has lowered the city's median age by nearly eight years since 1980.

So it's not surprising that some of the best seats in town are now those in Tampa Bay's performing arts centers. Thousands of people enjoy the area's diverse cultural offerings, including the world-renowned Salvador Dali Museum, the Florida Orchestra, dozens of art galleries, and a wide variety of professional dance and theater groups.

And it's not surprising either that Tampa Bay keeps up with the Times. The St. Petersburg Times, Tampa Bay's largest newspaper, beats the Tampa Tribune in circulation by more than 75,000 papers daily and nearly 77,500 on Sunday.*

So sit up and take notice of Tampa Bay. Call 1-800-333-7505 for the latest information on this thriving market and the newspaper that serves it best.

MAY AD RESULTS

Recovery hopes dim as ad drop steepens

By Scott Donaton

Springtime hasn't arrived yet in the magazine industry.

Ad pages fell 13.7% to 13,148.4 last month compared with a year earlier, the largest single-month decline since ad pages began drying up in late 1989, Publishers Information Bureau reported.

MEDIA WORKS

For the first five months of 1991, ad pages for PIB-tracked magazines totaled 63,550.6, down 10.9% from the same period last year. Of the 170 titles tracked, 74% registered declines.

Ad revenues fell 6.4% to $564.89 million in May and were down 5.4% to $2.58 billion through the first five months.

Seven of the top 10 ad categories (ranked by revenue) were down through May; nine categories were down in pages. The top 10 categories had combined revenues of $1.84 billion, representing 71% of all magazine ad revenue for the period.

"May revenue performance appears to reflect a leveling off from April with only the same few categories [automotive, direct response and computers/office equipment] showing sustained growth," said James Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development of the Magazine Publishers of America.

Publishers are no longer predicting a turnaround in 1991 but hope the May figures indicate the decline has bottomed out.

Business Week, traditionally the ad page leader, took its place as the top title for the first time this year, despite seeing pages fall 18.6% to 1,263.6 through May.

Rival Forbes was only a step behind with 1,248.1 pages, down 17%. Fortune took the biggest hit in the business field, with pages down 27.9% to 898.5.

While the downturn has widely affected most categories, the impact on individual titles varies greatly.

In the health field, Prevention's 198.1 ad pages were down 22.5%. American Health saw pages dive 48.8% to 124.7. Health, with 176.7 pages, was down just 1.3%.

Among science titles, Omni's pages rose 7.3% to 282.8 and Scientific American's pages jumped 39% to 263.6. But pages fell 8.5% to 293.3 at Popular Science and 11.8% to 158.6 at Discover.

Longevity, which straddles the line between health and science, climbed 35.6% to 218.7 pages.

The travel field picked up in May after being grounded in the first quarter by the Persian Gulf War. Travel & Leisure, Conde Nast Traveler and Travel-Holiday posted increases of 1.5%, 7.2% and 58.1% respectively for the month.

Through May, Travel & Leisure carried 564.6 pages, down 9%. Conde Nast Traveler carried 402.1 pages, down 12.2%. Travel-Holiday carried 237.6 pages, a 12.5% increase.

National Geographic Traveler fell 7.8% to 145.3 pages, while Endless Vacation's ad pages dropped 37.1% to 102. Gourmet, which counts travel as its largest advertising category, carried 464.5 pages, down 12.0%.

Among the handful of magazines showing strong gains after five months was Runners World. Its 254.1 pages represented a 55.1% increase, the largest percentage gain of any PIB-tracked magazine for the period. The Rodale Press title is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year. □

You Jane. Worldvision Enterprises, New York, is developing a companion TV series to "Tarzan," its weekly, half-hour show that starts this fall in first-run syndication. Worldvision is negotiating to license a similar comics-based character for another first-run series for a fall 1992 launch.

"It won't be a superhero. It will be somebody out of the Sunday comics pages like 'Jungle Jim,' 'Sheena: Queen of the Jungle,' or 'Steve Canyon,' " said Gary Montanus, senior VP at Worldvision. Despite a soft ad marketplace, he said sales for "Tarzan" have been strong with about a third of the inventory sold, including a deal with an undisclosed car company.

In the new series, Tarzan has been contemporized with a focus on environmental themes. Mr. Montanus said Worldvision is developing promotions that tie into the "green marketing" theme, including "Tarzan Zoo Days," local retail promotions that emphasize animal rights.

Swept out. For the first time ever, the average prime-time rating for each of the Big 3 networks dropped into the single digits during a sweeps period. For the week ended May 26, NBC had a 9.7 rating; ABC, 9.6; and CBS, 9.4, Nielsen Media Research reports. Although it's the 11th time each of the networks' prime-time ratings fell that low, the other single-digit weeks fell during political conventions or low-rated summer months. But only half the week fell during sweeps programming, said David Poltrack, CBS VP-planning and research. "The ratings were the lowest for the second half of the week, which fell out of the sweeps period," he said.

Kimberly Butler

Worldvision Enterprises' Tarzan cares about the environment.

Not-so-deep pockets. More than half of all brands using network TV in 1990 spent less than $1.5 million on the medium, the Network Television Association reported. The findings conflict with the perception that network TV is only for advertisers with large budgets. Of the 2,952 individual product campaigns that appeared on network TV in 1990, 1,547 were funded at less than $1.5 million. Peter Chrisanthopoulos, president of the association, said network TV is accessible to small-budget brands because of its wide price range. "Network TV unit costs run the gamut from an $800,000 [30-second] unit in the Super Bowl to $5,500 for a news sign-on spot," he said. The average 30-second prime-time unit costs about $115,000.

Turning over a new (maple) leaf. Vermont Life, Montpelier, with its winter issue will carry ads for the first time in its 46-year history. Published by the state of Vermont, the quarterly will accept advertising to offset production and postage costs and lower state funding. A b&w page costs $3,750; color is $5,050. Circulation is 90,000. □

U.S. turns on Euro TV

P&G leads the list of top-spending marketers

By Bill Britt

LONDON—U.S.-based marketers dominated the top 100 pan-European brands in TV ad spending in 1990.

The French were the next biggest spenders, followed by marketers in Italy, the U.K., Germany, the Netherlands and Switzerland.

GLOBAL NEWS

Of the total $3.4 billion invested in TV advertising by the top 100 pan-European brands, 24 U.S. marketers spent a combined total of $2.5 billion on 46 brands, according to Advertising Age's Euromarketing newsletter.

The French invested $593 million, or 17%, to support 11 brands.

Euromarketing compiled the list using data supplied by Adtrack, an advertising monitoring company in England.

The rankings are based on the six largest European TV markets: U.K., Italy, France, Spain, Germany and the Netherlands. A brand is considered pan-European if it's marketed under the same name and advertised on TV in at least three countries.

Procter & Gamble Co. spent the most, pumping $358 million into 10 brands: Pampers disposable diapers, Dash detergent, Oil of Olay skincare products, Vicks cold remedy, Vidal Sassoon haircare products, Lenor fabric softener, Vizir detergent, Clearasil acne remedy, Ariel detergent and Head & Shoulders shampoo.

As a company, Unilever was the second-largest spender, investing $217 million in nine brands. Ferrero, the Italian confectioner, came in third with $198 million.

Heaviest-spending brands were Fiat autos; Kellogg's cereals; Peugeot autos; Renault autos; and P&G's Ariel detergent (see chart).

Other U.S. brands among the top 100 were Coca-Cola, General Motors, Ford, McDonald's, Mattel, Whiskas (pet food from Mars Inc.) Gillette razors, Pedigree (pet food from Mars), Johnson & Johnson personal care, Kodak, Pepsi, Mars candy and Milton Bradley.

Automobiles led the list as the biggest product category, with $797 million behind 14 brands. Next was food with $409 million, followed by detergents, confectionery, cosmetics/skincare, toys, soft drinks, electronics, haircare, toothpaste and pet food.

The top 100 pan-European brands accounted for 38% of the total $8.9 billion spent during 1990 on TV advertising in the six largest markets. □

Carmakers sponsor July 4 radio shows

By John P. Cortez

In the wake of the fervent patriotism displayed in recent Desert Storm homecoming celebrations, two U.S. automakers will sponsor patriotic national radio specials over the Fourth of July weekend.

General Motors Corp. will exclusively sponsor "Radio Desert Storm," a tribute to U.S. troops at home and still in the Middle East, while Chrysler Corp. is the sole sponsor of "The Americans," a variety show featuring historical vignettes and patriotic music.

"Radio Desert Storm," a 4-hour rock 'n' roll special, will be broadcast on more than 100 FM stations in the U.S. and on Armed Forces Radio to 400 radio stations in 130 countries and U.S. territories.

The show will feature dedications and song requests from U.S. troops remaining in the Persian Gulf. Disc jockeys who worked in the Middle East on Desert Radio Network will also be spinning songs played during the conflict.

Listeners will be able to call an 800-number to make donations to the American Red Cross' Radio Desert Storm Fund. Proceeds aid U.S. troops and their families.

"Radio Desert Storm" is produced by RBM Productions Corp. in conjunction with the Armed Forces Radio & Television Services and the Desert Radio Network.

"The Americans," a 3-hour program to be aired on 300 stations nationwide, presents dramatizations of historic and recent events, sprinkled with selections of contemporary patriotic music.

Lee Alan Productions produced "The Americans." Bozell, New York and Birmingham, Mich., handles.

Both programs are taped and will air at various times throughout the July 4-7 weekend. □ doesn't expire until 1995. But under its provisions, Saatchi isn't required to retain Mr. Spielvogel as ceo beyond September 1992, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus told Ad Age.

Between late 1989 and April 1991, the agency lost $200 million in billings, including the $90 million Miller Lite account from Miller Brewing Co.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said during interviews last week in London and New York that he's already initiated monthly meetings involving himself; Mr. Spielvogel; Martin Tucker, ceo of Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings North America; and the Backer executive committee "to review client satisfaction" and stop problems with clients before they become serious.

He also said he played an active role in the promotion of Ken Rogers to president of Backer's North American operations and the hiring of Executive Creative Director Don Easdon.

The two executives replaced Dean Scaros and Bob Lenz, respectively, both of whom were Mr. Spielvogel's longtime lieutenants.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus was also familiar with Backer's plans to hire new executives to run the Miller Brewing and M&M/Mars accounts and the domestic research operations.

Those plans were completed last week when the agency named Larry Chiagouris, 43, exec VP-director of strategic planning and research from senior VP-director of strategic planning at Bozell. Mr. Chiagouris succeeds Marilyn Silverman, who returns to her worldwide research post.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus also pointed out that while top Backer executives primarily report to Mr. Spielvogel, a "dotted line" reporting relationship exists that also allows them to report to the holding company.

But Mr. Louis-Dreyfus stopped short of saying he would reverse any of Mr. Spielvogel's decisions.

"I've learned one thing," he said. "Orders don't work. Everyone responds to logic. Some quicker, some slower. Changes need to be sold. That's the only way to make it work."

"I've learned one thing: Orders don't work. Everyone responds to logic. . . . Changes need to be sold. That's the only way to make it work."

Robert Louis-Dreyfus

Mr. Spielvogel didn't dispute any of Mr. Louis-Dreyfus' comments, but insisted "my title is ceo of Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide."

Under his contract, Mr. Spielvogel's role could change after September 1992 and he could either retain both titles, keep only one title or relinquish both and become a consultant to the agency until the 1995 contract expiration.

"I don't close any options," Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said the new contract combined elements of a previous pact but for less compensation for Mr. Spielvogel.

"It's not so expensive as before," Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said.

Meanwhile, he indicated that changes in the management structure at Backer's sister agency, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, are also on the horizon.

"By yearend, there will be some changes," he said.

A new arrangement would likely formalize the roles of Saatchi North American CEO Ed Wax in New York and International CEO Dick Humphreys in the U.K., who run the network, as worldwide Co-CEOs Milt Gossett and Stuart Upson become less involved.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus also said that after 18 months at the helm of Saatchi, he's now considering his first acquisitions.

But unlike Saatchi founders Maurice and Charles Saatchi, who had dreams of becoming major players in fields such as consulting and banking, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus' sights are more modest.

He said he's interested in creating an international public relations network and has already begun that with Rowland Worldwide's acquisition last week of Minneapolis-based Sullivan Communications Group (see item on Page 57).

Now Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said he wants to buy or start PR companies in the U.S., Germany, Spain and perhaps the Far East to strengthen Rowland internationally. "All with stock, no cash," he added.

"I'm starting to enjoy very much the job," he said. "The refinancing was not much fun." □ here," he said. "It's as much for the management of the business in terms of administration."

Kodak and Sterling had kept close tabs on the so-called pre-upfront negotiations and deals inked in May even though they weren't active players, Mr. Morrison said.

But, he said: "As of today, we will be active in the upfront."

Kodak pulled the broadcast buying assignments from JWT shortly after the agency named former CBS sales executive Jerry Dominus to the new post of senior VP-director of national TV and programming, in the hopes of rebuilding its network buying reputation.

"This is a business decision," said Kodak's Mr. Morrison. "This is in no way a referendum on Jerry Dominus."

Agencies and dayparts not affected by the Kodak/Sterling consolidation include spot TV buying, which Mediators Inc., New York, handles.

Young & Rubicam is creative agency of record for Kodak cameras and Kodak's Olympics advertising, and isn't affected.

In addition, N W Ayer will continue to buy news programming for Sterling and its divisions; Kodak doesn't normally use news programming.

Sports buys for some Sterling brands are handled by Slater Hanft Martin. □

30% boost to 'restore brand power': Baum

By Judann Dagnoli

Campbell Soup Co., bucking an industry trend, will crank up ad spending 30% in its 1992 fiscal year that begins Aug. 1.

The boost is notable not only because spending was cut in fiscal 1991 but also because the jump is double the company's typical increases during the high-flying '80s.

Campbell spends more than $250 million annually on advertising, according to Advertising Age estimates.

In an exclusive interview last week, Campbell North America President Herb Baum said the company intends to build volume with the spending hike, noting that "we need to restore brand power."

Analysts say such a restoration is needed, because low ad spending could endanger Campbell's long-term volume growth.

"We've discontinued a number of product lines and sold several businesses," Mr. Baum said, so year-to-year volume comparisons can't accurately be made.

Overall marketing spending will be up 5% in fiscal 1992, Mr. Baum said, in contrast to a 5% decline in fiscal 1991.

But ad spending will get the biggest boost, up 30% compared with a 5% drop in 1991. Campbell maintained steady 15% marketing and advertising increases during the mid-1980s.

Mr. Baum said the company will be

O&M 'Lion' snares Grand Prix

By Laurel Wentz

CANNES—A commercial by Ogilvy & Mather Paris for Perrier bottled water won the Grand Prix at the International Advertising Film Festival here June 28.

The Source Perrier spot, France's first Grand Prix winner since 1983, focuses on thirst as a woman and a lion toil up opposite sides of a mountain, meeting at the top to fight over a bottle of Perrier. By roaring more fiercely, the woman wins.

A tough Cannes jury slashed the total number of Lions 42% this year, to 80 from 138, responding to judges' past complaints that too many awards are given. There were no clear favorites for the Grand Prix this year.

Of the 17 Gold Lions awarded, down from 24 in 1990, the U.S. and the U.K. each won five.

The U.S. picked up a total of 14 Lions, second only to the U.K. with 20. U.S. commercials won just four Silvers and five Bronzes this year, compared with seven Silvers and 17 Bronzes last year.

The five U.S. Golds, the same number the U.S.

Malt liquor 'power' failure

By Steven W. Colford and Ira Teinowitz

The U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms this week will order brewers of three malt liquors to discontinue their promotional materials, and then will review beer and wine promotions—all in the wake of the controversy over G. Heileman Brewing Co.'s new Colt 45 PowerMaster.

The bureau objects to point-of-purchase material for Pabst Brewing Co.'s Olde English "800," Stroh Brewery Co.'s Schlitz Red Bull and McKenzie River Co.'s St. Ides, even though these brands previously won bureau approval for their labeling and promotional campaigns.

A senior bureau official last week said the materials are "illegal" because they're based on alcohol content.

■ Special Report: Marketing to African-Americans—Page 18.

In the next few days, letters will be sent to the malt liquor marketers "telling them that it is irresponsible and illegal" to market their products in this fashion, said Dan Black, BATF associate director for compliance operations.

The agency will give the breweries an as yet undetermined amount of time "to cease this type of advertising," he said.

The bureau plans to review labels and advertising, especially POP, for all malt liquors, and then expand that second look to encompass promotional materials for beer, wine and spirits, Mr. Black said.

"We're going to concentrate on malt liquor but will want to see for all [alcohol products] if they are trying to subvert the intent of the [Federal Alcohol Administration] Act by putting something that's not in their ads into the print media that they put in liquor stores," he said.

That law prohibits alcohol mar-

Miller Lite loses 'it'

Burnett's new ads misfire in selling

By Bob Garfield

On a beer truck chugging into the distance, two giant blue letters slide off the back panel, turning the word "Lite" into an inscrutable "it" as the L and E tumble to the road below.

What an apt image for Miller Lite's first full-fledged campaign from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago. Less thrilling. Wastes freight.

The squandered freight, of course, isn't sheet metal signage so much as 17 years worth of brand image value, built on the strength of propitious market timing and one of the greatest ad campaigns in history. By offering most of the flavor and only half of the calories, via self-deprecating ex-jock "spokesguys," Miller Lite became the second-best-selling beer in the U.S.

AD REVIEW

Now, with its growth in the light segment stymied, Miller Brewing Co. is staking its claim not as a low-calories alternative but as "the beer that beer's become." In four new TV spots full of humor and chutzpah and typical beer-commercial charm, Miller conspicuously eschews even passing reference to its legendary less fillingness. "It's it," goes the new theme line. "And that's that."

But "it" isn't, because "less

Saatchi taps Scott for key new position

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Saatchi & Saatchi Co. Chief Executive Robert Louis-Dreyfus this week is expected to name Charles Scott to the new post of chief operating officer, with the intent of assessing him as Mr. Louis-Dreyfus' successor.

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said he's creating the job to give Mr. Scott, now chief financial officer, the general management experience necessary to determine whether he can handle the ceo role and to free himself to focus on long-term strategic issues.

Under this scenario, Mr. Scott, 42, could succeed Mr. Louis-Dreyfus.

"No one's eternal," Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said of his own future at Saatchi. "I won't be there 50 years from now. I'd like to see if [Mr. Scott] can oversee operations and do all that I've done over the last year. I'll think a bit more about future strategy."

C. Scott

Most Saatchi operating companies will report to Mr. Scott rather than to the chief executive, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus said.

Since joining Saatchi in January 1990, Mr. Louis-Dreyfus has made it clear that he has "no idea how long I'll be [at Saatchi]. I always said I'd be [here] between

DMB&B wins $10M in Aussie ad business

LONDON—The Australian Tourist Commission is moving its $10 million European business to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. Chiat/Day/Mojo previously handled in the U.K. and Foote, Cone & Belding on the Continent. The commission is consolidating its $70 million worldwide business with three or four agencies. Next to be reviewed, probably in October, is the $15 million North American business, held by Chiat in the U.S. and Ogilvy & Mather in Canada.

Diamandis back on the prowl

NEW YORK—Peter Diamandis is back on the magazine acquisition trail following the quiet expiration last week of his nine-month no-compete clause with former employer Hachette. "I'm going to start looking. . . . it's a good time to buy," he said. Mr. Diamandis continues as an adviser to TVSM, publisher of The Cable Guide, and said he may take a financial stake in the company.

CHANGING MARKETS: First in a series

Boomers leave a challenge

By Gary Levin

The Pepsi generation is shrinking, and the cola giant is turning to sports drinks and sparkling water to quench more of America's thirst.

The median age of moviegoers is going up, and movie marketers are providing a whole lot more "Pretty Women" than "Terminators."

Even Sheraton Hotels is fretting that tiny typefaces in print ads won't reach the travelers becoming a more important part of its customer base.

Yes, the aging of baby boomers, perhaps the most coveted market in marketing history, is leading to profound and subtle changes across a number of U.S. industries.

"There are going to be fewer films for mindless young boys with Los Angeles high-school educations."

In the next decade, the population in the 18-to-34 set, 70 million strong in 1990, will drop nearly 11%, the U.S. Census Bureau estimates. That means a shift in emphasis, with soft drinks, snack foods, restaurants and beer—to name a few—most likely to be affected, researchers say.

"The particular segment of the market that was courted so passionately by lots of industries is a leveling-off market," said Fabian Linden, executive director of the Conference Board's consumer research center. "They no longer have the population explosion going for them."

Conversely, categories targeting older audiences will benefit as their universe of customers expands: cosmetics, the leisure travel industry, healthcare and entertainment, to name a few.

Several factors, however, complicate the once neat cor-

A VOICE OF THE TIMES

When the oldest continuously published monthly magazine in America turns Hot people in the ad community want to know why.

Why was The Atlantic up 42% in ad pages for 1989 and 1990? Why has The Atlantic been named to Adweek's list of "10 Hottest Magazines" for the second year in a row? Why does The Atlantic continue to perform well in the treacherous economic waters of 1991?

You, our advertisers, made it happen. And continue to make it happen.

- You recognize The Atlantic's pre-eminent editorial as the place to get across your advertising messages.
- You see The Atlantic's educated lifestyle niche as a place to find readers who are both upscale and smart.
- You know The Atlantic's audience of influential movers and shakers matters in its own right and in shaping the decision-making patterns of others.
- And you understand that now, more than ever before, The Atlantic is a voice of the times.

For now is a time when what you know matters as much as what you have. And as the majority of the population (a little older and a little wiser) looks to understand the world around them, they turn to the magazine and its readers to help them make sense of that world.

The Atlantic has been described as the nation's dining-room table — a place where business people, scientists, politicians, teachers, writers, members of the clergy, the military, Republicans, and Democrats can regularly hear one another speak.

The voices are often eloquent, the subjects are wide-ranging, but most important of all is who's listening.

All of this explains why more and more of you are coming to the table with your advertising messages.

The Atlantic is a voice of the times — and a great place to be heard.

Brack tracks changes at Time Inc.

The nation's largest consumer publisher, Time Inc. Magazine Co., has emerged as a leader in multimagazine and cross-media packaging and is restructuring its sales force to intensify that effort. At the same time, its Time Publishing Ventures division is pushing forward with the aggressive launch of Martha Stewart Living and related properties.

Reginald K. Brack Jr., chairman, president and ceo of Time Inc. Magazine Co. and chairman of the Magazine Publishers of America, discussed with Advertising Age Reporter Scott Donaton the state of the magazine industry in general and his company in particular.

ONE ON ONE

Advertising Age: Time Inc. is restructuring its sales force, putting in place four corporate regional VPs to whom all single-title reps will report. What is the goal behind the realignment?

Mr. Brack: Simply put, it's to get closer to our customers. This puts four of our most capable sales directors that much closer to our customers and gives them responsibility for all of our magazines, where before they were each responsible for one magazine. Being able to talk to customers about all of our properties certainly has been successful. This doesn't change the way we sell as much as the way we manage. Each [rep] will continue to sell the individual titles. That's critical.

AA: How will the new structure change the role of the publishers and ad directors at the individual magazines?

Mr. Brack: It will enable the publishers to focus even more on building the brand identity and take some of the burden off them for ad sales. It will enable the sales directors to do more to make sure that our magazines are priced properly, promoted properly and sold properly. We see those jobs really being enhanced, not diminished.

AA: Time Inc. has emerged as a leader in the field of corporate ad sales through major deals with the likes of General Motors, Chrysler and Mazda. Why?

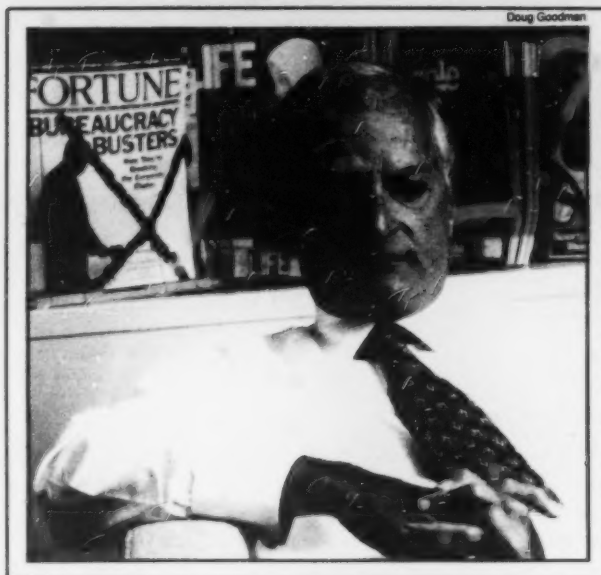
Mr. Brack: There is enough homogeneity in our magazines and our audiences—enough tonnage, enough reach, enough frequency—that through a combination of our weeklies and our monthlies, we're able to do a disproportionately large percentage of a given advertiser's job. And the foundation of these packages really is the magazines. We start with that foundation, enhance it with a lot of special programs and then add to that cable television, books, custom publishing.

Doug Goodman



"We're not doing what we're doing to build share, although that results from it. What we're really trying to do is to bring dollars in to our magazines, wherever they come from. . . . It's not a share battle. This is a long-term strategy."

Reginald Brack

AA: There's somewhat of a concern that these types of packages are more of a short-term way to build share during a weak period than a wave of the future.

Mr. Brack: We're not doing what we're doing to build share, although that results from it. What we're really trying to do is to bring dollars in to our magazines, wherever they come from. In none of these cases are we sitting down with another single magazine or publishing company in mind and saying, "Because we're Time Warner, we can do it better than Newsweek or Conde Nast or Hearst." We're trying to work closely enough with advertisers and agencies to understand what a company is really trying to do, and then bring all our assets together to get more dollars, probably from places other than magazines, into our magazines. It's not a share battle. This is a long-term strategy.

AA: "[illegible] at about the argument that these types of deals commoditize media?

Mr. Brack: First of all, I have trouble with the word "deal" because that implies some kind of a cut-rate price. That is not the case here. We are not doing anything for any single advertiser that we would not do for another under the same circumstances.

As to commoditization, that's something I worry a lot about for the whole industry, certainly for our magazines. But if you're doing a good enough job of understanding the customers' needs and fitting the right combinations of magazines, you're really accen-

THE SECRETS OF NEW PRODUCT SUCCESS. A FREE SAMPLE.

1. Great ideas aren't the answer.

Just as a good idea may stop you from going on to discover a great one, a great idea may stop you from going on to discover the right one. After you get a great idea, continue to look for the right idea.

2. Exact appropriateness.

Every product has a small group of words and pictures that are exactly appropriate to it. When the time is taken to discover them and weave them together expertly, recall goes way up and top-of-mind awareness in the category is preempted.

3. News, with style.

The excitement of a concept board or test commercial must come from the clear communication of news about the product. Style comes from clarity and precision, not cleverness that subordinates the news. Even when image is all important, it takes the form of news, not so much inherent in the product, but invented.

4. Efficiency in communication.

Maximum efficiency in mass communication is one word—a name that says everything. Second is a slogan that contains the name. After that, people have to remember two or more things to know your message. Efficiency goes down, and media expenditures lose impact.

5. The disappearing concept board.

Most people test concept boards and commercials. The right concept board or commercial tests the product—by allowing the consumer to see right through it to the product shown in its best light.

We're top, award-winning creative people who've specialized in new products for over 15 years. So we've discovered a lot of unique secrets that have helped bring success to many leading companies.

We also put new life in old brands.

Let us make a presentation. If you retain us for a project, you'll move your new products program to a new, and generally unavailable level—where business-as-usual simply can't take you.

Just call and ask for Tom. The secrets of new product success don't have to remain secrets to you.

Cannes Gold turns silver

Award flood slows; disputes, silver prizes liven ceremony

By Laurel Wentz

CANNES—The abrupt halt of award inflation at this year's International Advertising Film Festival left organizers scrambling for Silver Lions to distribute at the awards ceremony.

The jury awarded so few prizes that, for the first time, festival organizers had to fill time during the June 29 ceremony by handing out Gold Lions hastily repainted as Silvers.

"They told us to be careful the paint didn't come off on us and we had to give them back afterward," said Donald Gunn, Chicago-based senior VP-director of creative resources at Leo Burnett Co., which won three Lions.

The 80 commercials that won awards this year represented a 42% fall from 138 in 1990 and 57.7% less than the 189 awarded in 1989.

Judges and former judges attributed the drop to a tough jury, fewer good commercials and a new system of scrutinizing computer printouts of votes cast to spot unusually high marks indicating vote trading.

"If we'd given 160 this year, next year's jury would have awarded 180," said Fernando Ocana, chairman of TAPSA/N W Ayer, Madrid, and one of this year's Spanish judges.

Some judges thought even 80 Lions—the Grand Prix, 17 Golds, 19 Silvers and 43 Bronzes—were too many.

"They should make them really scarce," said David Horry, creative director, Still Price:Lintas, London, and a U.K. judge. "The fewer, the merrier. I thought the general standard of entries was appalling I would have taken most of the Bronzes away and said they're not worth anything."

Even the Grand Prix winner, Ogilvy & Mather Paris' French Source Perrier spot featuring a woman roaring back at a lion, wasn't universally popular.

Before the final choice, the jury split 16-7 between the Perrier commercial and GGK London's U.K. campaign for the Electricity Association featuring animated animals explaining why electric heating suited their lifestyles.

Critics complained the Perrier spot was beautifully executed but lacked a strong idea.

"I'm totally in favor of a much stricter judging process," said Marcio Moreira, vice chairman-chief creative officer-international at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

The Perrier spot was booed by the audience at the awards ceremony. A visibly upset Jean-Paul Goude, the spot's director, dropped the award on the stage and mouthed obscenities at the crowd.

"Perrier for me was one of the great, powerful images of the week," said Richard Barker, European creative director of D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, London, and a U.K. judge. "When the girl roars and roars and her mouth opens wider and wider, it's extraordinary." □

Challenges arise as boomers age

relation between age and consumer behavior.

The growth of minorities, postponed childbearing and increased longevity all are leading to larger, more extended and more financially strained families even as population growth slows.

Indeed, some experts contend age alone is no longer a reliable barometer of what people buy.

In the 1990s, "marital status and kids are more important determinants of consumer behavior than age and income," said Thomas Exter, research director at American Demographics.

For instance, married couples with kids represent 23% of the U.S. population, but they account for 41% of grocery sales. Parents of young children are increasingly part of an older demographic group, yet they still buy diapers, formula and milk.

Because of its sheer numbers, "the market will follow the boomers," said Laurel Cutler, vice chairman and worldwide director of marketing planning at FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York. "The biggest thing that's happened to boomers is not how much they've aged but how much they've matured."

"What we're sensing is this is a group looking for more 'dazzle-and-delight-me' kinds of foods in terms of taste and flavor."

Anthony Adams
Campbell Soup Co.

She noted a trend to postponed from instant gratification that dovetails with what's now viewed as an excessive mid- to late 1980s.

Perhaps equally significant, Americans increasingly belie their physical age.

"The baby boom, unique as it is, is not moving in lockstep with age as generations did previously," said Barbara Caplan, a VP at Yankelovich Clancy Shulman. "It's not as if a bell rang and you start drinking coffee or stop wearing certain clothes. People now are not governed in such a conforming way."

For marketers that traditionally targeted age groups that are now shrinking, that's welcome news.

"We had a lot of concern historically that [demographic shifts] would have negative impact on our business," said Dwight Riskey, VP-new products and market research at Frito-Lay, a unit of PepsiCo, whose soft-drink and restaurant holdings also target youthful audiences.

"The Pepsi generation, people who basically grew up snacking on chips, are actually carrying their consumption patterns with them a lot more than some anticipated," Mr. Riskey said, referring to what social scientists call the "cohort phenomenon." "We believe at least half the category growth [of 4% last year] is attributable to that."

"This generation, more than other generations, tends to hang onto the values and attitudes of its youth," said Michael Porter, director of marketing at Stroh Brewery Co. "I don't see them suddenly turning off of beer. Perhaps their total consumption will decline, or they may alter their brand selections for reasons of alcohol or caloric intake, but I suspect they'll drink beer all their lives."

Still, marketers say they must adapt to changing tastes, even if consumers keep using many of the same products as they grow older. Many have already anticipated the population shifts.

Stroh cites the growth of low-alcohol and no-alcohol beers as one of the bright spots in the industry.

While Frito-Lay hasn't abandoned the fat- and sodium-laden chips on which its business was built, the company has tried to ensure steady growth with a flurry of new products that anticipate boomers' changing tastes.

In the past year alone, Frito-Lay has tested wheat-based Suprimos chips and introduced nationally Sunchips whole-grain snacks and "light" line extensions of several existing brands.

Surprisingly, most buyers of those products aren't current Ruffles eaters but "users we lost or never had in the first place," Mr. Riskey said.

Although snack foods are consumed most often by teen-agers, whimsical ads for the light products are aimed squarely at people ages 19 to 22, "the point at which we'd see some people dropping out of the category," he said.

Pepsi-Cola Co. itself is hedging its bets with H2Oh! sparkling water, All-Sport isotonic drinks and a heavier marketing emphasis on diet soft drinks, root beer and even morning consumption.

"Obviously, we have to look into other areas, dayparts, new products and audiences for volume growth," said Gary Gerdemann, Pepsi-Cola public relations manager, who prefers to attribute the shifts to competitive, not demographic reasons. "No market segment, product line or niche is safe. We're looking everywhere."

Cadbury Schweppes' Canada Dry brand has stepped up its boomer-targeted advertising, and A&W Brands has bought several niche products such as Squirt and Vernors, most targeting the 25-plus crowd.

"The minute we begin to see erosion in consumption [among our target audience], we would make changes in our media buying" by shifting ad dollars between TV and radio to target different age groups, said Paul St. Germain, VP-advertising at A&W.

Few businesses have reacted to the demographic shifts as deeply as the fast-food category, where companies have made radical shifts in their menus, their marketing and their operations.

McDonald's Corp., Burger King Corp. and Wendy's International added salads in the '80s to lure women ages 25 and older; McDonald's is now testing pizza and pasta as dinnertime-only entrees in a similar attempt to broaden its appeal.

"As the number of children declines, you will have a much larger group of people who, with college tuition for their kids out of the way, will have more discretionary income as they get into their mid-50s. Our marketing emphasis will have to be more on leisure and on travel packages."

Ed Stahl
ITT Sheraton Corp.

For several years now, the supermarket food business has expanded its lineup of upscale products to meet the more sophisticated tastes of older, more free-spending consumers.

"There's a high per capita spending on food as you get older, and that's good for lines such as premium dinners," said Anthony Adams, director of market research at Campbell Soup Co. "What we're sensing is this is a group looking for more 'dazzle-and-delight-me' kinds of foods in terms of taste and flavor."

Campbell has broadened its line of "healthy" foods and restaged its LeMenu LightStyle frozen dinners as LeMenu HealthyStyle, reaching a slightly older audience.

"For marketers like Campbell's that have been tried and true, we're saying, 'Get up there in your 40s and 50s!' " Mr. Adams said, adding that on average, Campbell's weakest link is with the now-shrinking 18-to-24 crowd.

"We've never done particularly well with that group," he said. "They felt they graduated from Campbell's when they left home."

Levi Strauss & Co.'s Dockers apparel line is among the most successful efforts to target aging yuppies. Introduced just five years ago, the line's sales are now more than $600 million, about 20% of Levi's total sales.

At the same time, Levi's has broadened its line of what the company calls "men's 25-plus" jeans to adapt to a broader man.

Reflecting sales trends, Levi's now splits its $33 million ad budget about equally between Dockers and traditional Levi's; in 1988, it spent only a third of its total budget on older-targeted denims.

"We've been looking at changing demographics for the last 10 years," said Dan Chew, Levi's marketing manager, who notes the market for the 25-plus group has grown by a million people a year in the past decade. "That's a business that's just too compelling to ignore."

Still, a potential problem: Older men currently buy an average of two pairs of denims a year, while the shrinking young adult population buys more than twice as many.

Joe Wissert

"Detroit lost the boomers, and now [automakers] are not focusing as they should on the post-boomer generation of 18-to-25-year-olds. Their habits are not formed, they don't have cars and now that Detroit's quality is far more competitive with Japan, they're not doing anything about getting them back."

Laurel Cutler
FCB/Leber Katz Partners

The domestic automobile business similarly has lost ground as baby-boomers have driven in droves to the import market—from luxury BMWs to economical Hyundais.

And, domestic car buyers might not move up to full-size cars the way their parents embraced station wagons, said Stephen Lyons, advertising manager for Ford Motor Co.'s Lincoln-Mercury Division.

"Detroit lost the boomers, and now [automakers] are not focusing as they should on the post-boomer generation of 18-to-25-year-olds," said FCB/Leber Katz's Ms. Cutler, a former vice chairman at Chrysler Corp. "Their habits are not formed, they don't have cars and now that Detroit's quality is far more competitive with Japan, they're not doing anything about getting them back."

Several marketers welcome the inexorable aging of the population, particularly those that cater to empty-nest parents with more to spend and more time to spend it.

"You are going to have a more affluent group with more discretionary income," said Ed Stahl, VP-advertising and marketing programming at ITT Sheraton Corp. "As the number of children declines, you will have a much larger group of people who, with college tuition for their kids out of the way, will have more discretionary income as they get into their mid-50s. Our marketing emphasis will have to be more on leisure and on travel packages."

Mr. Stahl will tread carefully, since older consumers "don't want to be singled out" and told they're old, he said.

Sheraton and other marketers must keep them in mind in subtler ways, he said; "We also have to be sensitive to type size in ads."

Hollywood, too, reflects the demographic shift.

Moviegoers older than 40 accounted for 23% of theater admissions in 1989, up from 14% in 1986, according to Motion Picture Association of America estimates, while 12-to-20-year-olds fell to 30% from 35%.

David Lawrence

"The Pepsi generation, people who basically grew up snacking on chips, are actually carrying their consumption patterns with them a lot more than some anticipated."

Dwight Riskey
Frito-Lay

Those changing demographics are a large part of the success of what Hollywood calls "story-driven" films, like last year's "Pretty Woman," "Ghost" and "Dances With Wolves," said Jack Holland, VP-marketing at AMC Theaters, the nation's second-largest exhibitor.

"There are going to be fewer films for mindless young boys with Los Angeles high-school educations," said Barry Lorie, exec VP-marketing, MGM-Pathe Entertainment.

But the changes as America ages will be more than skin deep.

"The shift as the baby-boomers move through the generations will be in product mix," said Dan Brestle, president of Estee Lauder Cos.' Prescriptives USA unit. Older consumers need products for dry skin, for example, and Prescriptives expects moisturizers and creams—said to be among the most profitable cosmetics lines—to account for a larger proportion of sales.

Mr. Brestle said Prescriptives has de-emphasized appeals to specific age groups in its advertising entirely and now rarely uses models at all. □

Puritan oil returns to Grey

CINCINNATI—Procter & Gamble Co. moved its $10 million Puritan oil account back to Grey Advertising from N W Ayer, both New York. Grey already has the company's $11 million Crisco account. The account moved to Ayer last summer; the move back to Grey was prompted by the decision to market both brands under the Crisco banner.

Tambrands review on hold?

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y.—The $30 million-plus Tambrands account review has apparently been delayed following the departure of VP-Marketing Celene Varasano. Sources said the three finalists, incumbent Ally & Gargano, BBDO Worldwide and McCann-Erickson Worldwide, all New York, had expected a decision as early as this week. But now, the shops are slated to meet Aug. 8 with Tambrands CEO Martin Emmett. A company spokesman wouldn't confirm the meeting; he confirmed Ms. Varasano's departure but said it wouldn't affect the review.

AmEx eyes K-III deal

Possible magazine 'alliance' could help both

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—American Express Co. may soon approach K-III Holdings to discuss some form of "strategic alliance" of their consumer magazine operations, said a source familiar with AmEx's plans.

It's unclear what shape such an alliance might take, but the possibilities ranged from an outright merger of the publishing companies to the formation of an ad sales partnership, the source said.

However, it appears likely Thomas O. Ryder, president-executive publisher of American Express Publishing Corp., would oversee the combined company if a merger results.

AmEx and K-III executives declined comment late last week.

K-III, a partnership controlled by investment banker Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., last month completed a $650 million acquisition of nine publications, including eight consumer magazines, from Rupert Murdoch's News Corp.

"Anything's possible because K-III is run by money people, not magazine people."

The company is nearing the conclusion of a search for a president to oversee the consumer magazines, and observers had speculated K-III might try to acquire AmEx's magazine group and/or hire Mr. Ryder, a respected magazine industry veteran.

The source close to AmEx said a more likely scenario would be a joint venture between the two companies.

"This notion of putting together a big company . . . is not a crazy notion," the source said. "In all [the rumors], there is a nugget of an idea."

Mr. Ryder's mandate is to boost AmEx Publishing, the source said, and it appeared unlikely he would leave AmEx since he's considered a potential successor to Chairman-CEO James Robinson. In addition to the

Nestle, Unilever trying to ensure agency pay adequate

By Laurel Wentz

Nestle and Unilever, two of the world's largest consumer-product marketers, are looking at loosening the purse strings with their ad agencies.

The marketers, which combined spend an estimated $5 billion on advertising worldwide, seem to have separately concluded that the industry's rampant compensation-cutting trend may have sliced too deep.

"The tendency of the industry has been too hard on the agencies to cut down commissions," said Michel Reinarz, director of visual communication for Nestle. "As a big advertiser, we see the need to maintain the quality of agencies."

"The tendency of the industry has been too hard on the agencies to cut down commissions."

He said Nestle, spending about $1.5 billion a year on advertising worldwide, has put together its first compensation policy dealing with the issue.

Nestle uses five preferred agencies: McCann-Erickson Worldwide, Ogilvy & Mather, Lintas:Worldwide, J. Walter Thompson Co. and Publicis FCB.

"Both [Nestle and Unilever] have listened to the pros and cons and are determined compensation should not be settled at too low a level and locally," said an agency executive familiar with both companies. "They

Recession stalks food aisles

By Jonathan Dahl and Julie Liesse

The packaged food industry, long considered recession-proof, is proving vulnerable to a weak economy after all.

The bottom line is that consumers aren't necessarily eating any less than before but they're eating cheaper, industry experts say.

During the height of the recession, in the first quarter of this year, retail-food dollar volume fell 1.4%, say food industry executives who acknowledged the downturn caught them by surprise.

"Our original philosophy was that the recession wouldn't affect retail food sales," said Stop & Shop Supermarkets Chairman John Y. Lee. "We figured people wouldn't eat out as much and supermarket sales volume would increase. But there's been a drop."

Also, what's being bought in supermarkets is being bought in the cheap.

Marketers are spending and more cautiously, and consumers are redeeming more store, manufacturer coupons, CMS

Coupon use will be up 2% to 3% this year to 7.5 billion, all in short supply, in the face of a dip in coupon redemption, said Kris Prasad, CMS' marketing research manager.

Private label brands are on the upswing, too.

Burnett tests hookup with Atlanta agency

By Scott Hume

CHICAGO—Leo Burnett Co. has established a non-equity partnership with an Atlanta agency and is considering similar arrangements in other markets.

The move represents a softening of the No. 1 U.S. agency's traditional aversion to branch offices.

Leo Burnett USA, national agency for General Motors Corp.'s Oldsmobile division, has been quietly working in tandem with Anderson, Dusenbury & Alban, a year-old shop that handles the Southern Olds Family, the local Oldsmobile dealers association.

The two agencies are sharing national marketing plans, local perspectives on promotions and local retailer reaction to national programs. Burnett also makes available training programs, consumer research and media analysis.

The partnership is a test to "determine whether strong cooperation with strong regional agencies will better build our clients' local business in specific markets," said Jim Oates, vice chairman-client services for Leo Burnett USA.

The agency is exploring similar cooperative agreements with shops in other markets where they share clients with local distribution networks. That could include such Burnett clients as Black & Decker Corp., McDonald's Corp., Miller Brewing Co., Schenley Industries and Seven-Up Co.

But the agency said it's still evaluating Atlanta and is simply studying whether to extend the approach.

Burnett USA had billings last year of $2.035 billion. It has service/production offices in Los Angeles, New York and Southfield, Mich., but traditionally has centralized account services, creative and media functions at its headquarters and has shunned opening branch offices.

The agency is casting local-area marketing services as an extension of the Retail Marketing Group, formed in January. That unit encompasses sales promotion and event marketing services; another internal division handles direct marketing.

Anderson President Ernest Anderson worked as an account exec at Burnett from 1967 to 1971, when he moved to Atlanta. In 1990, the agency's first year, it had billings of $10.5 million. It also handles regional work for Lanier Worldwide's voice products and NAPA automotive stores. □

McD pecks at KFC's turf

By Scott Hume

McDonald's Corp. is getting serious about going head to head with chicken champ Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp.

McDonald's is testing skinless, oven-roasted chicken in four stores in Kankakee, Ill., while it expands the availability of fried chicken wings in Chicago and several other urban markets.

A McDonald's Corp. spokeswoman confirmed the four-store test, which she called "an operational test." The spokeswoman said it's too early for the company to decide whether to expand the test.

Two years ago, franchisees in Texas briefly tested fried chicken, but McDonald's now believes skinless, roast chicken better meets consumer health concerns.

McDonald's latest chicken product, sold from 10:30 a.m. until closing, is priced at $1.99 for a leg and thigh; $2.99 for a leg, thigh and breast; and $7.99 for a nine-piece box. A two-piece "meal combo" with fries and coleslaw is priced at $2.99; the three-piece combo is $3.99.

Advertising has been limited to point-of-purchase merchandising. McDonald's national agency, Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, is handling the test's promotional materials.

McDonald's is trying special ovens as well as its current ovens, used for baking biscuits, to roast chicken, the spokeswoman said.

McDonald's per-store sales have been declining quarterly for more than two years.

KFC apparently agrees about going skinless. Earlier this month, the chicken leader changed to Skinfree Crispy the name of a skinless fried chicken now rolling national. The product, previously called Lite'n Crispy, is available in stores in the Northeast and Southeast but should be national by yearend.

Where sold, the skinless product already accounts for one-third of sales, the company said.

In Midwest and Western markets not selling Skinfree Crispy, KFC has been selling Honey BBQ Wings, as well as the Hot Wings product it introduced nationally last year. KFC also continues to test its own version of roast chicken in Las Vegas stores.

Young & Rubicam, New York, handles KFC's national advertising.

Chicken chains accounted for sales of $5.22 billion in 1990, or 9.8% of the $53.5 billion in total sales by the top 100 fast-food chains, according to Technomic, a consultancy. KFC's $3.2 billion in U.S. sales gave it a commanding 61.5% share.

Hamburger chains had sales of $27 billion, of which McDonald's $12.25 billion represents 45.4%.

But McDonald's per-store sales have been declining quarterly for more than two years, pushing the chain to look at more and different menu items to spark consumer interest.

It recently added Chicken Fajitas and a Breakfast Burrito to its menu nationally as limited-time items. □

Jordan jumping for Gatorade

By Julie Liesse

CHICAGO—Quaker Oats Co. in early August plans to announce the signing of Michael Jordan as Gatorade spokesman.

Quaker already has filmed TV spots with the Chicago Bulls superstar and has produced a magazine insert scheduled for a late summer debut, said sources close to the deal.

To maintain secrecy, Quaker agency Bayer Bess Vanderwarker and Mr. Jordan's management team filmed the spots abroad, these sources said.

Mr. Jordan and his representatives at ProServ also likely felt a need to observe his Coca-Cola Co. contract, which expires July 31.

Quaker executives officially would say only that no contract with Mr. Jordan has been signed yet; ProServ officials refused to confirm or deny the reports, which initially surfaced during the National Basketball Association playoffs (AA, June 10).

M. Jordan

Luring Mr. Jordan is a reported $18 million, multiyear deal with Gatorade, and a starring role in the sports drink's advertising. He's been a peripheral part of the multifaceted advertising for Coca-Cola Classic—appearing in only two TV spots, albeit heavy media buys.

Coca-Cola last week said it was still negotiating with Mr. Jordan.

Coca-Cola spokesman Bob Bertini said the current spot starring Mr. Jordan is scheduled to run through the end of this month.

Industry estimates pin Mr. Jordan's total endorsement fees at $11 million to $15 million yearly, in deals with a broad range of local and national marketers including Nike, McDonald's Corp., General Mills' Wheaties, Chevrolet dealers and Sara Lee Corp.'s Hanes underwear.

Gatorade, which five years ago was cautious about its ties to specific professional athletes in U.S. advertising, has more aggressively sought to capitalize on the ubiquitous presence of its orange coolers on the sidelines of most major league baseball, football and basketball games.

Quaker traditionally spends about $30 million a year in media advertising for Gatorade in the U.S., via Bayer Bess. □

Tune in, drop out

Network viewers least likely to switch channels

By Joe Mandese

TV viewers are less likely to tune out network TV shows than programming on other TV outlets, the Network Television Association reports.

MEDIA WORKS

A recent study based on prime-time viewing patterns in four major markets shows viewers are less likely to tune out highly rated shows. Since the Big 3 broadcast networks have the greatest share of high-rated programming, the association's study concludes network TV viewers are the least likely to change channels.

Conducted Nov. 12 to 18, the study shows that during the average 30-second viewing segment, only 2.9% of the Big 3's viewers tuned to another channel, while 4.2% of Fox Broadcasting Co.'s viewers zapped its shows (see chart). Independent TV stations lost an average of 5.2% of their audience to viewer volatility; among cable networks Cable News Network, ESPN, the Family Channel, WTBS and USA Network, an average of 9.8% of audiences tuned out.

The association's findings appear to contradict research conducted by now-defunct research company Television Audience Assessment. During the mid-1980s, that group's research indicated viewer involvement was more tied to a show's content than its ratings. For example, with CBS' highly rated shows "60 Minutes" and "The Dukes of Hazzard," viewers were more involved and less likely to tune out "60 Minutes" than "Dukes."

The study says the more involved viewers were with a TV program, the more likely they would stay tuned to commercials during that program. □

Public broadcasting station-member magazines hope a combination buy will lure more national marketers.

PBS title network woos national ads

News briefs on print, electronic and alternative media.

Networking. The member magazines of six public broadcasting TV stations have joined forces to create the Public Broadcasting National Print Network in an effort to attract more national ads. The upscale monthlies have a combined paid circulation of 951,000 in Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, San Diego, Seattle and Washington. A b&w page with the network is $18,635; a color page is $26,289. Target categories include travel, books, entertainment and the arts, said Gwyn Price, West Coast network manager and ad director of On Air, the member magazine of KPBS-TV, San Diego. The magazines had relied on local ads and a handful of national ads from the underwriters of public television. At least one more title is expected to join by yearend.

Student orientation. Modern Talking Pictures Service, New York, in September introduces Modern College TV, running on monitors in high-traffic areas on 160 college campuses, targeting 1.8 million students. The video digest carries programming developed monthly as well as spots ranging from 30 seconds to 3-minute infomercials. Four half-hour segments run continuously for a month. A :30 costs $5,625, a :60 is $11,250 and a 3-minute slot is $33,000. Advertisers already signed include package goods and finanical services marketers as well as the federal government.

Impersonating a winner. Black Entertainment Television, Burger King Corp., Delta Air Lines and Essence have teamed for the Burger King "True Identity" contest. Through Aug. 1, contestants call a 900 number and record their 30-second celebrity impersonation. The 10 best win a trip to Pleasure Island for the premiere of "True Identity," from Walt Disney Co.'s Touchstone Films. An ad in Essence and a spot on BET support. Uni-World Group, New York, handles the promotion for Burger King. Buena Vista Pictures, Los Angeles, handles for the others.

National Lampoon tries TV. National Lampoon Inc., Los Angeles, this month launches its first national TV campaign with spots on cable networks including MTV: Music Television, VH-1: Video Hits One and Nickelodeon. A second flight breaks in the fall on independent TV stations in the top 20 markets, targeting men 18 to 34. Direct Response Marketing, Encino, Calif., handles.

Off-net is on target. Off-network series and purchased movies give basic cable networks the highest ratings, according to a Warner Bros. study released last week. Research of first-quarter viewership of eight leading basic cable networks showed "popular, high-quality, off-net series are basic cable's highest-rated daily programming and acquired movies—theatrical and off-network made-for-TV features—are basic cable's highest-rated non-sports-related one-time programming," said Edward Bleier, president of Warner Bros. Pay-TV, Animation & Network Features. □

Juice & More, or less

Gerber stops test of adult drink after 10 months

By John P. Cortez

Gerber Products Co.'s latest foray into adult foods is over after less than a year.

Gerber has stopped production of Juice & More, a fiber-fortified beverage aimed at health-conscious adults. The baby food marketer had been testing the product on the East Coast since last September.

The termination signals the end of Gerber's latest attempt to move its brand name into the adult market.

"The company is directing all its efforts toward its Superbrand strategy," said spokesman Jim Lovejoy, adding that Gerber products will be aimed squarely at children 3 and under. Gerber has positioned itself as a "Superbrand" that provides food, clothing and care items for infants and toddlers under one brand name.

Gerber's investment in Juice & More totaled nearly $20 million, but the beverage failed to make much of a dent in the $8.4 billion U.S. juice market. The juice was sold in 7,000 supermarkets in 10 Eastern cities.

A 1960s attempt at selling single-serving entrees to older adults also failed.

"Adults don't like to eat or drink baby products," said Roger Spencer, analyst with PaineWebber.

Gerber dominates the U.S. baby food industry with a 72% share of the $940 million market in 1990. In the fiscal year ended March 31, the company reported earnings were up 19% to $112.8 million on sales of $1.2 billion, up 3.7%.

J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, handled Juice & More until February, when Gerber consolidated its $15 million to $20 million baby food and general merchandise account at Grey Advertising, New York. □ impression that Sloan's offers a lower-price shopping trip," Mr. Rose said.

Consumer belt tightening is putting the heat on food marketers to meet volume goals by yearend, and many are responding by pouring on price promotions.

"Manufacturers are promoting the bejesus out of the business," said Gary Stibel, principal of the New England Consulting Group. "[They] have to make their quarterly [profit] numbers, and they're panicking."

"Manufacturers are promoting the bejesus out of the business. [They] have to make their quarterly [profit] numbers, and they're panicking."

The recession has been a mixed blessing for some companies, which had strong first-quarter sales in low-price lines while more expensive ones slipped.

Best Foods President Robert Gillespie said sales of the company's Thomas English muffins declined last year but the company's less expensive bread lines picked up—a trend that continued into the first quarter of 1991.

Dollar sales of English muffins declined 7% during the quarter and volume was down 4%, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service. And while fresh-bread dollar volume overall was down 1% in the first quarter, lower-price lines such as Interstate Brands Corp.'s Butternut and Ralston Purina Co.'s Wonder were up 2% each.

The situation is similar at Campbell Soup Co., where the premium-price Pepperidge Farm line of bakery products showed volume declines of up to 7% during the company's fiscal 1991 ending July 31, but the value-price Swanson frozen dinner line scored a 15% record volume gain.

The company's inexpensively priced condensed-soup line is also up 4% after years of flat growth, said Campbell North America President Herb Baum.

Campbell, in fact, tried to turn the recession to its advantage in a trade ad that ran in February in Supermarket News, promoting a survey in which homemakers cited Campbell as the brand name they turn to "in tough times." FCB/LGK, Philadelphia, handles Campbell's trade account.

While trading down is common in recessions, consumer reaction in this recession is unlike past ones, said John Blair, VP-marketing services at Quaker Oats Co.

"Not all the same kinds of foods are doing well," he said. "We've seen a bit of a response in staple products like pancake mix, but it's not the response we saw in the last recession—nor have we seen a sales surge in hot cereals as we did last time."

Consumers are also more resistant to price increases, said Best Foods' Mr. Gillespie. He cited his company's Skippy peanut butter, which was raised in price earlier this year due to a poor crop.

"Peanut butter is a more price-sensitive category than even two or three years ago and much more than in the last recession," he said.

According to InfoScan, peanut butter pound volume in supermarkets plunged 11% in the first quarter.

Higher resistance to price increases is also hurting olive oil, a category that enjoyed consistent double-digit volume gains in the 1980s.

"The updraft driving the frozen category is the microwave."

Bertolli USA President Bill Monroe said a poor olive crop led the company to hike the price of a half-liter bottle 27.1% to $4.69 and unit sales plummeted 20% in the first quarter.

The price hike was followed by competitors and category unit volume sputtered down by 10%, he said.

As a result, Mr. Monroe said, Bertolli will spend "less than $1 million on advertising" in the second half, shifting a remaining $2 million initially earmarked for advertising into couponing and co-op ads with retailers.

The recession has also slowed the growth of orange juice consumption, said Bob Behr, economic research director for the Florida Department of Citrus. That led the department to reconfigure its 18% sales increase prediction for 1991 downward to 13%.

But chilled orange juice consumption is still up, indicating consumers' need for convenience may outweigh their need to save money, a phenomenon that's also apparent in frozen dinners and entrees.

InfoScan reports frozen dinner and entree dollar sales up 2%, with unit volume down; but Quaker's Mr. Blair said the market seems to be more protected this time around.

"The updraft driving the frozen category is the microwave," he said.

And as consumers look to save money, a few frozen food categories may actually benefit. Frozen breakfast sales jumped 3.5% in the first quarter while the $1.1 billion frozen pizza market rose 5%, IRI says.

Although some observers believe those sales are coming at the expense of fast-food marketers like McDonald's Corp. and Domino's Pizza, the restaurant industry in general seems to be faring better than many expected.

"Foodservice still is outperforming supermarkets," said Ron Paul, president of Technomic Consultants, a restaurant consulting company.

The industry showed 0.1% real growth for the 12 months ended in April 1991, compared with the 12 months ended April 1990, he said. Despite an 0.8% drop in real growth in January compared with the same period a year ago, Technomic recorded a 0.2% rise in real growth in February.

But for supermarket brands, there may be no upturn until at least the fourth quarter of this year, consultant Mr. Stibel said.

"Foodservice still is outperforming supermarkets."

"On average, 1991 will turn out to be a poor year for the advertising industry," he said. "Manufacturers who had not prepared for the recession will have to continue to dramatically trim their investment spending." □ solely liable for payment to the extent proceeds have cleared from the Advertiser to the Agency for advertising published in accordance with the contract. For sums owing but not cleared to the Agency, the [media company] agrees to hold the Advertiser named on the face of this form solely liable."

Some large agencies, including McCann-Erickson Worldwide, said they support sequential liability but were waiting to review the Four A's language before proceeding.

Other agencies said the issue had to be approached on a client-by-client, media-by-media basis and could take a while to resolve.

The problems with getting media companies to accept sequential liability contracts were outlined in a bulletin sent to Four A's members in June. In the bulletin, agencies were advised that they have three choices if a sequential liability contract is rejected: "1) With your client's agreement, you can refuse to place the order under any terms other than those of sequential liability. 2) You can continue to use an insertion order or contract having sole liability language, but your client should be made aware that media use of different liability language could, under the worst circumstances, mean that an advertiser might have to pay twice. 3) You can accept the liability terms proposed by the medium. If you do this, your client should be aware of his potential 'double exposure' if dual liability is imposed." □

Two magazines, Self and YM, rejected Benetton's ad showing a priest and nun kissing. Another ad in the campaign shows a baby with the umbilical cord still attached.

Benetton gets the kiss-off

Magazines say no to retailer's fall ads

By Gary Levin

Benetton will live up to its reputation for controversy with a new fall ad campaign, portions of which have already been nixed by a half-dozen magazines.

The Italian sportswear retailer's latest advertising tops earlier efforts in shock and publicity value, which have cemented Benetton's reputation as an offbeat, socially conscious company.

Benetton's new images include a priest kissing a nun; a placenta-covered newborn baby with the umbilical cord still attached; and what the company calls an "angelic" white girl and a "dark and mysterious" black boy, replete with devilish horns.

The $3.5 million U.S. magazine campaign, part of a 92-country initiative, breaks in August issues of magazines and represents half of Benetton's domestic budget. But the U.S., with just 500 of the company's 6,300 stores, is a relatively small market for Benetton, which pegs its total marketing budget at $78 million.

Politics '92 seen as local ad bonanza

By Steven W. Colford

Despite a one-sided presidential race, the politics of 1992 could provide an unprecedented injection of ad dollars for local media and agencies.

The magic word is redistricting, that consequence of the decennial U.S. census that reshapes political boundaries.

"Redistricting will dramatically increase the level of competition and campaign advertising."

California, Florida and Texas are likely to benefit most from the political ad fallout because these states are gaining congressional seats and will witness more races—and media spending—than before.

With states such as New York, Illinois and Pennsylvania losing seats, there's the possibility of two incumbents, possibly from the same party, vying for the same spot.

Another factor: the ever-growing number of ballot initiatives, ranging from no-fault insurance to term limitation for state legislators.

"Redistricting will dramatically increase the level of

No recovery in sight

Dim final quarter expected as page slump hits 20-year low

By Scott Donaton

Following the weakest half-year in ad sales in more than two decades and a sluggish summer, magazine publishers' hopes of a fourth-quarter turnaround have all but vanished.

Most publishing executives now agree the ad-page slide that began 20 months ago has hit bottom, but they don't expect an uptick until the first or second quarter of '92.

"Things are looking a little better for the fall, but it's not spelling recovery," said James Kopper, exec VP-group publisher at Times Mirror Magazines.

"I hear business is getting better, but I haven't seen it," said S. Christopher Meigher III, president of Time Inc. Magazine Co.'s New York Magazine Division.

And while publishers expect business to improve in 1992, the outlook for the year is somewhat less optimistic than it was several months ago.

"The word I'm getting from the agency side is that

'National' may be revived

NEW YORK—The National is attracting the interest of several parties seeking to revive the sports daily. "There are ongoing discussions about the acquisition of The National," said Stephen Hammond, a spokesman for the paper's owner, Mexican media mogul Emilio Azcarraga Milmo. He said several groups have come to Mr. Azcarraga with plans to reincarnate the paper in various forms but "nothing has been decided." One rumor is that a group wants to relaunch the paper on the East Coast this fall.

Calif. tobacco bill advances

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—Gov. Pete Wilson is expected to sign a sweeping tobacco education bill that includes an annual budget of $16 million for three years for anti-smoking ads. The measure, approved by lawmakers last week, would allow the state to continue a controversial campaign previously budgeted at $28.6 million for 18 months. The state expects to send out to agencies a request for proposals by September; Livingston & Keye, Venice, is the incumbent.

O&M in trouble at Smith Barney?

NEW YORK—Smith, Barney & Co. is meeting with agencies about its account, now at Ogilvy & Mather, sources said. The account, which billed $8.5 million as recently as 1987, has been largely inactive recently. A Smith Barney spokesman said the brokerage has met with other agencies from time to time, but wouldn't confirm or deny whether there was a formal review under way. Fiat selects Testa for pan-Europe drive

By Michelle McCarter

ROME—Italian auto marketer Fiat is consolidating the nearly $90 million pan-European account for its Lancia passenger cars with the Gruppo Armando Testa agency network.

Vittorio Rava, Fiat's director of advertising, confirmed the deal and said it hasn't been decided yet whether Testa will create a single pan-European campaign for Lancia or separate campaigns targeting individual markets.

That decision will be made in September, he said.

"Armando Testa was chosen because it is the No. 1 Italian advertising agency, not only in terms of billings, but also because it is a leader in all senses of the word," Mr. Rava said.

Testa's base in Turin, also Fiat's headquarters, counted in the agency's favor. It's unclear whether other agency networks were considered.

A Lancia executive in Germany said the company wants to unify the look of the car's campaign across Europe. Lancia executives there and in the U.K. hadn't been informed of the agency selection at press time.

Until now, Lancia has used local agencies including Turin-based Canard Advertising in Italy; Leonhardt & Kern, Stuttgart, in Germany; Bordelais, Lemeunier Leo Burnett, Paris, in France; and Reay Keating Hamer, London, in the U.K.

Testa will take over in January, and is expected to resign the conflicting $8 million BMW account for Italy.

Marco Testa, Armando Testa ceo, wouldn't comment on Lancia or BMW beyond saying: "Our contract with BMW is valid through Dec. 1, 1991."

Lancia's new agency alignment is part of a trend by European car companies to explore a more international approach to advertising.

Lancia's new agency alignment is part of a trend by European car companies to explore a more international approach to advertising.

Earlier this year, Swedish auto marketer Volvo hired consultants Scan International to review the company's European advertising coordination. Scan works with marketers on agency selection and remuneration.

BMW has talked to its main agencies, including Ammirati & Puris, New York; WCRS, London; and Scholz & Friends, Hamburg, about jointly developing campaigns that can be used in other markets.

Fiat, marketer of Fiat, Alfa Romeo and Lancia autos, vies with General Motors Corp. for second place in the European auto market after Volkswagen.

According to Adtrack, a company that monitors ad spending, Lancia in 1990 was supported by $53 million in print advertising across Europe and $36 million in TV advertising in several markets.

Adtrack reports spending at rate-card prices without taking into account discounts negotiated, so that $89 million estimated total could be substantially higher than actual spending. But Adtrack doesn't monitor TV spending in all markets.

The fast-growing Gruppo Armando Testa ranks No. 38 among the world's top advertising organizations, with gross income of $63.5 million in 1990, a 25.3% increase from the previous year.

Testa has held talks with Ketchum International, Pittsburgh, about forming a partnership to reinforce its presence in Asia and North America, where Testa has a small New York office, Testa executives say.

Jan Hedquist, Ketchum International managing director, said the two weren't close to an agreement. □

FTC confronts green muddle

By Steven W. Colford

WASHINGTON--Procter & Gamble Co. may discontinue "recyclable" claims on a line of products in Rhode Island because of that state's new green regulations, VP-Advertising L. Ross Love told the Federal Trade Commission during hearings last week.

Mr. Love said P&G attorneys were still reviewing the matter, but it underscored a key argument in the ad industry's call for national guidelines for green claims.

Whether the five-member FTC will go along is yet to be determined, but from the tenor and direction of commissioners' questions, a decision isn't likely to come as quickly as the business community might like.

Chairman Janet Steiger said no decision on whether to move ahead would come before the agency's August recess; she wouldn't say if a decision might come down by yearend.

Commissioner Mary Azcuenaga, the agency independent who's publicly questioned the need for guidelines, said she doubted a decision would be made before her seven-year term lapses Sept. 25.

P&G's dilemma arose after Rhode Island adopted a regulation on recyclable claims.

While marketers want to make environmental claims, most don't want to move forward until they can be assured of consistent, national regulation.

Marketers are so troubled by the prospect of states pursuing different regulatory directions that executives who testified downplayed the angle that future FTC environmental guidelines would be voluntary and wouldn't pre-empt state laws and regulations.

"We favor pre-emption as a last resort," P&G's Mr. Love said. "We hope guidelines will lead to uniformity" and state regulators and legislators will defer to the FTC's lead.

"We are at a crossroads," Hal Shoup, exec VP of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, told the commission. "Right now, environ-

Mazda ready to fly Pegasus luxury line

LOS ANGELES—Mazda Motor of America's apparent "go" on a new luxury line for the 1995 model year is igniting an agency review that's been idling for months.

Mazda is expected to announce shortly that it will create the new car division, code-named Pegasus. That will immediately set off an agency competition for the estimated $50 million account.

Della Femina, McNamee, which recently lost the $95 million American Isuzu Motors account, is scheduled to meet with Mazda executives this week, car agency sources said.

One scenario put forth by industry observers has Foote, Cone & Belding, whose Santa Ana, Calif., office handles Mazda, spinning off a second operation to handle the new upscale division.

Just as likely though, is that the account would be serviced by FCB's San Francisco office; some car agency sources say it's already at work on the pitch.

Other agencies that have been talking to Mazda and its ad consultant, Don Dorward, include Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; TBWA; and Bloom FCA, all New York.

The Pegasus announcement is expected well before the annual dealers meeting in September, possibly within two weeks. Two Mazda employees have pointed to an Aug. 6 announcement.

As with Toyota Motor Sales USA's Lexus, Nissan Motor Corp. USA's Infiniti and American Honda Motor Co.'s Acura, Mazda will likely begin with two products. In Mazda's case, a V-8 flagship and a V-6 "entry-level" sedan are expected in 1994 as 1995 models. A coupe based on the flagship could follow the next year.

The go-ahead comes more than Agencies feel crunch in bank merger wave

By Gary Levin

An expected spate of bank mergers is threatening ad agencies—already hurt by the recession—with the further erosion of a major retail ad category.

Chemical Banking Corp. and Manufacturers Hanover Corp., two of New York's biggest banks, last week announced plans for the largest banking merger in U.S. history.

Atlanta-based Wachovia Corp. late last month agreed to merge with South Carolina National Corp., just after Wachovia began an ad campaign touting a new identity from an earlier merger.

"There's no doubt the banking industry will consolidate heavily over the next several years."

Another Southern bank, NCNB Corp., Charlotte, N.C., last week continued buyout talks with C&S/Sovran Corp., Atlanta and Norfolk, Va.

"There's no doubt the banking industry will consolidate heavily over the next several years," said George Salem, a banking analyst at Prudential Securities.

Unrelated to the merger activity, San Francisco-based Bank of America, the West Coast's largest bank, last week named Ketchum Advertising to handle its $25 million retail and corporate advertising account, leaving Grey Advertising after 23 years.

The Chemical-Manufacturers Hanover merger would create the country's second-largest bank, with $135 billion in assets, second only to Citicorp. Bank of America currently ranks second.

The combined bank, using the Chemical brand name, would become the nation's No. 6 credit card issuer and would rank first in the New York region's retail banking market, the companies said.

It was unclear how the New York merger would affect ad agencies for both banks, which spent roughly $10 million each on advertising last year, down 25.9% from their combined spending in 1989.

Chemical's main agency is Della Femina, McNamee, New York, while McCann-Erickson Worldwide handles Manufacturers Hanover. Both agencies and banks declined comment.

Spending in the entire bank and savings & loan category has declined even without mergers.

Total measured ad spending by banks fell 7.3%, to $463.6 million, in 1990, while thrifts' ad budgets declined 21.2%, to $156.1 million,

New ideas, old barriers

Survey: 'Egos' inhibit integrated marketing

By Scott Hume

The old jealousies are the biggest barrier to implementing the "new advertising."

Integrated marketing communications—the coordination of media advertising, direct marketing, promotion or public relations for a brand—has become the hot marketing issue of the 1990s. Should marketers employ it? If so, should it be through one or several agencies? Should the marketer or the agencies set up the integrated program?

A new study found most marketers say the concept is very valuable and are looking to their agencies for help in implementing it.

But marketers rank "agency egos" as the biggest barrier anticipated in putting an integrated strategy in place.

The new study was conducted by Tom Duncan, associate professor of journalism and chair of the advertising sequence at the University of Colorado at Boulder's School of Journalism & Mass Communication. The Colorado study found 56% of company executives responding said a client and its agencies must jointly take the initiative to make integrated marketing work, while 42% said the client alone should take the initiative.

Among the biggest advertisers (those with annual ad and promotion budgets of more than $50 million), more than half the responding companies (55%) said they, not their agencies, should take the initative.

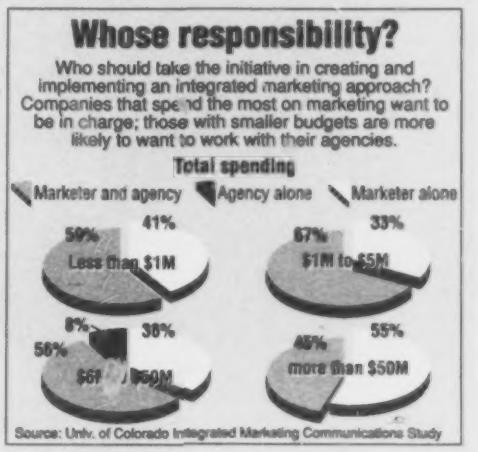
Smaller advertisers are more likely to opt for a joint marketer-agency initiative.

"I think this study shows agencies are in a position to take a leadership role," Mr. Duncan said. "Clients want their agencies involved in the process of integrating marketing messages. I interpret the results as the clients saying to agencies, 'You people are the communication experts. You ought to be able to help me put this concept to work.' "

The study will be presented to the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

Questionnaires were mailed in March and April to 500 randomly selected company subscribers of Advertising Age; 216 companies responded. The survey has a 6% margin of error.

The biggest outside barriers to integrated communications are "agency egos" (68% agreeing or strongly agreeing), "fear of budget loss" (57%) and lack of knowledge by agencies in multiple areas (56%), the respondents said.



Whose responsibility?
Who should take the initiative in creating and implementing an integrated marketing approach? Companies that spend the most on marketing want to be in charge; those with smaller budgets are more likely to want to work with their agencies.

The Colorado study paints a somewhat different picture of marketer attitudes than a Northwestern University study that was presented to the recent annual meeting of the Four A's.

Some ad agency executives have become more critical of the what's being called the "new advertising," and that attitude was on display at the Four A's meeting.

The earlier Northwestern study found that while most companies support the concept of integrated marketing, 87% of company executives said they alone were best suited to oversee the coordinating. □

Guy Day goes to McElligott

By Bob Geiger

MINNEAPOLIS—If American Isuzu Motors hires McElligott Wright Morrison White, the automaker will get not only the West Coast office it says its agency must have, but Guy Day as point man.

Mr. Day, 57, co-founder in 1968 of Chiat/Day (now Chiat/Day/Mojo), joined McElligott Wright last week as vice chairman. He will be based in Los Angeles and will focus on the agency's bid for the creative portion of the $90 million Isuzu account. Even if that attempt fails, McElligott Wright will open a West Coast office.

Also vying to succeed Della Femina, McNamee, Los Angeles, on the account are Altschiller Reitzfeld/-Tracy-Locke and McCabe & Co., both New York; Carmichael Lynch, Minneapolis; and Goodby, Berlin & Silverstein, San Francisco.

President Tony Wright earlier said if the shop won the Isuzu account, a Los Angeles-area office would be opened. McElligott Wright already works for Anaheim, Calif.-based Universal Cellular.

Even if McElligott Wright fails to win Isuzu, Mr. Day will remain with the agency, Mr. Wright said.

Mr. Day, who helped introduce American Honda Motor Co. to the U.S. in the 1970s, brings additional automotive expertise to an agency that already boasts some credentials in the category. Agency cofounders and former Chiat executives Mr. Wright and Rob White worked on the Nissan Motor Corp. USA account during their tenure at Chiat in the late '80s; Mr. McElligott headed creative on the Porsche Cars North America account at Fallon McElligott. Mr. Day consulted for Porsche on the 1987 review that gave that account to Fallon. □

What's ahead for Carat

Gilbert Gross, 60, who in 1964 founded what's now Carat Espace, and his brother, Francis, 56, are looking to expand their media buying expertise to the U.S. and Asia.

As they prepare for a split with Eurocom and the elimination of European trade barriers in 1992 with the acquisition of the remaining stock in their 13 European partner companies, the brothers talked to Advertising Age correspondent Bruce Crumley about their U.S. expansion plans.

ONE ON ONE

Advertising Age: When will Carat arrive in the U.S.?

Francis Gross: Next year.

Gilbert Gross: We absolutely have to establish ourselves in the U.S.—it's unavoidable and fundamental. It's a priority.

Carat Espace's Francis (r.) and Gilbert Gross say expanding to the U.S. is a priority.

AA: Will you enter via acquisition or joint venture?

Gilbert Gross: We are examining that question . . . that's all we can say.

AA: Given your run-ins with French agencies, do you think U.S. agencies are concerned about your plans?

Francis Gross: There must not be a misunderstanding in America. There is a difference between Europe, the world and France. France is a rather peculiar country in that as soon as one person is successful, others are jealous. . . .

[When we] launched an ad campaign saying, "Gentlemen, let's be serious," . . . it was very badly received outside of France. . . . This was in no way intended to say to people in the U.S., "Zorro is on the way. You'd better watch it." . . . This ad campaign was [run in] France.

AA: Unlike France, U.S. media maintain fixed rates for space, and price and purchase conditions are constant. Can Carat be successful in the U.S.?

Francis Gross: North America is a healthy market. . . . When people see how we adapt our methods of analyzing media to the American market and perform as media planners, we'll do well. . . .

As soon as the client who is used to paying $100 for $100 worth of space sees that for the same price, thanks to Carat, he can get the added value of space worth 30% more, he'll necessarily be willing to pay the $10 extra representing the fee for our studies.

AA: If you're working in the U.S., what amount will have to be involved before the media decide to grant discounts?

Gilbert Gross: In France or Europe, a client who is ready to spend $10 million to $100 million would benefit from different conditions than a client buying much less. I have no idea what this limit would be in the U.S.

In Europe, 70% to 80% of the sales figures for all media were made by the six or seven largest owners of media, while the 10 biggest advertisers . . . only constituted around 10% to 15% of these sales. So the power of the media owners and that of the largest advertisers is totally disproportionate.

AA: Are U.S. agencies afraid their clients will switch media buying to Carat when you enter the U.S.?

Gilbert Gross: I don't know, but I must say that this is an absolutely ridiculous debate. I say jokingly—but not totally—in France: What differentiates us from an ad agency? The creative department, that's all.

AA: And in the U.S.?

Gilbert Gross: Since we won't be opening in the U.S. without an American partner, we'll know how to deal with this problem. I hope [the partner] will be sufficiently powerful to get us accepted on American territory. □

Crowning effort

The buyer is king. The buyer is judge and jury. The customer is always right.

Never false, these statements also are never more true than during a recession.

Like supplicants humbling themselves before the throne, media sales reps are in the unenviable position of trying to woo increasingly discriminating media buyers and planners.

As ad budgets get tighter, the fight among media for remaining dollars has become even more intense.

In the story on this page, Foote, Cone & Belding's William Evans says, "Reps are very hungry," a hunger that's caused them to view their media more and more as a commodity.

While buyers don't complain about the price slashing that results from sellers treating their products as commodities, cost isn't the only factor. Media directors say they've gotten smarter about designing and implementing media plans, and they want sellers to get smarter, too.

They want sellers to keep up with their hunger for sophisticated multimedia packages and value-added programs. They want advice and creative thinking from sellers. They want more targeted presentations and less wasted time.

And, of course, they do want it all for less money.

As stories throughout this section indicate, price slashing is here to stay in most media. Those media resisting rate cuts, look out. Buyers want to see more flexibility or they'll take their business elsewhere.

To gauge the relationship between media buyer and seller, Advertising Age asked Beta Research Corp., Syosset, N.Y., to conduct a telephone survey of 202 media directors. The sample was randomly selected from media executives at the 500 largest U.S. agencies.

Their message to sellers is quite clear: When you're granted an audience, spend less time worrying about yourselves and start being more concerned about buyers and planners and their clients.

Media sellers not heeding this advice: Off with their heads!

Media caught in 'commodity' trap

By Gary Levin

Media buyers give media sales reps an "A"—for average.

An Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of media directors finds that 76.2% of them describe the average sales call as, well, average.

The survey shows just 15.8% give sales reps high marks, while 8% rate them as "poor." Nearly 30% say reps are less well-trained than they were two years ago, while 45.5% report no change in reps' abilities.

The most common complaint is that in this recessionary climate, too many sales reps view media as merely a commodity business: How low must they go to prevent a rival from getting the order?

"In certain areas, all they're concerned with is how much [business] their competitor is going to get: It's 'don't shut me out,' " says Don Cole, senior VP-media director at W.B. Doner & Co., Baltimore, in a comment fairly typical of agency responses.

Despite a shakeout under way in the magazine business, an expanding number of media outlets are competing for a shrinking pool of ad dollars, and that's led many to deal and discount.

"The focus is more and more on media as a commodity," says William Evans, senior VP-executive media director at Foote, Cone & Belding, Los Angeles.

Instead of selling based on the merits of the medium, "the talk is about rates and pressures on the rep to increase his share of business," Mr. Evans says.

Buyers believe many sales reps already know what agencies have been trying to tell them: If you want my order, learn more about my clients and tell me how I can help them.

But survey respondents describe sales reps as vendors twice as often as they call them partners who help address clients' marketing needs.

Almost 67% of media directors say reps place more importance in writing an order than in addressing their clients' needs. Just more than half of the media directors surveyed also say media salespeople are unaware of their clients' marketing strategies and category positions.

"There's growing awareness that they should be involved in clients' businesses, but I don't think they're any better at it," says Michael White, exec VP-media director at DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago. "You still hear stupid stuff."

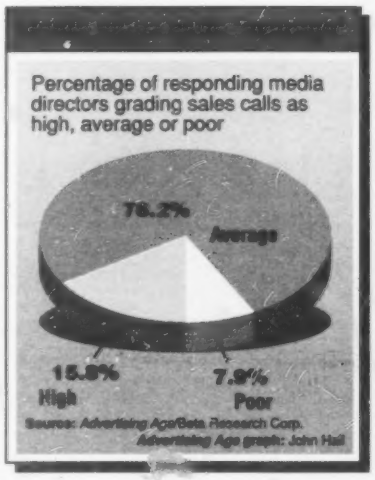
Some buyers attribute the "commoditization" of media sales to tough economic times, noting that many falsely believe they'll get the order only with bells and whistles.

"Overall, what I see is a situation where reps are very hungry, understandably, and I see the emphasis going in a direction which is very disturbing," says FCB's Mr. Evans. "They're trying to attract the attention of buyers with direct mail pieces, giveaways and prizes, which takes the focus off what they have to offer compared to their competitors."

Many say the quality varies with the medium: By and large, agency media executives rank the quality of magazine reps higher than broadcast salespeople but say cable TV and outdoor sellers have had to muscle their way into media plans and have proven more innovative as a result.

"The consumer magazine media have always done the best, probably because most of their business in one way or another is marketing based [rather than being focused more on hard numbers]," says Joel Kushins, senior VP-media director at Bozell, New York (see related story on Page S-7).

The outdoor industry has become more flexible and aggressive as it battles social pressures of highway outdoor "board blight" and declining spending by the medium's two largest customers, tobacco and alcoholic-beverage marketers.



But TV reps don't impress buyers in terms of their attention to detail, in part because they've relied for so long on steady demand for their increasingly costly inventory of TV spots. Nor do radio salespeople: "Radio's a great medium, [but] a lot of people just seem to be order-takers; they don't really sell the medium itself," Mr. Cole says.

Since the recession began, buyers say sellers of media have focused most heavily on their product's position compared with its competitors, on rates and on so-called "value-added" marketing and merchandising programs, which have expanded rapidly in recent years. Those can include multititle magazine deals to cross-promotions among several media.

Media buyers really would like discussions of value-added programs but also want more knowledge of an

Fewer sellers, but more intensity in their appeal

By Jon Lafayette

More with less is becoming the mantra for many media operations.

The recession has forced media companies to be more aggressive and creative in selling their products, while in many cases drawing on fewer resources.

"That is the reality," says Dave Long, newly appointed VP-marketing at Time Inc. Magazine Co. and former ad director at People, where the sales staff is 25% smaller than it was two years ago.

But media buyers have noticed no decline in the intensity with which ad sellers pursue buyers.

In the Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of more than 200 media directors, 81.2% say they're being called on enough times by media reps to meet their needs.

"The spot reps are voracious; the magazine reps are tenacious. Everyone has a bit of desperation in their voices. There's more contact. I'm sure sales managers are leaning on them," says Tom Winner, exec VP-director of media operations at Campbell-Mithun-Esty, New York.

Media sales managers stress the importance of having reps out in the field during tough times.

"All you can do in a situation like that is make sure that the clients you do have know how much you appreciate their business," says Stephen Seabolt, the new regional VP-sales at Time Inc. Magazine Co. and former U.S. ad sales director for Time. "If there was ever a time to hug a client . . . a recession is that time."

"The downturn's not forever, so we've got to be there," agrees John Silvestri, exec VP-ad sales at USA Network. "We've got to make more calls. We've got to work harder. We all do," he says.

"We're making more client calls. We're looking at businesses that don't spend much money on television and trying to come up with new ways to get them to spend it on cable," says John Barbera, president of Turner Broadcasting Sales.

Even in these tough times, "we're eternal optimists," he says. "We figure you keep knocking on the door and somebody will say yes."

But because of the depth of the recession, added effort doesn't usually translate into added sales. Ad sellers are huffing and puffing to keep a bad situation from becoming worse.

> "I think you need the presence in the field, so for us to cut further would be overall more damaging."

Media buyers say the stepped-up effort has resulted in new opportunities for clients.

"From our vantage point, the network guys have made the most effort. Pursuing small amounts of money, trying to come up with opportunities vis-a-vis spot budgets, following up with us," says Stacey Lippman, senior VP-corporate media director at Chiat/Day/Mojo, New York.

But despite the effort, the recession hasn't changed the content of the sales message all that much.

"I'm not sure they really know how to respond yet, but I think they know they need to do something other than what they've been doing for the last 30 years," Mr. Lippman says.

In the Ad Age/Beta Research survey, 62.4% of respondents say they notice no change in the quality of media sales presentations since the recession began. Another 24.3% say they see an improvement, while 13.4% say quality has declined.

The survey also reports 55% of media buyers see no change in the quality of individual sales reps. Indicating tough times have been good for some reps, 22.8% of responding media directors say the quality of media sellers actually has improved. However, an almost equal number of media buyers—22.3%—say quality has dropped.

Media executives insist that at the same time they're working with fewer people and resources, they're working harder and putting more substance into their efforts.

"We're a lot smarter and a lot more creative, and that's what it takes," says George Schweitzer,

What makes the young buyer tick

Behind every great media director is a legion of young media professionals ready to make their boss look good.

They may not be the architects of the new media strategies, but these buyers and planners are charged with implementing increasingly complicated buys. As their jobs have become more complex they've become more rewarding, as evidenced by the growing number who say they want to stay in media.

To shed light on those charged with doing the nuts and bolts aspects of media buying, we selected buyers from Advertising Age's ranking of the top 10 U.S. agencies.

Instead of focusing on their jobs, we asked about personal media histories and habits. While most were weaned on "The Brady Bunch" rather than the funny papers, this bunch won't let that influence their buying patterns.

Years in current post: 2

Years in media department: 5

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The Wall Street Journal. I get world events from newsweeklies.

When did you first start reading the newspaper? Two years ago.

What was your first magazine subscription? Highlights.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Premiere, Entertainment Weekly, People, Business Week, Fortune, Glamour, Utne Reader.

These are the ones I bring home and read regularly—I get practically every magazine in SRDS [at work].

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? It depends on what age. I used to watch everything as a kid. We watched "The Brady Bunch" and "Partridge Family" at one point in time. Saturday mornings there was always something—I remember "Land of the Lost," and on Sunday mornings it was "Davy & Goliath" [and] "Bugs Bunny."

I'm the only person I knew that memorized the TV Guide lineup in grade school. My brothers used to never read TV Guide; they'd come home and just ask Jan what was on.

In college I always watched soaps—the ABC lineup. I attended Luke & Laura's wedding [on "General Hospital"] in college.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "Thirtysomething." I was disheartened by that. I enjoyed the show; am sad to see that go. "Twin Peaks," though if that last show was any indication of what was to come, it was too weird. I wouldn't miss it.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "In Living Color" and the CBS lineup on Monday—"Evening Shade," "Major Dad," "Murphy Brown," "Designing Women" topped off by "Northern Exposure." I also like a lot of Fox, like "Beverly Hills 90210" [and] "The Simpsons."

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? I would have to say MTV. If Paragon [the basic cable service in New York's Upper West Side] offered VH-1, I would get that. Also if I [could get] "Nick at Nite" I would watch it. I don't subscribe to additional pay-cable features because I don't watch enough TV to justify the added expense.

What do you feel is hottest cable show now? "Tales From the Crypt" —the HBO series.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? I listened to WGSM-AM, 740 on the AM dial, the Station of the Stars, in Huntington, Long Island. My father was the morning radio announcer there, so every morning Mom had on the radio, listening to Dad's show. The format was middle of the road. My dad always played "Puff the Magic Dragon" and I always thought it was such a sad song.

What type of radio do you listen to now? WDRE-FM [an alternative music format] because my roommate listens to it and her alarm clock wakes us up, so she gets to pick the radio station. But I'm actually liking it now.

What childhood movie influenced your life? I vividly remember seeing three movies from my childhood. "Romeo & Juliet" [the Franco Zeffirelli version] and the first two R-rated movies I saw; I was 11 and it was a double feature: "Play Misty for Me" and "Cabaret."

What's the last good movie you saw? "Thelma & Louise," "Jungle Fever," "What About Bob?"

What actress would you want to play in your life story? Meg Ryan. She's got a fun personality. If my picture goes with this it will be a hard thing to see, but I've had four or five people tell me I have a similar look to her. The big major difference is that she gets to sleep with Dennis Quaid but I don't.

senior VP-communications at CBS. "It's not just the number of people; it's the creativity and effort that's put into it."

Mr. Schweitzer says CBS is being more creative in packaging its inventory to create bundles that are more attractive to advertisers.

"We're selling different dayparts together and packaging a lot more of our sports," he says.

People also has taken steps toward a more creative deployment of its sales staff. Once arranged along client lines, People's sales staff is now structured along ad agency lines. Mr. Long says the new structure was created partly because agencies have slimmed down during the recession.

"We're trying to run the most effective, efficient operation we can," Mr. Long says, a statement bolstered by the 25% reduction in People's sales force.

People also installed a new plan to attract pages from marketers that hadn't previously advertised. While its ad pages plummeted 10.9% in the first four months of 1991, the drop would have been more extreme without 400 pages generated from new advertisers this year.

But most do not see the recession as something that has become integral to their sales pitch.

"The recession itself has not become a focus of our presentations or what we do," Mr. Long says.

"I think it is generally understood in the business and the industry that the savvy marketers market throughout a recession, and those are the ones that come out in the most robust manner. But we have not focused on that as a critical selling point. Maybe we should have."

"We built a presentation around why it pays to advertise in a recessionary period," Mr. Silvestri says. "We were out with that early in this game. That's pretty well passe now."

Findings from the Ad Age/Beta Research survey back up his opinion: When asked what they would like media presentations to focus on, only 23.8% of media directors say "advertising during a recession."

Many media sellers believe that despite the increased pressure of the recession, the fundamentals of selling media have not changed.

"It really hasn't for our titles because our approach has always been the quality of the magazine," says Tom Witschi, VP-publisher of American Photo and Popular Photography. "I think you get that with a lot of the special-interest categories because they're selling the uniqueness of their readers. That never changes."

Mr. Witschi adds that his staff always has to hustle. "There's never a time when ads just roll in," he says.

Popular Photography, which had an ad page increase of 17.7% in 1990 and 6.5% in the first four months of the year vs. the same period in 1990, has not cut its sales staff, Mr. Witschi says.

"We're set up to be lean and mean," he says. "We don't have a ton of salespeople.

"I think you need the presence in the field, so for us to cut further would be overall more damaging."

But Mr. Witschi says he thinks some of the mass-circulation magazines may have entered the recession with some fat on their staffs.

Facing greater pressure on profitability, Messrs. Seabolt and Schweitzer say the sales forces at Time and CBS have been trimmed somewhat since the recession began.

However, USA Network hasn't cut its sales force.

"We feel we've got to give coverage to those accounts," Mr. Silvestri says. "In a tough economy, you need as many face-to-face calls as you can. You've got to keep your people in front of the advertiser and at the agency telling your story." □

When did you first start reading the newspaper? Probably when I was about 13. I've never been that much into reading the newspaper; I've always been a TV person.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The L.A. Times sometimes; occasionally The Wall Street Journal.

What was your first magazine subscription? I think it was Rolling Stone. I was about 15; I think there was some special deal offered in school.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Rolling Stone; I also read The Atlantic, Details and Vanity Fair.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "Emergency," "The Disney Sunday Movie." I also remember watching "M*A*S*H" a lot.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "Thirtysomething" and "Twin Peaks." Basically, it's all the good TV.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Saturday Night Live" [and] "In Living Color." They're higher-quality shows than the average sitcom with a laugh track. They make you think a little bit.

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? I've always watched MTV and really like it. I watched E! Entertainment Television. [It's] pretty fun. I also watch "Headline News"; it's nice to . . . get all the basics.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show or network now? I'd say MTV still is hot.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? I always listened to the closest thing I could get to alternative radio. I grew up in Sacramento and would tune in San Francisco or the nearby college station.

What type of radio do you listen to now? I still listen to alternative radio, mostly KROQ in L.A. They've got good music and a good variety of music.

What childhood movie influenced your life? "Ordinary People." It made me realize that everybody has something going on in their life and you don't always see the problems on the surface.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Jesus of Montreal." It was different, very thought-provoking.

What actor would you want to play your life story? I would want Kiefer Sutherland because he's interesting looking and a very honest and open sort of personality.

Magazine reps' star shines

Broadcast reps 'loud and noisy'

By Julie Stoenhuysen

If media buyers see magazine sales reps as the stars of the media sales biz, it should come as no surprise.

Unlike many other forms of media, magazine reps have to justify the buy from start to finish, buyers say.

Magazine sales reps' high standing among media buyers is uncontroverted.

Nearly 70% of media directors surveyed in a recent Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. poll say consumer and trade magazines have the highest quality sales reps. Consumer magazines garnered 41.1% of responses as the No. 1 medium for sales quality, while trade book reps received 27.2% of the votes.

But it's the nature of the medium, not the reps themselves, that tips the scale in magazine reps' favor, media watchers say.

"Print people are kind of unique on the landscape of media reps," says Timothy McInerney, senior associate at McNamee Consulting Co., a magazine consultancy.

"Their properties have not been 'commoditized' as have TV and radio. They've had to rationalize their more discrete, less-than-mass audiences.

"I don't think they're any more professional. I just think the circumstances intrinsic to media create the differences," he says.

But some of those differences are worth noting.

"Our [magazine] reps don't like to be in the same waiting room as [broadcast] reps," says Paul DuCharme, VP-director of print media at Grey Advertising, New York, whose department shares a floor with the agency's broadcast buying group. "[Broadcast reps are] loud and noisy and dress like they just got back from California.

"Our [print] reps have to have an appointment. A broadcast rep gets in for one person and he just goes up and down the corridor," he says.

Nancy Smith, senior VP-director of media services at Young & Rubicam, New York, attributes differences in media sellers' approach to the way the two media are sold.

"If you look at the broadcast buying end, the sellers are very much oriented toward negotiating with a very heavy dose of servicing and stewardship," she says.

"In the print medium, the orientation is very much upfront, before the buy is made. And it's selling: selling the medium, the market niche and the title."

An emphasis on selling has resulted in some pretty rigorous standards for print reps.

At James G. Elliott Co., a Los Angeles-based magazine rep company, salesmen are equipped with pagers, cellular phones and laptop computers so they can be reached at all times, says President Jim Elliott.

Client calls are supposed to be returned within one hour and sales presentations are videotaped and critiqued by an acting coach.

Still, with the recession lingering and media properties proliferating, magazine reps find themselves engaged in a battle for pages that has forced many to hone their presentation skills and re-evaluate their approach.

"You're starting to see more inventive, more creative, more resourceful skills being brought to the party. [Reps] are selling a media company's resources rather than just the title," says Ms. Smith, pointing to the prevalence of value-added packages, event marketing and cross-media deals.

> "Our magazine reps don't like to be in the same waiting room as broadcast reps."

Sales pitches, at least among magazine reps, also have become more targeted, Ms. Smith says.

"[Magazine] salespeople will try and learn about the clients' business and marketing before they call. And they tailor their pitch to that."

In fact, some magazine companies are becoming so adept at targeting that they're tailoring the sales pitch to the person they're calling on, Ms. Smith says. She recalls one pitch from a salesman that was targeted to a media buyer's known preconceptions about the category.

"It was in the competitive newsweekly category where it's hard for everyone to see the differences from one magazine to another. A very talented, creative salesperson knew of a buyer's [perception that the titles were all alike] and built a very targeted discussion to that individual.

"He made the sale," she says.

Tough times also have required a bottom-line emphasis from magazine sellers, says John Meskil, exec VP-media at Warwick Baker & Fiore, New York.

"I think they've gotten a little more direct in terms of what it takes to get the busi-

Let's make a deal

'Area of negotiated rates has changed dramatically' as publishers appear to soften on off-card deals

By Scott Donaton

Rate negotiation, a non-issue for most media, remains a hot topic in the magazine industry.

But publishers' resistance is crumbling, media buyers say, and price is now just one element of a more complex negotiating process.

Group buys, custom publishing, on-card or structured discounts, added-value merchandising and positioning: These are the tools sellers of print space and broadcast time are using to ease growing rate pressures and preserve profit margins.

Many media sellers outwardly deny—but privately concede—negotiation has become a way of life. An Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of more than 200 media buyers verifies this shift.

Fully 44% of buyers say just 20% to 59% of all media buys are made at published or stated rates. Only 5.4% of those polled say all media buys are made at published prices.

While 29.7% of the buyers surveyed say discounts most often take the form of off-the-rate-card concessions, 48% cite frequency discounts, 16.3% name added-value merchandising and 10.4% say elimination of additional fees such as bleed charges for color print ads are used as concessions.

"The whole area of negotiated rates has changed dramatically. It's become part and parcel of added-value and integrated media programs," says Roberta Garfinkle, VP-director of print media at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

Rate negotiation is a common practice in the TV and radio industries, where formal rate cards don't exist and prices are determined by supply and demand.

The newspaper and Yellow Pages businesses have yet to feel strong rate pressure from agency buyers, a luxury they're not expected to enjoy for long.

"Rate negotiation is not as widespread in newspapers as it is in broadcast or magazines, but I think it's something that's going to happen," says Jack Cohen, director of print/outdoor media buying for DDB Needham Worldwide.

The magazine industry remains a battleground where publishers still refer to rate cards as "sacred" and warn that rate "compromises" threaten their existence, a stance that irks some on the buyers' side.

"I have very little sympathy for [publishers'] point of view," says Backer Spielvogel Bates Vice Chairman Stephen Leff, who oversees the media department.

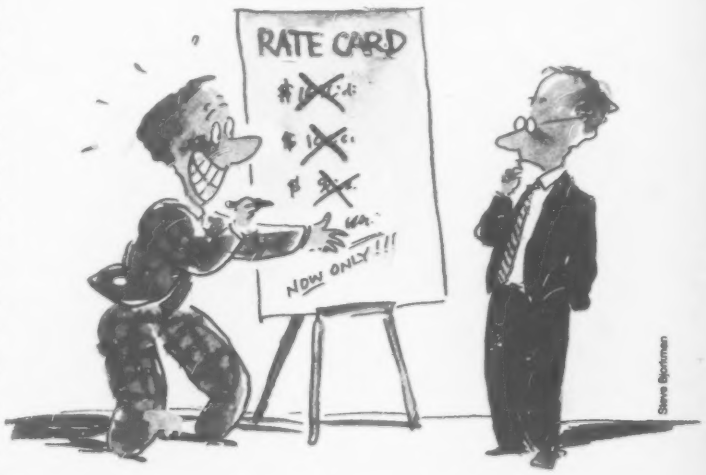
"Why should magazines be any different from the broadcast industry? This is a competitive world and advertisers should benefit from that competition."

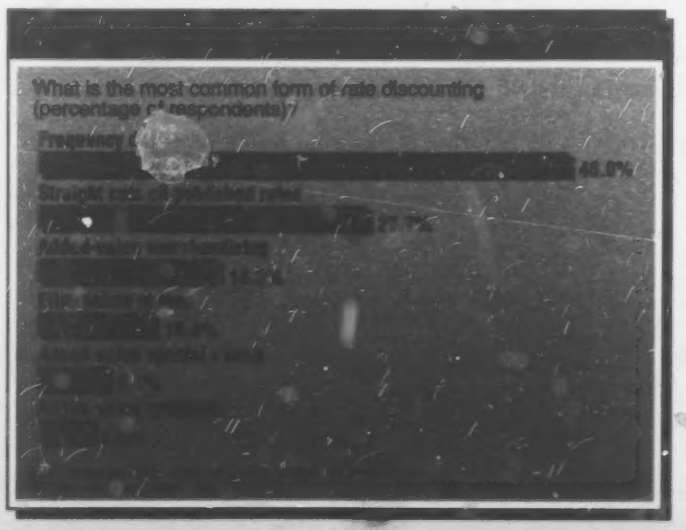
"We don't want to put anybody out of business," says Peg Ianacone, manager of print media at Grey Advertising. But rate negotiation "is a non-issue," she says. "It's a way of life."

Still, publishers and their supporters say the medium isn't ready to cave in to TV-style negotiations.

"The great progress is over" for media buyers who gained rate concessions from publishers in recent years, says David Orlow, senior associate at Periodical Studies Service, a magazine consultancy. "Continued pressure will not gain advertisers much more in incremental concessions. There are lines that have been drawn."

"As the weaker magazines fold and we come out of the recession, the stronger books that can provide a good audience and be effective can hold the line on rates," claims Steven T. Florio, president-ceo of The New Yorker. "Quality of editorial will become important again."





Many agency executives beg to differ.

Mr. Leff says he views published rates as "an asking price," a statement echoed by several media buyers. Most print buyers say despite their public stance, publishers now accept negotiation of price and other elements as a normal aspect of doing business.

Publishers are a lot more savvy, they say, and know exactly how far off the card they can go without destroying profit margins and what tools to use to turn the focus away from price.

"Negotiation as a term for print buying is outdated," Grey's Ms. Ianacone says. "We don't negotiate. It's about packaging.

"Most of the magazines now know what their bottom line is. They know they're going to give you 50% off before you pick up the phone," she says.

In fact, buyers believe some publishers artificially inflate ad rates to allow room for negotiation, a charge publishers deny.

McCann-Erickson's Ms. Garfinkle says she's suspicious of magazines that drastically reduce rates and asks publishers, "Do you mean to tell me you can still take some profit out of this when you're giving 40% off? Were you overcharging all along?"

Publishers also are sidestepping off-card deals by creating new formal discounts and ornate rate structures. In addition to frequency discounts, many offer discounts to advertisers in specific categories, introductory rates, renewal rates and price breaks to advertisers who make long-term or upfront commitments.

When did you first start reading the newspaper? Eighth grade. I was playing a lot of sports and went to the sports section.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The Wall Street Journal. It provides the best combination of world events coverage, general news and business information that's important to me. I also read The New York Times.

What was your first magazine subscription? A charter subscription to National Geographic World.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? National Geographic—it was a natural extension from National Geographic World—Smithsonian, The Economist, The New Republic.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "M*A*S*H," "WKRP in Cincinnati," "Land of the Lost." Also, I was a big "Love Boat" fan.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "Bosom Buddies" was a great show and never got a chance to prove itself over the long haul.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Cheers," "Murphy Brown," "L.A. Law," sports.

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? ESPN and regional sports, like Madison Square Garden Network.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? Sports is the hottest now.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Probably most often album-oriented rock, classic rock.

What type of radio do you listen to now? I listen to classical, news, sports. I keep classical on at the office all day. I'll listen to news in the morning or sports when there's a game on.

What childhood movie influenced your life? I couldn't come up with one. "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory" was my favorite, though.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Goodfellas." I just rented it. In a theater, "Henry V."

What actor would you want to play your life story? My life story's so boring, I don't know if I could find someone to do it.

Brian Dennehy is a great character actor. If they did a movie on my life story they'd have to pick a character actor. He's a good Irish actor who can do most anything he needs to do.

Rates

media buyers credit with not breaking its rate card, now offers on-card discounts, such as cuts for advertisers who buy space in more than one of its magazines.

The deals being crafted by Time Warner and nearly every other publishing house are another way to avoid the conflict over negotiated rates. Such customized deals, which often include single-sponsor issues and other value-added elements, by their nature must be negotiated.

Strategic packages, such as the $40 million deal Time Warner signed with Chrysler Corp. last November, have been applauded by industry observers as the wave of the future.

But those same industry observers wonder whether some package buys, such as the alliance formed by Newsweek and Times Mirror Magazines, are merely ways to disguise discounts.

American Express Publishing Corp. President Thomas Ryder says most group and multimedia buys are short-term attempts by publishers to build share during the recession and predicts they will go out of fashion when the economy rebounds.

Such deals are "founded on a double negative," he says. "The publisher tries to get the advertiser to buy something he doesn't want by providing a discount on something the publisher doesn't need to discount."

Regardless of the form it takes, rate cutting is a tough habit to break. It's "like giving candy to a baby—it's hard to take it back," says John Beni, senior VP-general manager of Cahners Publishing Co.'s Consumer/Entertainment Publishing Group.

"I don't think if someone gave X% discount two years ago that it's easy or possible to take it back today." As a result, he says, "People are looking at value-added more. They're saying, 'Let me find out if I can give this guy something that has high value to him but significantly lower cost to me.' They're being more creative in how they package the deal." □ ness," he says.

"Before the recession, most salespeople tended not to knock the competition.

"Now they're asking the agency and client what's necessary to get the business—cutting rates, merchandising, value-added, things of that nature."

As the media marketplace continues to change, the challenges to media reps will mount, buyers say. Already, the slump has taken its toll.

"I think when you start not selling you begin to become less effective in the whole process of selling," Mr. McInerney says. As a result, he says, morale drops, leading many experienced reps to become disenchanted with the business.

"Some very talented people have left the industry and a lot more are glancing at the exits," he says.

"Selling's hard now," Ms. Smith adds.

"You don't just walk away with a piece of paper saying, 'Done. I'm on the train.' " □

TV, radio stations caught in a soft spot

Price-cutting spiral keeps up the pressure

By Joe Mandese

In even the best of times, spot broadcast is bought primarily for its flexibility: short lead times, geographic options, range of programming and audience niches and, most important, highly negotiable rates.

In these worst of times, TV and radio stations are bending over backward to accommodate advertisers, particularly on price.

Asked which medium is most willing to negotiate prices off established rates, an Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of media buyers found that 45.5% consider spot TV and 35.1% spot radio to be the most negotiable of 13 media categories.

Spot sellers counter that such statistics are more perception than reality, noting that network TV—with scatter discounts as high as 50% and upfront rates as much as 15% below last year's deals—is probably the bargain medium of the moment.

However, they concede the negotiability of other media has put further pressure on spot broadcast rates, particularly for TV.

"The networks are discounting themselves terribly and that's a detriment to spot, but we're not discounting our rates by 50%," says Raymond Johns, exec VP-chief operating officer of spot TV sales rep Seltel Inc.

While spot broadcast normally is bought for different strategic reasons than network, many national brands can be persuaded to shift spot budgets into network if the price differential grows very great. With the networks discounting their scatter rates as much as 50%, spot buyers say that's becoming all too common.

"Historically, network TV would get tight and buyers would re-express those dollars into local television. But for the first time in as long as I can remember, we are seeing just the opposite," says Howard Nass, corporate director of spot broadcast, Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, New York. "It's going the other way," he adds. "Network is soft and people are capitalizing on it."

Bill Breda, senior VP-general sales manager of spot TV sales rep Blair Television, acknowledges the trend, noting that Taco Bell, via agency FCB, San Francisco, recently shifted its spot TV budget into network.

However, he predicts the fast-food chain likely will come back to spot because of its "flexibility at the local level.

"They need it for their local price and item changes," he says.

Marlene Chautin, senior VP-associate media director of Young & Rubicam, New York, notes network discounts are more of a market correction from years of high cost-per-thousand increases, whereas spot has been flat for several years.

"The problem is that stations' revenues have not been growing for a couple of years," she says. "So, if they have a 2% increase, that's really a negative."

To what degree spot broadcasters will discount depends largely on the strength of a station and the health of its local economy.

"Where the basement is at depends on the condition of the local marketplace," says Tom Olson, exec VP of Katz Television Group. "In the markets where local business is healthy, stations are more reluctant to do whatever they have to do to get the business."

Unfortunately, the number of markets with healthy economies is waning. Northeastern and Southeastern markets are plagued by recession. Although the Southwest appears to be coming back from an abysmal downturn, even West Coast markets are beginning to feel the pinch.

"Los Angeles . . . has become much more negotiable. And that's a market that had literally been sold out for several years," Ms. Chautin says.

As a result, Seltel's Mr. Johns notes, even top-tier stations that had previously been intransigent are "now playing the flexible game. They're doing it for accounts that they've never fought for before."

He says these include accounts that were traditionally the sacred cows of the weaker stations and the independents—direct response advertisers, 900 numbers, infomercials and big bottom-line-oriented accounts such as Procter & Gamble Co., which sales reps say gravitates toward tonnage spot buys at the more flexible stations.

But buyers say all stations—big and small—are willing to provide attractive rates for advertisers willing to commit to long-term deals.

Laura Silton, senior VP-director of local broadcast at McCann-Erickson, says this began during the Persian Gulf War but has continued because "clients are not letting go of their budgets until the last possible moment."

To induce their business, she says stations are willing to provide rate discounts of as much as 5% for so-called "upfront" deals.

As a result, Ms. Silton says an "artificially tight market" has been created for short-term advertisers who need to get onto certain stations at the last minute. She says those buyers have to pay as much as 50% over "upfront" rates to get on the air.

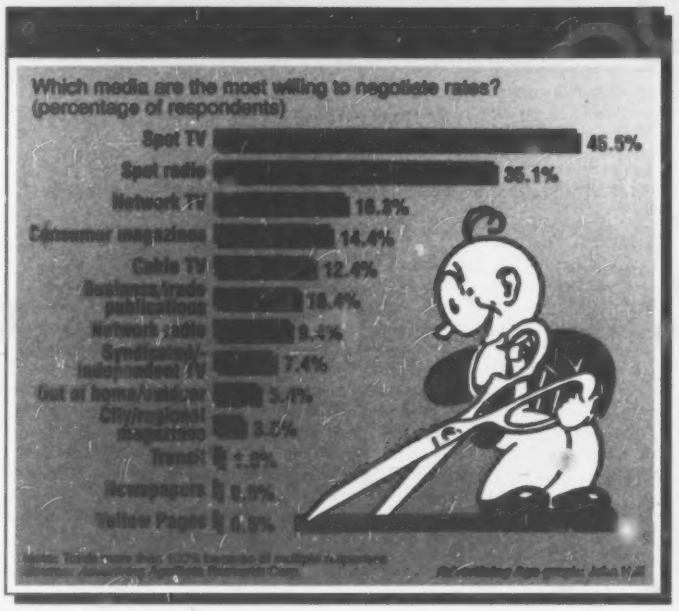
"If you've got a six-week lead time, you can make very good deals. But the short-flight advertiser with not much lead time is not getting good rates," she says.

As a result, stations have been trading off long-term revenues for short-term gains.

"Stations are trying to get as much money out of the short-term advertiser as they can to try and get closer to their budget projections," Ms. Silton says.

At the same time, stations are interested in exchanging some flexibility for commitments from advertisers in these unstable times.

"I don't think too many stations are going to berate themselves for taking those long-term deals," Katz' Mr. Olson says. "There are too many uncertainties in this marketplace, and they would rather have a bird in the hand." □



Non-negotiable

Hard line on rates costing newspapers

By Christy Fisher

To attract national advertisers, newspapers are trying to become more user-friendly.

To succeed, media buyers say the papers will need to become more budget-friendly as well.

The newspaper industry, through groups such as the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the Newspaper Advertising Bureau, is pushing new programs, such as one-order/one-bill and improved positioning, to eliminate obstacles to multiple-paper buys.

The industry, via ad sales network Newspapers First, plans to have a sophisticated one-order/one-bill system in place in 1992. The computerized ad placement service reportedly will handle all aspects of a multimarket buy and create a single invoice.

It's the latest in a long line of industry innovations designed to attract national advertisers.

"We're working with advertisers and finding out what [their] needs are," says Cathie Black, ANPA's newly appointed president-ceo. "It's no longer, 'This is what we have and this is what you have to buy,' " she says.

While media buyers applaud the industry's focus on better serving national advertisers' needs, they say one-order/one-bill is no panacea.

National newspaper rates have to be competitive with those of other media—and media buyers say that means newspapers have to be willing to go off their rate cards, which they are loath to do.

In the Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey, respondents ranked newspapers as least willing of all media to negotiate rates.

"Newspapers are getting less and less efficient [as an ad medium]," says Jack Cohen, VP-director of print & outdoor media buying for DDB Needham Worldwide, New York. "Circulation has remained flat, but rates have increased 6% to 7% a year."

Bob Zach, senior VP-media director at Chiat/Day/Mojo, New York, puts it a bit more strongly.

"If newspapers have twice the cost per thousand of TV or radio, I'll be damned if I'll put my money there," he says.

Agency media buyers are particularly upset with the 60% premium national advertisers pay over local advertisers, who get more favorable positioning.

"[The rate] differential is absurd—and it keeps getting worse," says Michael Drexler, exec VP-worldwide media director at Bozell, New York.

The issue overshadows other impediments to placing national newspaper ads, buyers say.

"Even if there is one-order/one-bill, the client is still looking for more bang for the buck," Mr. Cohen says. "[Clients] would still be complaining of high costs and they would still fight national rates being so much higher than [local] retail."

Media buyers also question the relative appeal of one-order/one-bill as an inducement to national advertisers.

"Positioning and rates are more important in my mind than ease of purchase," Mr. Zach says.

But price discounts are a sticking point with newspapers.

"One of the problems with pricing is it's against the law to try to coordinate," says Jerry Tilis, VP-marketing for Knight-Ridder. "I can't talk to another newspaper company about pricing."

Len Forman, the ad bureau's president, says when the one-order/one-bill system comes on line, "costs will go down dramatically.

"There will be no discount in the formal sense," he says. "But the network will have considerable savings for advertisers in the ease of making a buy."

Neither have advertisers' complaints about rates fallen on deaf ears, he says. Individual newspapers have created special rates in certain categories, such as beer and package goods, to try to encourage more national advertising. In addition, most national buys placed through the ad bureau's National Newspaper Network came through with CPMs that were competitive with other media because advertisers bought multiple insertions, he says.

Still, "One-order/one-bill has to be done. . . . That's a prerequisite," says Bozell's Mr. Drexler. "But newspapers have to go beyond that to be successful in attracting national advertisers.

"The newspaper industry has to think of itself as a single medium, not 1,600 different media," he says.

"The newspaper industry has to understand who its competitors are—TV, radio, cable, outdoor—and what kind of operating environment it is in. [That] environment is very competitive," Mr. Drexler says. □

When did you first start reading the newspaper? As a senior at Hobart College in Geneva, N.Y. I started thinking about careers.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The New York Times. I read the living and home sections for pleasure.

What was your first magazine subscription? Boys' Life. And, believe it or not, "Ripley's Believe It or Not." I was probably 10 or 11. It [had] lots of outdoor stories.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Bicycling and Bicycle Guide. Those are the only two I read regularly.

Because I get a lot of magazines at work I also look through Entertainment Weekly and People on occasion.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "Lost in Space" and "The Brady Bunch." I remember a gang of us kids all going in on Friday nights to watch "The Brady Bunch"—though not because of the Brady girls. I was more interested in kickball.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? I honestly don't remember one.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Cheers." It's great comedy. Actually, I watch fairly little TV. I have a pretty long commute.

My wife tapes "General Hospital" so we watch that over dinner. I must admit I've been sucked in. Now I yell at the TV set and berate the characters.

What show or network captured your fancy when you first got cable? ESPN. It was nice to get all of the sports [programming].

What do you feel is the hottest cable show or network now? One that's been getting a lot of press is "MTV Unplugged." It's where they get various artists to come in and do acoustical sets. It's gotten quite a following. They're releasing some of the shows as CDs.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? I guess it was Top 40. I had a transistor radio with the little earplug. I think it was WABC. That was the station everybody was listening to.

What type do you listen to now? I listen primarily to new wave: Talking Heads, Elvis Costello—that kind of thing. I also started to listen to public radio during the Iran–contra hearings at work. But I moved offices and I can't get it [there].

What childhood movie influenced your life? That's tough. The first movie I saw was Disney's "Search for the Castaways." I thought it was great.

What's the last good movie you saw? I hardly ever go to movies. But I guess I would have to say "Driving Miss Daisy."

What actor would you want to play your life story? Tom Hanks. He's got a great sense of humor. And he's [illegible]—taller than I am. It would end with me running the agency and living happily ever after. They'd discover how brilliant I was and how I'd hidden my talents away.

When did you first start reading the newspaper? In high school. My favorite sections were the automotive news and business sections.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The Wall Street Journal, USA Today, Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News.

What was your first magazine subscription? Probably Field & Stream. I'm a fisherman [and like] boating and sailing and things like that.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? I enjoy AutoWeek [and] the outdoors-type magazines—Field & Stream, Sports Afield. Now I'm bombarded by magazines at work. . . . I still read these for pleasure, but it's hard to diffentiate between work and others now. I look at newsweeklies, too.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "M*A*S*H," "All in the Family" and, as I grew a little older, I enjoyed news-oriented programs like "60 Minutes." The shows were very timely in teaching us values, . . . bringing up problems like race and religion. Especially "All in the Family"—it was a very daring show.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "The Bob Newhart Show." Both the first one, where he was a psychiatrist, and "Newhart," where he ran the inn, but it applies more to the first one. It was one of the last of the good old-time comedy shows. Now there's a different kind of humor on TV. ["The Bob Newhart Show"] was more quality humor. Viewers were more demanding back then. There's a different kind of viewer now.

What are your favorite TV shows now? I'll tell you, but you might not want to print it: "Married . . . With Children." I still enjoy "60 Minutes," "20/20" and "Prime-Time [Live]." News shows because they are straightforward and deal with current issues. "Married . . . With Children" because it doesn't hold back. I also like "Cheers" and "Arsenio."

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? CNN's "Headline News." In general, I think cable allows you to have more variety.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? I don't have a particular show. . . . In general, I enjoy catching the news, . . . sporting events like the NASCAR updates and PGA golf updates on ESPN.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Top 40, soft-rock-type music. Also, with my family, I listened to talk radio. And always sports programming, with the Detroit Tigers.

What type do you listen to now? I still listen to sports on radio; [I] also enjoy all-news stations and news updates. I get a lot of my news from radio. With a busier schedule, I have to get it in the most quick and compact form possible; at times you need to go to newsweeklies, but other times you need it as quick as possible.

What childhood movie influenced your life? "To Sir With Love" with Sidney Poitier. It brought out the interaction between people and races and taught respect. I also really liked "The Godfather" and "The Sting."

What's the last good movie you saw? The last good movie I saw was "Silence of the Lambs." I enjoyed it because it was a thriller and it was well done.

It's hard to get a decent movie nowadays. I generally enjoy action-type movies, but not necessarily thrillers. I'm not a fan of "Friday the 13th"-type movies, but this was a thriller and a "good" movie.

What actor would you want to play your life story? Alan Alda. In "M*A*S*H," his character, Hawkeye, was always very opinionated. He takes a stand and is not so worried about the end, but rather the means.

When did you first start reading the newspaper? Eighth grade. I had a history teacher who required us to bring in a current events article . . . and talk about it.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The New York Times, because it's the most accessible and it covers everything.

What was your first magazine subscription? It's tough to remember that far back. It was probably Reader's Digest. It had great short stories in it.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? I read Shape and Bon Appetit, to keep up with the latest on health and fitness [and] for the latest tips on food and wine.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "Mary Tyler Moore" and "That Girl." I think it's because both shows featured career women, and that appealed to me.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? I was upset when they canceled "China Beach," but now it's back. It's a show that offers a unique perspective of the Vietnam War. The war took place when I was very young, so I never really understood it.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Northern Exposure." It has a unique story line and unique characters. I also like "Doogie Howser, M.D." because it's a youthful show, but every episode ends with a moral or recap that the producers want you to take away with you.

What show or network captured your fancy when you first got cable? I started watching E! Entertainment Television because it provided light news and an update of what's going on in the film industry.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? I don't think there's one specific show, but sports programming in general on ESPN is popular.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Top 40.

What type of radio do you listen to now? Now I listen to progressive jazz.

What childhood movie influenced your life? My all-time favorite movie is "It's a Wonderful Life" because it proved that nice guys don't have to finish last.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Silence of the Lambs," because it was the first movie I had seen in a long time that created a suspenseful mood from the very first scene and sustained it throughout the movie.

What actress would you want to play your life story? Demi Moore. I think she's very versatile as an actress. I can picture her in a business suit, but on the other side I see her as having a lot of fun.

THE POWER IS ON

Multimedia 'multi-mania'

But shops argue whether deals force media department restructuring

By Joseph M. Winski

Soon after Time Inc. and Warner Communications announced plans to merge in 1989, Bozell swung into action.

The ad agency put together a team of media, marketing, direct marketing, creative and public relations staffers to analyze the media properties involved.

By the time the merger was formally completed, Bozell had a plan ready to take to Time Warner. It was refined and then presented to the client, Chrysler Corp.

The result was a roughly $50 million Chrysler "Rediscover America" campaign late last year using Time Warner magazines, direct mail, videocassettes, audiocassettes and even a book, Rediscovering America's Roads, published by a Time Warner subsidiary and given to people who test-drive Chrysler products.

This was the "big bang" in what some are calling the hottest trend in advertising-multimedia deals, in which an advertiser buys a package of different media properties belonging to one owner or to an alliance of media companies.

Time Warner has inked even bigger deals since the Chrysler program: an $80 million campaign with General Motors Corp. and a reported $100 million package with Mazda Motor of America. Not to be outdone by Time Warner, media properties such as NBC, Parade, TV Guide, and USA Today are banding together—offering a 1992 Summer Olympics package—and several magazines and cable networks also have joined forces.

Bozell, meanwhile, is wrapping up a multimedia deal for Chrysler with Hearst Corp. that would include Hearst's magazines, cable networks, newspapers and other media properties.

"Multimedia integration is the wave of the future," says Michael Drexler, exec VP-worldwide media director at Bozell, New York, and a principal architect of the Chrysler/Time Warner deal.

Respondents to an Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of media department executives seem to agree: 76.2% say they are interested in multimedia deals. Nearly a quarter say they already have participated in them in some form.

Arnie Semsky, exec VP-media and programming services at BBDO Worldwide, New York, expects 20% of all buys to involve such multimedia deals within the next two to three years, up from his estimate of 2% today.

But agencies differ on how much they need to change to handle multimedia deals.

> "Someone must have authority to insist individual companies participate."

Mr. Drexler says they demand a significant overhaul that breaks down the walls between traditionally independent agency departments.

"We have had to, in effect, change the infrastructure," he says. "You cannot operate in the conventional agency way, where you offer a menu of diversified services and each one has to be profitable."

Equally important, Mr. Drexler says, is the adoption of a big-picture mentality.

"You have to retrain your people. They can't think like media people per se anymore. They have to think of themselves as marketing people who happen to be experts in media," he says.

Bozell has several ad hoc teams studying additional multimedia proposals. The agency also now requires every media plan to incorporate "an extended communications package" involving "components that go well beyond just the selection of traditional media," Mr. Drexler says.

Other agencies say they don't see the need for all that much change.

Michael White, exec VP-director, media department, DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, says the agency's existing "media strategist" supervising a brand simply "becomes the point person" on multimedia deals, calling on the agency's specialists in cable, magazines and other disciplines.

At Foote, Cone & Belding, New York, assembling multimedia deals has resulted in at most "a subtle adjustment," says Joseph Ostrow, exec VP-corporate media director. A senior person like himself becomes the lead person on such deals.

"So there's a different mix of people and it is really done at a higher level than a lot of media planning is done," he says.

"No sweat," says Gordon Link, exec VP-worldwide media director at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, on the agency's readiness for multimedia deals. "We have the right combination of talents and insights right now."

IF YOU THOUGHT THE TRIBUNE WAS AHEAD OF THE TIMES IN TAMPA BAY . . .

You're 20 years behind.

In 1971, the Audit Bureau of Circulations reported that the St. Petersburg Times had squeaked by the Tampa Tribune for the first time to become the largest circulation newspaper in Tampa Bay.

We've never looked back. Since then, the Times has more than doubled its circulation — to 389,924 daily and 500,418 Sunday — while the Tribune has grown, but not as fast.

The numbers show that Tampa Bay keeps up with the Times. In fact, the St. Petersburg Times now leads the Tampa Tribune by more than 68,000 daily and nearly 92,000 on Sunday.*

So think again before you fall back on the Tampa Bay newspaper with "Tampa" in its name. To get ahead, call the Times at 1-800-333-7505, ext. 8249 and get the latest information on the thriving Tampa Bay market and the newspaper that serves it best.

says, "I think the multimedia buy is really an old concept with a new focus."

Agencies do say costing out a multimedia deal is trickier. The usual cost-per-thousand approach can't measure the synergies multimedia deals supposedly offer, especially when non-conventional, unmeasured media are part of the package. The whole may indeed be greater than the sum of its parts, as multimedia-package supporters contend, but nobody as yet knows how to calculate how much greater.

If significant change must occur for multimedia deals to flourish, it is the media companies that have to make it, some agency executives contend.

They complain too many media companies are simply trying to sell what they happen to have.

"The problem we have right now, frankly, is that the sellers are trying to prepackage too much," DDB Needham's Mr. White says. "They say, 'I own this. I own that. Now you buy them together and I'll give you 5% off' or whatever.

"They're just not doing a very good job of going in and finding out what an advertiser needs and crafting something that's responsive to those needs," he says.

"There are a number of media organizations out there that are trying to position themselves as multimedia players when in reality they are nothing more than a hodgepodge of small vehicles," agrees Fred Wray, senior VP-media director at FCB, Chicago. "I see more of those than I see viable packages."

The Advertising Age/Beta Research study suggests media companies that rely solely on the one-

Cross-media deals may be the latest hot button in media departments these days, but so far, few agencies have been able to push it.

Media directors' interest in such packages is strong.

In the Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey, 23.8% say they're very interested in joint-venture multimedia ad deals and 52.5% are somewhat interested.

Nevertheless, only 24.3% have participated in such buys. Among those who haven't, 58.2% say the reason is lack of opportunity.

At Ally & Gargano, New York, for example, packages that sellers have presented don't quite match the needs of the agency's clients, says Dawn Sibley, exec VP-director of media and communications services.

"It's not like ABC is selling with Family Circle," she says. She adds that the Time Warner packages include cable TV, "and we still see cable as an ancillary medium."

Some buyers say clients are leery of multimedia deals because they seem appropriate only for major advertisers, an impression fostered by publicity surrounding such deals as General Motors Corp.'s $80 million link with Time Warner.

"[The client's] reaction is, 'That's too big for me; that would take up too great a portion of my budget,' " says Norm Goldring, president-ceo, CPM Media Management, a Chicago-based media buying service.

The "too big" complaint is common among media buyers who haven't participated in such deals, the Advertising Age/Beta Research survey shows. In addition to lack of opportunity, 12.4% of respondents say they haven't participated in multimedia deals because the total price of the packages is too high, and another 11.1% say clients aren't interested in them.

"There are clients out there who don't want them: They're labor-intensive, and they can't be measured in the computer as well as, say, four Super Bowl minutes," says Larry Spiegel, principal at Richards Group, Dallas.

Moreover, some buyers say sellers are out of step with the smaller advertisers.

"They kind of sell the concept as being big for big people," says Kathleen Hall, senior VP-media director, Leonard Monahan Lubars & Kelly, Providence, R.I.

"Time Warner talks about the big picture but they don't give you specific ideas on how [multimedia deals] might work on a smaller level," she says. "I asked [Time Warner] how it might work for us on our level, and they were real vague." □

Instant lesson

So, the idea of multimedia deals has a certain allure, a cachet, a je ne sais quoi? Just follow these three easy guidelines and wait for the fun to begin:

1. Beware of media companies bearing packages.
They'll try to sell you every media thing they own, cheap. If it doesn't reach the target audience by itself, it won't as part of a package either.
Bad sign: The media company person says, "We also have a TV station in Fresno."

2. Tear down the walls, forget the profit centers.
Your people really do have to work together on this. So do the folks running parts of the media company and client.
Bad sign: Brand manager says, "Whose budget does that come out of?"

3. Somebody's got to pull the trigger.
Multimedia deals are made by senior-level people who have the power to say yes or no.
Bad sign: Your counterparts say, simultaneously, "May I use your phone?"

Sure, you get a daily dose of the facts in print, but a newspaper is still something you flip through, and then toss away.

Why crowd your idea into a cluttered medium between competitive ads and articles, when you can make it big in the movies? The only crowding at Cineplex Odeon Cinemas is in the line to see today's box office hits.

When was the last time someone asked if you saw a certain hot new movie? Movie advertising isn't just part of media exposure, it's being part of an event. What other medium do you make plans for in advance? Shave for? Make sure you have someone to go with?

After all, where do you take your date on a Saturday night—to the newspaper?

Face it—you belong in the big time. Movies.

The magic of the movies is the big screen, the luscious colour, the Dolby stereo and the group experience. If this sounds like great entertainment, it's also a great way to sell your product. Commercials, on the big screen, just like the movies themselves.

Ralston, cable net make 'value-added' come to life

By Alison Fahey

Cable is going to the dogs, and Ralston Purina Co. and The Family Channel are lapping it up.

What started as a routine upfront cable buy last August ended up as a comprehensive value-added package that thrust Ike, the marketer's Lucky Dog brand spokesdog, onto a million TV sets via a cameo appearance on Family Channel's "Maniac Mansion." For its part, Family Channel got an increased advertising commitment from Ralston and mentions in Ralston advertising and promotional efforts.

All in all, the nine-month process linked the marketing and promotional departments of the package-goods marketer, the cable TV network, a media buying agency and an ad agency. Here's a step-by-step look at how the elements came into play.

■ Early August: Ralston makes 1990-91 upfront cable buy on Family Channel for many of its brands.

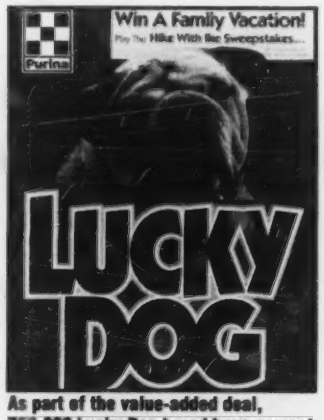
■ Mid-August: Family Channel and Ralston discuss value-added programs in exchange for Ralston increasing its budget.

■ Late September: Ralston marketing executives present Family Channel with a promotion budget for Lucky Dog and propose a plan to have spokesdog Ike stand apart in a competitive market. The channel approaches four producers of 10 of its original series to see which show would best incorporate Ike into a script.

■ Early October: Family Channel meets with Ralston and Advanswers, St. Louis, its media buying agency, and proposes tying in Ike with an unspecified original series along with on-air promo spots.

■ Late October: Channel writers and producers meet with Ralston's Lucky Dog brand managers and all agree Ike will make a cameo appearance on the sitcom "Maniac Mansion" as Ike, the Lucky Dog.

■ Early November: Ralston approaches Family Channel with "Hike With Ike" sweepstakes idea in which viewers call a 900 number and guess which U.S. landmark Ike is calling from after getting clues. Calls cost 90¢ per minute; the average call costs $1.80. Right answers qualify callers for the game. Ralston offers to put the logos for Family Channel and "Maniac Mansion" on 750,000 Lucky Dog bags.



As part of the value-added deal, 750,000 Lucky Dog brand bags cement the link with Family Channel.

■ Late November: The script of "Maniac Mansion" featuring Ike is written.

■ December: Executives from Ralston and Family Channel and Ike travel to Toronto to shoot "Maniac Mansion."

■ January: Ralston and Family Channel negotiate a deal in which Ralston tags its 30-second image spots running on the channel with mentions of "Maniac Mansion" and the cable network. In exchange, Family Channel would regain time from local systems in a combination cash/barter deal, giving Ralston extra exposure in certain markets.

■ February: Family Channel produces an ad for TV Guide featuring Ike with "Maniac Mansion" star Joe Flaherty. The channel also starts producing on-air spots to mention Ike the dog's cameo.

■ March 1: 750,000 Lucky Dog brand dog food bags appear in supermarkets nationwide featuring details of the promotion. "Maniac Mansion" and Family Channel logos appear on the bags.

Ralston starts its image campaign on Family Channel with some spots tagged with Family Channel and "Maniac Mansion" logos. The channel starts on-air spots for "Hike With Ike" sweepstakes and his appearance on "Maniac Mansion."

■ March 5: The cable network hosts a luncheon in St. Louis for executives from Ralston and Advanswers to screen the upcoming show.

■ March 9: Ad runs in TV Guide. Coincidentally, the same issue features a cover story on "TV's most pampered pets."

■ March 10: Ike makes his debut on "Maniac Mansion" as part of a dream sequence in which he is "created" in a laboratory and named Ike, the Lucky Dog. Program gets a 1.8 rating (about 1 million homes).

■ May: Ralston counts 25,000 phone calls and 30,000 write-in entries to the promotion.

Ralston "was very pleased with the promotional exposure for Lucky Dog," says Patrick Farrell, manager-corporate information. "From that standpoint, we would do it again." □

Very addictive

'Value-added' plans hook marketers, and they won't let go

By Alison Fahey

Media companies beware: value-added programs are taking on narcotic properties.

"The client has become dependent on them; it's like a drug," says John Barbera, president of Turner Broadcasting Sales, a unit of Turner Broadcasting System.

The Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of media directors shows just how powerful a narcotic value-added programs have become. Asked to rank nine media decision-making factors on a scale of 1 to 5, where 5 is very important and 1 is not important at all, surveyed media directors gave value-added programs the top mean score of 3.96. Media-provided research ranked No. 2 at 3.39 and special events at 2.97.

"Value added" has evolved into a vague term used to describe any elements of a deal above and beyond the actual media buy, including special events. These extras frequently are offered at discount rates or no additional charge, and they run the gamut from promotions to custom publishing to free inventory in other media.

"The smart advertisers are really using the media to beef up their promotion efforts," says Dawn Sibley, exec VP-director of media and communications services at Ally & Gargano, New York. "[The media] throw in everything from the printing of booklets to tickets to tennis tournaments."

Clients and their agencies have come to expect value-added marketing programs, and media companies are quick to offer them.

However, media and agency executives say clients may come to rely too heavily on value-added marketing programs, which media companies may not always be so willing to offer.

"True," agrees Bonnie Barest, senior VP-media director at Bloom FCA, New York. "Once [media companies] set precedent, it'll be real hard to give it up."

However, she adds, agencies and clients look at value-added deals in a different way than media companies. "It's more of a partnership role [between clients and the media]," Ms. Barest says. "It's not something that should go away when there's more money available. In fact, there could be more of these types of programs when things are good."

Therein lies the danger for media companies looking to throw in some extras in tough times to make the sale.

"In a down economy you give, give, give," Mr. Barbera says. "When the economy bounces back, clients will still expect you to give." □

Data stream turns torrential

Swimming in research, buyers grasp at syndicated over media surveys

By Scott Hume

Thanks to the media, agency buyers are drowning in data.

Each year, magazines, newspapers, broadcasters and out-of-home media send out a flood of quantitative research on subscriber or audience makeup. They balance this with qualitative surveys, profiling their audience's lifestyle interests and buying habits.

The results of both kinds of research land primarily at advertising agencies, where the reception to them is mixed.

The research is intended to provide agencies with information on consumer buying habits not available through standard syndicated research sources.

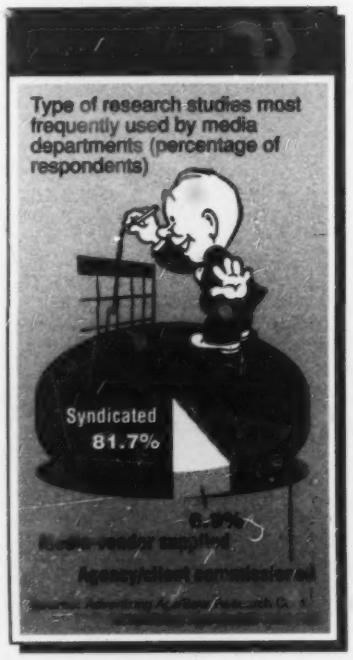
But the stacks of surveys also serve as a key sales tool, meant to impress on media buyers the importance of reaching the audience of a specific media property. That built-in bias always has made the media's own research suspect among some agency executives.

And with the information overflow now washing over agencies and the fiscal burdens media are facing, the role of media-supplied research is in question.

"Media companies pay money to have numbers that support their sales positions. It gives the sales reps something to talk about, but usually it's just not responsive to my needs," says Roger Baron, VP-director of media research at Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago.

"That's not to say it doesn't have a role. It does, but it's a supporting role. It can help reinforce the case if you're recommending a new magazine or new media the syndicated research doesn't cover," he says. "But really I'd rather stick with research that we've paid for."

Mr. Baron's not alone in that thinking, according to the Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey. When asked which type of research they use most often, only 6.9% of media directors say media vendors' studies. The majority—81.7%—turn to syndicated studies first, then client or agency-commissioned, custom research.



Robert Dillingham, VP-publisher of Hearst Corp.'s Popular Mechanics, concedes the primary importance of syndicated research but says that needn't negate the value of media-supplied data.

"Simmons and MRI and other syndicators have made the job of the media buyer easier, but the magazines still do proprietary studies to prove a point and to provide information that isn't available elsewhere," he says.

That information doesn't go ignored by media buyers. While media buyers may prefer other types of research, in a ranking of media sales tools, media-provided research ranks second only to value-added programs in terms of usefulness and ability to influence buyers' decision making, the Ad Age/Beta Research survey shows.

Michael White, exec VP-director, media department at DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, and others agree media-supplied audience research has a role—if properly understood and used.

"It very definitely has a place. All it needs is someone at the agency to evaluate it," Mr. White says.

"We encourage it. In some cases, we're pleading for it. We need to know where the consumer's mind is when reading a magazine, and we need to understand what messages they'd be open to. To me, that springs from the kind of editorial research [the media] do, and not what the syndicators do."

Such research serves to communicate the media company's story, says Margery Gladstone, associate publisher of Lear's, which has just completed a major readership study.

"For those who want to sell the lifestyle flavor of a book, and not just the numbers, [media-provided research] tends to tell much more than the syndicated research," Ms. Gladstone says.

"The huge magazines may not need to undertake as much research, but for smaller magazines, under 1 million subscribers, where the lifestyle fabric of the readership is so important, it's vital," she says.

Additionally, Ms. Gladstone says magazines that don't provide their own research studies court the perception that the numbers were too unfavorable to be released.

The development of new media, especially so-called "place-based" media, such as Actmedia and Turner Broadcasting System's in-store Checkout Channel or Whittle Communications' Special Reports Television in doctors' offices, has given media-supplied research additional importance.

Syndicated media research doesn't adequately cover some of these outlets, so agencies rely on the media themselves to provide audience information.

"The place-based media have recognized that they don't exist except for the numbers they generate, so their research is vital and it is improving," says Bob Warrens, senior VP-director, media resources & research at J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

"These media have turned to A.C. Nielsen [Co.] or other established research vendors and developed a list of procedural guidelines to lend credibility to the emerging media and make the research usable. They know they can't sell [their media] unless the research meets industry standards."

Adds Bruce Goerlich, senior VP-media research at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York: "Would I take syndicated research over media-supplied? Sure. But when a magazine or a medium is new and unproven, you're buying from an investment point of view.

"All the new media are going to need research on traffic or subscribers, and we need to look at it and evaluate it, so I don't see the area of media-supplied research going away."

> "I'd rather stick with research that we've paid for."

The overall quality of both the audience and attitudinal research being supplied by the media has improved in recent years, many agency executives say, in part because more of it is being done by established researchers.

"A lot of it used to be very self-serving, based on selected facts, like a sales brochure," JWT's Mr. Warrens says. "Now the syndicators themselves are doing a lot of it and putting their own reputations behind this research."

Gaining credibility from an independent research company has become crucial, says Rick Jones, research director for Reader's Digest, which recently released a study on consumers and the environment conducted by Beta Research.

"The research needs to be perceived as independent and objective; that's why third-party involvement is important," he says.

While commissioning research is a "serious" financial commitment for Reader's Digest, Mr. Jones says the outlays are more than covered by the goodwill the magazine receives.

"We set up the Reader's Digest Consumer Panel two years ago. More than 50 clients took advantage of it last year [for research projects].

"It's an asset for our clients, and in this conservative market, many companies have reduced their in-house market research staffs," Mr. Jones says. "It gives us a proactive sales tool that can be part of an added-value package or utilized on a fee basis.

"While we look at every dollar we spend, are we looking at cutting budget for research? Not at this time or for the foreseeable future," he says.

The recession is decreasing the amount of new media outlets, especially magazines, being developed, but otherwise agency executives say they haven't felt the amount of media-supplied research decreasing.

That doesn't mean it won't be changing.

"I think you'll see more pooling of research in the larger media companies," Mr. Dillingham says. Hearst already has restructured its research department to allow more sharing of corporate data on consumers.

"And with the attention being given to cross-media packages, it's only natural that multimedia research will follow. Where you might once have had a Life study on entertainment trends, maybe you'll see a Time Warner study. But there'll still be value, and there'll still be interest." □

When did you first start reading the newspaper? [Age] 13 or 14. I delivered newspapers, so I just liked reading while I was delivering. I mostly read the sports [section].

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The Chicago Tribune.

What was your first magazine subscription? Sports Illustrated. I think I started getting them as a gift.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Sports Illustrated and, occasionally, GQ or People. I like Sports Illustrated because I want to keep on top of what's going on [in sports].

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "The $6 Million Man," "60 Minutes," "Walt Disney" and "Monday Night Football."

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "Thirtysomething" and "Hill Street Blues."

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Cheers," "L.A. Law," "Murphy Brown," "Coach" and "Doogie Howser, M.D."

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? "SportsCenter" on ESPN. Every night around 10:00 or 10:30. It's just a half-hour or hour of sports of the day—what happened—with box scores.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? [I have] no idea.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Pop, Top 40. I think pretty much all teen-agers like pop music. I don't know why.

What type of radio do you listen to now? New music, alternative rock. I listen to WXRT-FM [a Chicago progressive music station] in particular. I'm sick of Top 40.

What childhood movie influenced your life? "Rocky," because it was a good story of how you should never give up.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Silence of the Lambs." It was scary, and there was something about [the character Hannibal Lecter] that you liked.

What actor would you want to play your life story? Robin Williams, because I crave his sense of humor.

Making a short run

Those long-term ad packages, in this environment, are set for early cancellation

By Bradley Johnson

The prognosis for long-term media deals isn't particularly healthy.

While a big spender such as General Motors Corp. has shaken the industry with expansive multiyear packages, many media and marketing executives contend such long-term ad contracts are destined to remain the exception.

The recession is cutting off any immediate chances of long-term deals becoming commonplace as media outlets and advertisers alike worry more about coming months than coming years.

Although multiyear ad schedules should hold more appeal as the economy recovers, many media executives say even under better circumstances such contracts' appeal will remain limited.

Their prediction is supported by the Advertising Age/Beta Research Corp. survey of media directors in which only 14.9% say they are very interested in such deals and 37.6% claim to be somewhat interested. This compares with 20.3% who say they're somewhat disinterested and 27.2% who say they aren't interested at all.

"There hasn't been any great groundswell among national advertisers or retail advertisers to sign into multiple-year contracts," says John Kosanke, exec VP of Newspapers First, national rep for Knight-Ridder, Times Mirror Co. and other papers. "It could grow as we come out of the recession . . . [but] will never be a major factor."

Multiyear deals' primary attraction is potential cost savings, say 67% of surveyed media directors. But this benefit is lessened by the current depressed ad market, leading media sellers to shy away from offering long-term packages at today's media prices.

"It's a buyers' market," says one magazine executive who asked not to be identified. "It's not to a publisher's advantage to make a commitment two or three years out."

The drop in network TV's upfront prices this year, effectively returning prices to 1989 levels, offers another reason for advertisers' reluctance, says George Mahrlig, director of media services at Campbell Soup Co. "Doing a long-term contract last year wouldn't have put you in a very good condition this year," he says.

Both media buyers and sellers are accustomed to planning by quarter or a year out at most, another impediment to making multiyear pacts work. The amount of time or space advertisers purchase in various media also fluctuates year to year, offering little incentive to buy long-term.

"The tendency right now is to keep the funds as flexible as possible," says George Hayes, senior VP-director of media planning at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

The strongest multiyear deals for both sides are multimedia programs that give an advertiser the flexibility to move dollars among media owned by one company, but not too much flexibility to pull spending out of the company, Mr. Hayes says.

As it stands, multiyear contracts crop up most frequently where a media outlet has a hot property with limited available ad inventory. Almost 22% of surveyed media directors say guaranteeing an advertiser's presence in specific programming is the primary attraction of multiyear pacts.

ABC Radio Networks' "Paul Harvey Show," for example, is able to negotiate extended ad contracts because Mr. Harvey is sold out year-round, says Louis Severine, ABC Radio's senior VP-director of sales.

Multiyear deals also occur on TV and radio sports broadcasts, where the audience tends to be predictable and an advertiser wants to lock in a position to reach that particular audience.

Anheuser-Busch Cos. and Unocal Corp., for example, have five-year contracts to sponsor the Los Angeles Dodgers on KABC-AM. George Green, the station's president-general manager, says sponsorship of the baseball team entitles the companies to better rates and gives them merchandising advantages, such as in-stadium signage, personal appearances by baseball players and tickets.

Most ad reps, particularly in print, don't have the luxury of selling a finite medium, meaning advertisers face little chance of being locked out if they hold off on making a decision.

"We can always print more pages," says Craig Standen, VP-marketing/advertising at Scripps-Howard. "It's not like we're going to run out of paper."

Rather than pushing simple long-term contracts, Mr. Standen says he's more interested in developing ad programs that tie together a newspaper, special sections, preprints and a paper's alternative-distribution delivery service, allowing advertisers to reach either the total market or narrowly targeted consumers.

Other media executives and advertisers place similar hopes in packaging single-year buys involving one or more media rather than in pursuing long-term contracts. Such programs help wed an advertiser to a media outlet on the theory that a series of short-term ad contracts will create a long-term relationship.

At Runner's World, for example, Publisher George Hirsch attracted ads from Alamo Rent-A-Car by helping it organize a series of races. As long as Alamo is interested in racing, it presumably will be in Runner's World—even though its contract runs only for one year at a time.

Though short-term deals apparently will remain the standard, many executives at both media companies and advertisers say multiyear contracts will gain at least some acceptance in coming years.

"Like everything else, it starts with a running start, then you stumble, then you start running again," McCann's Mr. Hayes says. "Right now, we're in the stumbling phase."

But Mr. Hayes is reluctant to say just how soon—and to what degree—multiyear deals will take off.

"Everybody's going to be a little bit more tentative" emerging from the recession, he says, so for the foreseeable future there will not be any run on multiple-year deals. □

When did you first start reading the newspaper? Probably about eighth grade. I had to start reading The New York Times for class every day.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? The New York Times. I usually read the world news section and the advertising column in the Business section. I like Wednesdays especially, with the Life section and the Metropolitan Diary.

What was your first magazine subscription? Seventeen. I cheated; I was about 15 when I got it, but I thought I was really cool because I was reading Seventeen at my age. I liked the write-in questions that the magazine would answer.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Glamour, probably for the same reasons I read Seventeen back then; Premiere, because I like to know about movies, production and actors; and Time or Newsweek, if I can get my hands on them.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? I remember I used to watch "Emergency!" on Saturday nights. I also liked "The Brady Bunch." Marcia was probably my favorite Brady kid.

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "Thirtysomething." Now I'm going to have to find something to do on Tuesday nights.

What are your favorite TV shows now? "L.A. Law" occasionally, "Murphy Brown," "Designing Women"—all the women 25-to-54 shows.

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? My parents first got cable when I was home [after graduation] from college. I liked watching the movies on the premium stations. I also liked MTV.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show or network now? It's hard to say because when I think of something that's hot, I think of something that people talk about a lot. I don't really get a sense that there's anything that's hot. But I think the most innovative, changing network is MTV. I like to catch the Top 20 video countdown, and I zap into it once in a while.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Top 40. I remember hearing a lot of Elton . hn. Probably the first album I got was by Styx or Chicago.

What type of radio do you listen to now? Classic rock. But sometimes I'll flip back to Top 40. I feel like I'm getting old when I don't know what the Top 20 singles are.

What childhood movie influenced your life? The first movie I remember seeing is "The Sound of Music." For a while I wanted to move to Austria, become a nun, marry a guy with a million kids and sing in the Alps. But maybe it didn't influence my life a lot since I'm doing what I'm doing now.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Dances With Wolves." I like Kevin Costner, and I thought the movie was really well-done. It didn't seem like a three-hour movie.

What actress would you want to play your life story? Michelle Pfeiffer. I think she'd add a lot of glamor to my life.

When did you first start reading the newspaper? I guess it was probably not until high school, probably for a class in which we had to keep track of current events.

It was really a class that started me off getting interested in newspapers. Before that, though, I always kept an eye on the sports page.

What newspapers do you read for world events, news? Primarily the [Chicago] Tribune. I occasionally glance through [The Wall Street] Journal if something catches my eye, primarily in the marketing section.

What was your first magazine subscription? Boys' Life. I was a Boy Scout. And then, shortly thereafter, I started reading Sports Illustrated.

What magazines do you read for pleasure now? Golf Digest, Time, Newsweek and U.S. News [& World Report] are the biggies, and Sports Illustrated still.

What were your favorite TV shows as a kid? "The Brady Bunch" and "The Partridge Family." It was a big deal getting to stay up to watch those. "Wide World of Sports" was a biggie. Then I gradually progressed to the Saturday night shows: "Love Boat" and "Fantasy Island."

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? Nothing offhand. I always was able to find or do something else equally entertaining.

What are your favorite TV shows now? Golf tournaments on Saturdays and weekend sports in general. "L.A. Law" is my prime-time favorite.

What show captured your fancy when you first got cable? "ESPN SportsCenter" and "CNN Headline News," because they were great capsule looks. Within 30 minutes, you could get a great idea of what was going on worldwide in sports and in the news.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? The best thing I can think of is the NBA playoffs on Turner.

Also, excluding the war coverage that was on CNN, I'd say the "MTV Music Video Awards" is a pretty good program, especially in terms of ratings for the size audience that could even see the show.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? As a youngster, I listened to hockey and baseball games. And surprisingly, I listened to morning talk shows with my folks as a little kid.

What type of radio do you listen to now? Now I listen to mostly classic rock, like older-type rock formats, more-music formats.

Both the time I listen to radio and the reason for listening have changed. Now it's more of a background medium; when I was younger, I was trying to get something, there was more of a direct purpose.

What childhood movie influenced your life? "Jaws." I still keep a light on in the house. That was so dramatic.

What's the last good movie you saw? "Dances With Wolves." I liked the overall cinematography of the film; certainly [Kevin Costner] had the ability to do what he wanted with film; he didn't have to crunch it into two hours. It was well-produced.

What actor would you want to play in your life story? Bill Murray. He could pull it off the best because he doesn't take himself too seriously.

agency's clients and their needs without "canned," blandly generic presentations.

"I would like the ideal rep to do his homework or her homework before bolting into the meeting room with 65 boards and 32 slides," Mr. Kushins says.

He'd like presentations that are "more brief, focused and relevant to my clients' business. I don't want to have to tell people who my clients are. There's no excuse for that. I want them to be my business partner, bring me ideas and bring me concepts."

Buyers also don't want to see media reps who are desperate for an order.

"The sign of the most professional reps or good reps are the ones who keep our clients at the top of their minds and may forgo the immediate sale for what's better for the client," says Mickey Marks, associate media director at Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, New York.

"The people I end up talking with are more able to talk about multidimensional deals" involving several properties of the media company, or about a long-range program that won't necessarily lead to a quick "buy" order, he says.

Sellers also should more often court media planners who help set strategy, not just buyers who place orders, agency executives say. That way, sellers will feel a part of the marketing process and can often suggest innovative programs before it's too late.

But some agency executives believe they must accept at least part of the blame for media sellers' emphasis on price.

"One of the main reasons reps aren't any better is that agencies aren't very good," Mr. White says. "Agencies will ask magazine people: 'I need merchandising; I need value-added,' . . . without a clue of what they want to be negotiating for.

"We have to be a lot smarter strategically, [because] clients don't understand media very well. They can understand 4% less [on prices], but to know the value of an end-aisle display, it's a whole lot harder to quantify." □

What cancellation of a broadcast TV show saddened you? "M*A*S*H" and "thirtysomething."

What are your favorite TV shows now? "Cheers," reruns of "I Love Lucy" and "M*A*S*H." "Murphy Brown" and "Designing Women." I like sitcoms.

I don't like things where I have to think, because I have to think too much on the job.

What show or channel captured your fancy when you first got cable? American Movie Classics. I like watching old movies.

What do you feel is the hottest cable show now? I really couldn't tell you. I don't watch a lot of cable.

What type of radio did you listen to as a kid? Contemporary hit radio. I just liked the personalities. I grew up in Houston and they had a great morning zoo.

What type of radio do you listen to now? Adult contemporary and Christian talk radio.

What childhood movie influenced your life? "Mary Poppins." I just thought Mary Poppins was a perfectly practical person—that was what she called herself.

What's the last good movie you saw? "The Hunt for Red October." I liked the action.

What actress would you want to play your life story? Vivien Leigh, just because she's sassy and spirited. I think I could use that in my life, but deep down she has a good heart.

stop argument will be disappointed. Only 9.7% of the respondents who say they are interested in multimedia buys cite "one-stop buying/ordering" as the reason.

Cited most often—by 50% of the respondents—is the ability to reach the target audience. About one-third cite cost advantages.

Perhaps even more than agencies, media companies also must shed their profit center outlook, agency executives say.

For example, individual publishers, out to protect their own budgets, might not want to participate in a multimedia deal.

The solution is to put a high-level executive in charge of the packages, "someone who has the authority to insist the individual companies participate in the overall deal," Mr. Drexler says.

That's what happened in the Chrysler/Time Warner deal, he says, when he dealt directly with Donald Elliman, an exec VP of Time Warner's magazine operations who had the power to combine assets.

When more than one brand is involved, the same problems of self-interest can crop up at clients. Agency executives cite, for example, brand managers only interested in their own brands.

"What they are not interested in, many times, is the grand scheme of the company, or large corporate savings that can be effected by doing one of these deals," Mr. Wray says.

These obstacles could prove significant enough to dash existing high hopes for multimedia deals.

"I think in everybody's dreams we'd love [the multimedia deal] to be" the wave of the future, says McCann-Erickson's Mr. Link. "The reality of thinking it through and making it really work is something else."

Bozell's Mr. Drexler says he is unfazed by the skepticism.

"I don't pay any attention to the naysayers," he says. "When they figure out how to do multimedia deals right, they'll be converts, I assure you." □

Max Factor to Lotas Minard

CINCINNATI—Procter & Gamble will assign the $15 million U.S. creative portion of the Max Factor account to Lotas Minard Patton McIver, New York, sources close to the company said. P&G is finalizing its $1.1 billion acquisition of the Factor and Betrix cosmetics and fragrance lines from Revlon. Although P&G wouldn't comment, principals from Lotas Minard were said to be at Max Factor's Los Angeles offices last week conducting focus groups. The agency has been on P&G's roster since the company bought Noxell in 1989. The winner of the international portion of Factor hadn't been determined at press time. Also undetermined was the fate of Betrix's brands, predominantly sold overseas. Sources said local conflicts at P&G's big agencies may be making the international assignment more complicated. Tarlow Advertising, New York, was Factor's agency of record, while Betrix has been handled by a variety of agencies.

Canadian ad ban overturned

MONTREAL—Canada's ban on tobacco advertising has been declared unconstitutional. The Superior Court in a July 26 ruling called the ban a violation of free speech and an intrusion into affairs of local government. RJR MacDonald, the Canadian division of R.J. Reynolds International, and Imperial Tobacco had challenged the law. In 1988, the year before the ban took effect, tobacco ad spending was $80 million. Although details and implications weren't clear at press time, an RJR International

Bell ruling rings alarm

ANPA gets ready to fight against new phone services

By Christy Fisher

A decision by U.S. District Judge Harold Greene last week allowing regional telephone companies to offer information services—such as news by phone—that would compete with newspapers is triggering a huge battle.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association, which has long feared the phone companies, said it would fight the ruling.

Newspapers will be "devastatingly affected should the regional Bell operating companies enter the same marketplace," said Terry Maguire, senior VP-general counsel of the ANPA.

Judge Greene's order, which remains under a court-ordered stay pending appeals, said an appeals court decision last year forced him to lift the ban. Judge Greene oversaw the 1984 breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The ANPA's Mr. Maguire said this isn't just an advertising issue.

"It's an information issue," he said. "It affects all the information that travels over the telephone line, which includes all the information carried in newspapers today."

The association "will be primarily looking to the courts and the Congress" to prevent the seven regional Bell operating companies from providing information services over their own phone lines, he said.

It will also look for help from the Federal Communications Commission and state public utility commissions, he said.

The ANPA fears advertisers, whether classified or even retail, might eventually

Recession's bleak legacy

Ad biz may never be the same

By Judann Dagnoli

A lingering cloud of recession is leading the advertising industry to a point of no return.

While the U.S. economy is believed to be bouncing back, marketing executives say advertising, always slower to rebound, may never get back to "business as usual" when the recession finally lifts.

One effect will be a continuing scramble for media economies long after the recession ends, sources say.

According to an Advertising Age survey of top media, marketing and agency executives, most expect some relief from tight ad budgets by the fourth quarter of this year, but others don't anticipate beefed up spending until mid-1992 and still others don't see a full recovery on the horizon until '93.

Harvard Business School professor John Quelch said he believes ad budgets "will see progressive relief toward the end of the year," but the spending peak of 1988-89 won't return until 1993, at least.

Many experts believe even a full recovery won't mean a return to advertising's boom years.

"I'm leery that [the advertising economy] will ever come back," said Don Schultz, professor of advertising at Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism. "There have been basic changes occurring in the concept of how to reach people, and mass

Media trade groups tottering

By Joe Mandese

The future of some media trade groups is on the line.

Organizations promoting TV, radio, magazine and newspaper advertising are facing falling memberships and hard economic times that threaten at least one group's very existence.

In the latest development, a board meeting is set for July 31 to discuss dismantling the Television Bureau of Advertising, merging with another group or streamlining operations.

The 37-year-old TvB has downsized considerably, reducing its less than $10 million operating budget by $1.6 million in the past 18 months as membership has fallen to an all-time low. Less than 400 of the nearly 1,000 U.S. commercial TV stations are now members; Fox Broadcasting Co. is the last network member.

CBS and NBC dropped out this year; ABC quit several years ago. The Big 3 networks launched their own trade group, the Network Television Association, last year.

"Our clock is ticking," said TvB President Jim Joyella. Any further loss of support "could permanently alter who we are."

TvB has had preliminary merger discussions with the National Association of Broadcasters and the National Association of Television Program Executives.

The newspaper industry also faces downsizing.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association and the Newspaper Advertising Bureau are consolidating administrative functions at the ANPA's headquarters in Reston, Va.

Moreover, the NAB is expected to absorb the International Newspaper Advertising & Marketing Executives, International Circulation Managers Association, International Newspeper Marketing Association, Newspaper Research Council, Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers and Newspaper Advertising Co-op Network.

Welcome to the club, pal.

As a reader of Advertising Age, you have distinguished yourself as a member of a particularly hardworking group of people.

According to FaxTrack results, just about everybody in the advertiser, agency and media business works overtime. While it's not surprising those who work overtime are most likely to complain about it, a stunning 217 of 219 respondents say they put in extra hours.

Murray Alcosser/The Image Bank

As one wrote in, "It's 7 p.m. now!"

Two respondents who don't toil overtime work at media companies. Not that media companies are a picnic: 66.1% of responding media company employees say they work overtime four or more days a week.

The hardest working people in the related industries: ad agency employees. Almost 85% say they work overtime four or more days a week, including 30.8% who work at least one weekend day.

No surprise then that 82.7% say working overtime has an adverse impact on their personal lives. As one agency respondent asked, "Excuse me? What personal life?"

The best attitudes about working overtime—or perhaps the worst personal lives—reside with media company employees. Only 48.4% of the 64 media company respondents say working overtime adversely affects personal lives.

Given relative size of paychecks, it's not surprising upper managers across the various industries don't feel put upon by putting in overtime. Only 34.2% of the 73 responding upper managers say they are overworked and 54.8% say overtime hurts their personal lives. Almost 67% of the 93 middle manager respondents say they're overworked, and 73.1% say it's hurting their off-hours lives. And in the sweat shop, 71.7% of the 53 "worker bees" say they're overworked and 88.7% say it's killing their lives out of the office.

What might help matters is some compensation for their efforts. But workers across all industries and job levels say this is scarce.

Asked if they received overtime pay or comp time, one client company middle manager simply wrote in, "Ha-ha-ha."

Worker bees do best in overtime pay: 22.6% say they get it, while only 2.7% of upper managers and 5.4% of middle managers are paid to stay after hours. Upper managers are tops in comp time at 28.8% compared with only 11.8% of middle managers and 13.2% of worker bees. □

BALANCING ACT

Coordinated strategy, commitment critical to wooing minority staffers

By Wendy Hickey

Minority marketing executives are an increasingly hot commodity as companies target minority consumers or aim to boost racial diversity.

"There is a tremendous need for minorities in our marketing departments—in all fields—and an extremely tight supply," says Eleanor Raynolds, a partner at Ward Howell International, an executive search company.

A recent American Society of Newspaper Editors conference focused in part on the need for that segment of the industry to attract qualified minority employees. Although the number of minority journalists has more than doubled in the last 10 years, minorities make up only 8.7% of newspaper work forces while minorities account for almost 20% of the U.S. population.

One reason for the disparity is qualified minority talent often is difficult to find.

"Even with the glut of MBAs, all companies are competing for the top percentage, and you've got to court those people," says Herbert Allen, manager of human resources and college relations for Quaker Oats Co.

"With minorities, you've got to court them even more. You have to support their groups on campus. If you're not there, or if you're just a showcase, they are abundantly aware."

With such competition, attracting the best minority talent requires a coordinated strategy and commitment to a corporate minority policy, several recruiters say.

William Shackelford, president and founder of Industry Education Connection, a minority recruitment and retention consultancy, advises companies to develop a clear statement of goals that specifies a realistic number of minorities to recruit within a fixed time span.

Companies should then designate one individual to coordinate all efforts, he says.

"To have a single-minded message, no overlap and a single image on campus, you have to be coordinated internally," says Mr. Shackelford, whose client list includes Procter & Gamble Co. and IBM Corp.

To locate candidates, Mr. Shackelford recommends recruiters comb the nation's top business schools, seeking out programs with good track records in graduating and placing minorities, such as the Wharton School of Business at the University of Pennsylvania.

Making contacts with leaders of national minority organizations also should be a part of a recruitment plan, he says. Consortium for Graduate Study in Management, a fellowship program designed to hasten the entry of minorities into managerial business positions, is one organization replete with minority marketing talent, says Linda Cooper, director of minority affairs at Hallmark Cards.

Finding senior minority marketers takes even more work.

Mr. Shackelford suggests companies supplement the on-campus search for recruits with a visit to alumni offices and college minority directors. An increasing number of college alumni departments have adopted the role of job-placement companies.

"Once you get away from the institution you graduated from, there are precious little places you can go" to find help in a job search, says Ron Anderson, director of minority affairs at the University of Chicago. The university created an alumni career-management program in July 1989, and Mr. Anderson keeps a data base on minority alumni and gives corporate referrals.

Executive search agencies are a possible but costly route, Mr. Shackelford says. Such companies also often don't conduct searches based on race, Ms. Raynolds adds.

Good alternatives are professional organizations, such as the National Business League, which is composed of minority businesses, and professional associations. The league offers members the services of its corporate advisory council, which helps match human-resource managers with minority candidates.

Once a company locates the right candidates, they must be wooed by minorities in senior management roles, Mr. Allen says.

"If minority candidates see minority people in decision-making positions, they will see your company . . . is truly interested in them and what they bring to the table," he says. □

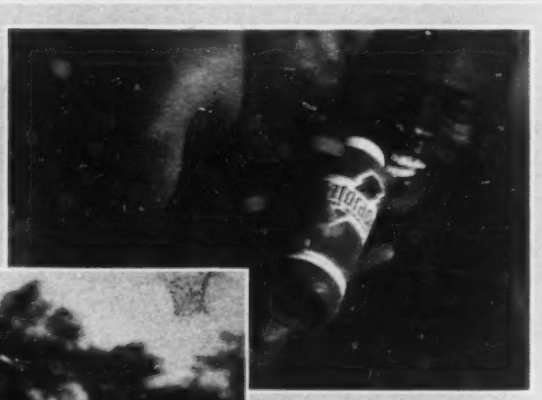
Jordan stars for Gatorade



Quaker Oats Co. last week officially announced that it bagged the biggest name in sports endorsements, Michael Jordan, as worldwide spokesman for Gatorade. TV spots and a print ad featuring the Chicago Bulls star broke late last week. Bayer Bess Vanderwarker, Chicago, handles the ads, which say, "Be like Mike. P&G launches new-product war

Toothbrush test leads U.S. sales effort

By Jennifer Lawrence

Procter & Gamble Co., anxious to invigorate its U.S. business, is waging its most aggressive new-product assault in recent history.

The marketer is entering the U.S. toothbrush category for the first time and launching new attacks in diapers and detergents.

This fall, the company will test a toothbrush called Crest Complete. The product will enter three Texas markets—Houston, San Antonio and Austin—with TV support from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.

By entering the $420 million toothbrush category, P&G takes on No. 1 Oral-B from Gillette Co., No. 2 Colgate and No. 3 Reach from Johnson & Johnson, all big advertisers.

prised analysts, but it reflects P&G's commitment to new-product initiatives, which the company said last week were greater than in "any period in recent history."

P&G is banking on the toothbrush's unique rippled bristles designed to get farther between teeth than flat bristles. The patented manufacturing process and bristle design will be the backbone of the product's positioning.

TV commercials for Crest Complete will carry a theme similar to "Teeth aren't flat, so why is your brush?" Advertising is likely to start in September in San Antonio and Houston.

A different 30-second commercial has been airing in Austin with a tag for a 900 phone number for consumers to get a free sample. The product will appear on

Turner tunes in to direct mail

By Alison Fahey

Turner Broadcasting System is muscling in on the promotional direct mail business to distribute product samples, coupons and other offers from marketers to viewers.

"Turner Sample Pack" will be priced to compete with free standing inserts and promoted with Turner's four national cable networks—Cable News Network, Headline News, TBS and Turner Network Television.

Commercials airing on those networks will invite viewers to call a toll-free number to order the free sample pack, which will contain a variety of product samples, coupons, recipe booklets, brochures and videocassettes.

The packs will also contain Turner promotional material like cable viewing guides and promotional offers from the company's home video and pub-

Disney promotion leaves McDonald's out

By Scott Hume and Cleveland Horton

Burger King Corp. has crowned its strategy of linking with well-known brands by signing a promotional deal with Walt Disney Co., a longtime partner of rival McDonald's Corp.

The alliance starts its first promotion in November. That six-week holiday effort will be tied to the release of Disney's new animated feature "Beauty & the Beast," according to Burger King marketing materials obtained by Advertising Age.

McDonald's, which recently ended a children's meal promotion tied to Disney's "101 Dalmatians," has been Disney's primary fast-food partner for the past few years.

But reports circulated earlier this year that McDonald's relationship with Disney was strained by disappointing results from promotions with the studio's "Dick Tracy" and "The Rescuers Down Under." That spurred speculation Disney would shift to Burger King as its partner for "Beauty & the Beast" (AA, Feb. 11).

"It's not good [for McDonald's]. Some kids are going to be going to Burger King."

McDonald's, which traditionally mounted a major promotion quarterly, has soured on blockbusters. It hasn't run a major, national promotion yet this year, having watched last summer's "Tracy" game and the fall's "McMillions" game with NBC-TV produce what analysts say were lower than expected returns.

Instead, McDonald's has concentrated its marketing efforts on price reductions for hamburgers, cheeseburgers and selected other menu items, and the addition of new items such as the low-fat McLean Deluxe.

The Disney deal "is probably more important as a gain for Burger King than as a loss for McDonald's, although Disney has been a mainstay of McDonald's marketing," said Michael Mueller, restaurant analyst with Montgomery Securities.

"McDonald's has done the best job at marketing to kids,

Five agencies cut staff

NEW YORK—A flood of pink slips hit Madison Avenue last week. Hardest hit was N W Ayer, where 50 to 60 of the office's 850 staffers were let go. The layoffs, mainly among support services staff, were the result of lower overall spending, not account losses, the agency said. Also taking hits were Ogilvy & Mather, trimming 17 of 722 staffers here, and Lord, Dentsu & Partners, which let 18 of its 130 staffers here go, partly due to Peugeot's decision to leave the U.S. market (see related story on Page 36). Elsewhere, Rosenfeld, Sirowitz, Humphrey & Strauss laid off 15 of its 24 staffers in Phoenix, Ariz., because of America West's Chapter 11 filing and subsequent budget cuts. In San Francisco, Grey Advertising laid off 15 of 55 staffers following the loss of the $35 million Bank of America business; the agency also said Managing Director Hank McWhinney, 48, resigned and will leave before yearend. He will be replaced by Warren Peterson, 54, exec VP-creative director.

Disney 'Discover'?

Family Media shutters; negotiations continue

By Scott Donaton

NEW YORK—Walt Disney Co. continued negotiations to buy Discover last week following the collapse of Family Media, but interest in the group's remaining titles appeared to center on their subscription lists.

The months-long talks between Disney Publishing and Family Media are expected to culminate in a sale as early as this week, a source close to the negotiations said. John Skipper, Disney's Burbank, Calif.-based VP-publishing, flew to New York Aug. 1 to participate in the discussions.

If Disney acquires Discover, the company plans to continue publishing the monthly science magazine, believed to be the only profitable title in the Family Media stable.

Debt-laden Family Media closed down operations and dismissed its 209 employees last week after intense, last-ditch attempts to sell its six magazines failed to turn up any buyers (AA, Aug. 5).

But Family Media Chairman Robert Riordan was still trying to sell any or all of the titles last week to help pay down a debt of $60 million to $70 million.

Competing publishers sifted through the wreckage of the failed publishing company last week to determine whether its magazines were salvageable.

Executives at Hachette Magazines, Hearst Corp. and K-III Magazine Corp. indicated those companies had already passed on the Family Media titles.

Charles G. McCurdy, president of K-III Holdings, wouldn't comment directly on the company's interest in the Family Media magazines but indicated a deal was unlikely.

"We want to buy publications that are basically leaders in their niches for both readers and advertisers, and not risk trying to turn around things that are difficult, which is basically a different approach than Bob Riordan had," Mr. McCurdy said.

The Family Media titles would most likely be sold on a circulation liability basis, sources say. In other words, buyers would send Family Media subscribers copies of their own magazines in the hope of converting the subscriptions to their own lists after expiration.

A Time Warner executive said that company is negotiating to acquire the subscription list for Family Media's Health and would use it to boost the circulation of its In Health.

Times Mirror Magazines passed on the Family Media magazines before the company closed but might take a second look at the list for Golf Illustrated, which competed directly with its Golf Magazine, an executive there said.

The most salable titles in the Family Media stable, publishing executives say, are Discover, Golf Illustrated and Health.

Family Media also published 1,001 Home Ideas, HomeOwner and World Tennis, which was to

AmEx rethinks strategy

By Gary Levin

American Express Co. is preparing to revamp agency assignments for its Travel Related Services division, and that's likely to lead to a loss of business for Ogilvy & Mather.

O&M is AmEx's lead worldwide agency and now handles the $60 million green card as well as smaller pieces of the travel division.

The card this year is getting about $60 million in ad support, down 24% from 1990, according to Advertising Age estimates. The smaller travel division accounts handled by O&M spent at least $30 million in 1990.

AmEx, facing slow growth and diminished market share, is expected to eliminate separate campaigns for most of its major cards and adopt a multicard "umbrella" campaign.

O&M, Chiat/Day/Mojo and Wunderman Worldwide, all New York, are competing for that campaign; their commercials are slated to be tested when they are completed.

Chiat now handles the Gold Card, while Wunderman has the Optima and Corporate cards. Gold Card spent $7 million on measured media in 1990, while Optima and Corporate combined for about $6.7 million in support; however, overall spending by AmEx is down this year.

If O&M wins, the agency is expected to lose some of the other business it now handles, such as the traveler's checks, travel agencies and establishment services business. Those accounts would likely go to the losing agencies to compensate for the loss of specific card accounts.

The traveler's checks account spent $19.3 million on measured media in 1990, LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service estimated, while the travel agencies business spent $10 million. The size of the establishment services business couldn't be determined.

"The odds are extremely high there will be a realignment of assignments," one source familiar with the review said.

Even if O&M doesn't win the umbrella campaign, it could keep the company's international

AGs target Revlon, Gillette

By Jennifer Lawrence

Revlon and Gillette Co. are the latest targets of a multistate attorneys general task force investigating environmental marketing claims. That task force is now looking at aerosol products.

Stephen Gardner, a Texas assistant attorney general, last week asked Revlon to provide substantiation for the terms "environmentally safe formula" on the label of its Flex High Gloss hair spray and "environmentally safe—contains no fluorocarbons" on its Almay Protein Conditioning hair spray.

Mr. Gardner sent a similar letter to Gillette for any product using the term "ozone friendly, no CFCs" or any other environmental benefit claim.

Both letters requested copies of all broadcast and print ads since January 1987 that make reference to environmental benefits. The companies were told to supply the information no later than Aug. 20.

Gillette last October decided to phase out the use of the term "ozone friendly," said Michelle Szynal, a company spokeswoman.

"We've replaced that with the wording 'contains no CFCs,' and by the end of 1991, 75% of all aerosol products will use that," Ms. Szynal said.

Gillette uses New York agencies BBDO Worldwide and N W Ayer for its aerosol products.

"We are still reading the correspondence," said Dan Moriarty, Revlon senior VP-public relations.

Tarlow Advertising is Revlon's agency.

The other states involved in the investigation are likely to include the additional nine state attorneys general who've been involved in other green probes. The states active on this front, besides Texas, are California, Florida, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Tennessee, Washington and Wisconsin.

Just last week, a $50,000 settlement was reached with Alberto-Culver Co., the first cosmetics company to be publicly targeted for aerosol claims by the multistate green task force.

The task force said Alberto-Culver had falsely claimed its hair sprays were "environmentally safe," "ozone friendly" and "will not harm the ozone." The attorneys general contended the hair sprays contain propellants, such as propane and isobutane, that are volatile organic compounds contributing to ground-level ozone. Two of the products, they said, contain a chemical that's known to cause depletion of the upper-atmosphere ozone layer.

Alberto-Culver admitted no wrongdoing in the settlement. Its agencies are BBDO and Lois/GGK, both Chicago. □

100 LEADING MEDIA COMPANIES

Cable continues as bright spot; newspapers go limp

R. Craig Endicott

Time Warner couldn't get over the hump in 1990.

After dramatically narrowing Capital Cities/ABC's lead in the race to become the nation's largest media company last year, Time Warner saw the margin widen a bit in what is proving to be the toughest ad market in years.

Cap Cities/ABC expanded its lead to $210.6 million from $192 million a year ago while charting $5.18 billion in total media net revenues to Time Warner's $4.97 billion, according to Advertising Age's 11th annual report on the 100 Leading Media Companies.

Net revenue growth at Cap Cities/ABC of 8.6% and Time Warner, 8.5%, were typical of the Top 100. Unlike in past years, few achieved double-digit growth. And those that did generally had large contributions from cable.

Media revenues among the Top 100 advanced 6% to $75 billion in 1990, compared with 8% in 1989, when they reached $70.7 billion.

Newspaper revenues, accounting for one-third of the Top 100's total revenues, dipped disastrously by 0.1% from 1989.

Conversely, cable continued to surge. Cable revenues jumped 18.1% to $15.6 billion, placing cable within striking distance of broadcast TV's $16.2 billion as the second leading revenue generator among the Top 100.

Time Warner, which draws 60.7% of its revenues from cable, certainly has the arsenal to pass Cap Cities in the future if cable continues its unparalleled gains.

Average cable revenue growth for the 34 companies with cable properties was 16.7%. Unlike other media categories, no company's cable revenues declined.

The bottom line is another matter. Few cable companies operate in the black because of heavy expenses related to acquisitions that fueled their growth in the '80s. It is either change or bust in the '90s as debt-service becomes more of an industry burden.

Among the top five companies with cable properties, only Turner Broadcasting showed a decline in operating income, down 12.6%.

The Big 3 networks accounted for just over half the $16.2 billion in TV revenues generated by 43 of the Top 100. The Big 3's combined growth of 3% kept TV's overall growth at 4.2%, an improvement on 1989's 1.8% increase.

For the second consecutive year, media sales declined at General Electric. Revenues at its NBC TV network and owned-and-operated stations fell 5.6%, compared with a 6.8% decline in 1989. Each network suffered a decline in operating profit.

Two broadcast-based companies entered the Top 100 for the first time. Pinelands Inc., No. 85, operates WWOR-TV, the superstation in Secaucus, N.J. It was part of MCA Inc. until MCA was purchased last year by Matsushita Electric Co.

Paramount Communications, No. 52, pulled $145 million in TV revenues from its TVX Broadcasting, a former 100 Leading Media company, and an estimated $211.8 million from Madison Square Garden and USA networks. Ad Age credited Paramount with only 50% of the revenues of USA Network, equal to its ownership equity.

Like TV, radio was dominated by three companies: CBS Inc., Cap Cities/ABC and Westinghouse Electric Corp. As a whole, radio revenues grew 20.2% to $1.2 billion among 22 companies, but the top three accounted for just over half those revenues. The remaining 19 companies experienced an aggregate increase of only 6.4%.

Newspaper operations from 47 of the Top 100 companies attracted $24.6 billion in 1990 revenues, down 0.1%. Six of the top 10 newspaper companies recorded revenue declines ranging from 1.2% to 2.9% and two showed less than 0.5% growth.

Operating income results were even more depressing.

For example, among the five largest public newspaper companies, operating income went south at Gannett Co. by 8.1%, Times Mirror Corp., 45%, Knight-Ridder, 6.9%, New York Times Co., 23.3%, and Tribune Co., 44.8%, when including the New York Daily News.

The buyer of the Daily News, No. 55 Maxwell Communications, was the only new newspaper-driven company to enter the Top 100.

Forty Top 100 companies generated magazine revenues of $13.2 billion, up 6.3%, with most of the growth coming in the first half. By yearend, consumer magazine advertising as monitored by Publisher's Information Bureau logged only a 2.2% gain. Ad revenues have retreated further in the first half of recession-plagued 1991, off 5.4% from the prior-year period.

New to the chart is K-III Holdings, No. 51, with most of its revenues stemming from this June's acquisition of eight consumer magazines from News Corp. Revenues estimated at $225 million from those magazines were excluded from News Corp.'s media total.

Also entering the Top 100 for the first time was American Express Co., No. 84.

Methodology notes

Rankings in this report are based on net revenue estimates for U.S.-based media properties. AA worked closely with the media companies to arrive at the figures. Assisting with estimates were Paul Kagan & Associates and Duncan's Radio Market Guide.

The term "media" in this report includes the traditional media as well as free standing inserts, in-store, news services, shared mail and ad-driven pamphlets. Not included are contract printing, book publishing, book and record clubs, movie production and most data-base operations loosely termed information services. □

Notes: Dollars are in millions. All figures are AA estimates. 1989 rankings adjusted to reflect figures shown. 1. Tribune's figures exclude N.Y. Daily News '90 and '89 revenues which now represent 100% of media at Maxwell Communications. 2. News Corp.'s 1990 figures exclude $225 million in revenues from consumer magazines and an estimated $70 million in revenues from Daily Racing Form, which were sold this June to K-III Holdings.

Ralston scrambles to boost cereals

By Julie Liesse

Ralston Purina Co. will try to regain its touch in the cereal market with the fall introduction of two licensed products.

Eager to find a winning formula, Ralston will introduce nationally Addams Family cereal and launch into Western markets WWF Superstars cereal.

Although Ralston has been one of the cereal market's success stories during the past two years, the company's future position depends on how far private-label products can penetrate the category and how well Ralston selects new licensed properties.

In the past year, it apparently hasn't chosen well. For the most recent four-week period, ended in mid-July, Ralston's pound share of the $7.2 billion cereal category was 4.2%, repre-

Cross-media deals surge into cable

CNN-'USA Today' package leads swell

By Alison Fahey and Scott Donaton

New momentum for the cross-media trend is being generated by a wave of alliances between cable TV and publishers of magazines and newspapers.

Turner Broadcasting System's Cable News Network and Gannett Co.'s USA Today late last week announced their long-awaited agreement to produce a sports show.

Waiting in the wings: cable/-print partnerships involving Newsweek and MTV: Music Television, McCall's and USA Network, and the Weather Channel and Skiing.

Those alliances are either signed or close to completion, while other players like CNBC and Hachette Magazines are actively seeking partners to compete with vertically integrated media giants like Time Warner and Hearst Corp. The Family Channel said it's negotiating with "several women's service magazines, some related," about forming cross-media packages for advertisers in 1992.

The combination of print and cable TV is attractive to advertisers because both are narrowly targeted, highly flexible and relatively affordable media, industry experts agree.

"The demographic selectivity of magazines ties in very well with the demographic selectivity of cable," said David Verklin, senior VP-corporate media director at Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "Magazines have presented themselves based on their ability to reach discrete demographic targets. That's the strategic and conceptual basis of these alliances."

Commercials from Wieden & Kennedy for Subaru's SVX "promise you'll be able to use most of the speedometer."

Subaru overhauls image

By Bob Garfield

AD REVIEW

You manufacture a line of small, dull, utilitarian import cars with an image—if they've made any impression at all—of plodding practicality.

General Motors outspends you in advertising by a billion dollars-plus, Toyota by a factor of five. You've finally infused your products with modern design and performance, but you're still the automotive equivalent of sensible shoes. What do you do?

Think Big.

Thirty years ago, a dull and utilitarian import called Volkswagen, facing similar marketing obstacles, was able to Think Small—to ridicule the extravagance and impracticality of Detroit's stylish monsters mainly by making modest fun of itself. The unprepossessing little Beetle thus became a symbol of functional dignity for the sort of car buyer whose self-esteem didn't require tail fins and a 400 cubic-inch V-8.

That is precisely the positioning Subaru of America covets for 1992—with one important difference. The big boats are gone. The competition is nearly all solid and practical. The psychological appeal of self-possession and ridicule of conspicuous consumption are as valid as they ever were, but what

Insurance group growls

By Raymond Serafin

Wieden & Kennedy's first major campaign for Subaru of America pokes fun at high-speed automotive ad cliches, but highway safety advocates aren't laughing.

Claiming the advertising promotes the reckless sort of driving that it parodies, the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety said it will ask officials of the importer and its Japanese parent company not to run the advertising scheduled to break late this month.

Charles Hurley, VP of the industry group, said the institute may ask the Federal Trade Commission and the U.S. surgeon general to get involved.

Wieden, based in Portland, Ore., is best known for its high-profile Nike advertising. The agency won

Huhndorf holds ad reins at Mazda luxury unit

By Cleveland Horton

When Mazda Motor of America takes the wraps off its new luxury division this week, it will also be focusing attention on the division's ad manager, Susan Huhndorf.

A Mazda task force looking into a second channel of distribution, code-named Pegasus, earlier this month selected Ms. Huhndorf to oversee the estimated $50 million account, for which an agency review is getting under way.

The new luxury line is slated for a 1995 introduction and will compete with Toyota Motor Sales USA's Lexus, Nissan Motor Corp. USA's Infiniti and American Honda Motor Co.'s Acura.

Ms. Huhndorf, 37, is undaunted by the task.

"I think it's a lot of fun getting involved with the introduction of a new division, especially in the luxury category," she told Advertising Age.

Ms. Huhndorf has spent her entire career at ad agencies. She began at Competitive Edge, Los Angeles, an agency specializing in car dealer and dealer-group accounts. She moved to Della Femina, McNamee to work on American Isuzu Motors for "a couple of years," before joining Keye/Donna/Pearlstein in 1984. She left about two years later for a short stint at Bozell and a year as an account supervisor at Chiat/Day/Mojo before returning to K/D/P in '88.

She was among the handful of K/D/P staffers who moved to Livingston & Keye this year when K/D/P folded. Most recently, she was VP-account director.

People who've worked with Ms. Huhndorf praise her strategic thinking and ability to lead.

"She's a remarkable woman, very bright," said Paul Keye, chairman-executive creative director at Livingston & Keye. "She's a good leader."

Ms. Huhndorf assisted K/D/P in its original pitch for the American Suzuki Motor Corp. account, but once the agency won the account, she asked to work on other business. She ended up working on the California Department of Health Services' controversial anti-smoking account, among others.

Tom Patty, Chiat exec VP-account director, said: "She definitely has a thorough familiarity with and understanding of the car business." □

P&G keeps attacking

By Jennifer Lawrence

Procter & Gamble Co.'s current new-products attack is moving ahead with a variety of brands, either moving into test or rolling nationally.

As many as six new entries are joining the recently disclosed Crest Complete toothbrush, Luvs Phases and Pampers Phases diapers, and Liquid Tide With Bleach Alternative (AA, Aug. 12).

Cinch, a combination glass/all-purpose cleaner that's been in test since last year, will be shipped to retailers nationally beginning today.

The product will get advertising from Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, New York, themed "Don't clean it twice. Cinch it once."

Head & Shoulders 2-in-1 shampoo will be on store shelves in October. Like the successful Pert Plus, the product's "2-in-1" benefit offers a shampoo with conditioner. The product is rolling out without market testing. Ad support will be from Tatham/RSCG, Chicago.

Duncans Cups, a line of microwave bake-in-the-box package cupcake mixes, is expanding distribution from the East Coast to the West Coast markets starting today.

Test-market advertising from N W Ayer, New York, was themed "Oven baked. Not half baked."

Ivory Liquid, a clear dishwashing liquid in a clear bottle, is replacing the current white Ivory Liquid in Western test markets. TV advertising is themed "Now you can fight grease with your bare hands." Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York, handles.

Ultra Downy fabric softener in liquid concentrate and refill versions have begun testing in Little Rock, Ark. Grey Advertising, New York, is the agency.

Also, Metamucil Sunrise Smooth will be available nationally this fall. The line extension of the leading bulk fiber laxative has been testing in Evansville, Ind., since last September with advertising themed "The grit is gone."

Tatham/RSCG, Chicago, is the agency. □

MasterCard multiplies

New retail partners join MasterValues promotion

By Gary Levin

NEW YORK—MasterCard International is adding six retail partners to its ongoing MasterValues program this fall in the company's most aggressive promotional campaign to date.

The move comes as MasterCard executives strongly denied persistent rumors of a strained relationship with agency Lintas:USA and maintained they don't plan to put the $45 million account up for grabs.

The latest installment of the MasterValues program, originally introduced last fall and reprised in the spring, will run from Oct. 15 to Dec. 24, supported by an estimated $10 million in radio spots, magazine ads and a five-week spot and cable TV campaign breaking Thanksgiving weekend.

That MasterCard effort will be challenged by primary competitors Visa USA and American Express Co.

In early October, Visa will start a contest offering its card users the chance to win one of several trips to the 1992 Winter Olympics in Albertville, France. Visa is a major sponsor of the Games.

The promotion will be "splashier" than a similar effort tied to the 1988 Games, said Visa spokesman Brad Hennig. Details are still being worked out, including the possible participation of retail merchants, he said.

BBDO Worldwide, New York, is creating a TV spot to promote the Winter Olympics giveaway.

AmEx plans a multimillion-dollar fourth-quarter ad campaign centered on a new retail promotion to drive card use. The company declined to give details but said advertising would prominently feature retail merchants.

Meanwhile, AmEx continues to run co-op ads for restaurants and hotels, and offers free trips and other prizes under its recently launched Membership Miles frequent-traveler program.

But MasterCard believes its program, which requires retail participants to post in-store sign-

Hopper rides into commercials

After acting in and directing feature films since 1955, Hollywood rebel Dennis Hopper this year signed on with Los Angeles production company Gibson/Lefebvre/Gartner to direct TV commercials.

The 55-year-old director, best known for the 1969 counterculture classic film "Easy Rider," will be a featured speaker later this week at Advertising Age's Marketing Forum '91. He talked last week with Reporter Marcy Magiera about advertising's influence on the movies and the movies' influence on advertising.

Advertising Age: TV commercials seem a surprising change of direction for someone with your rebellious, anti-establishment image. What aspects of commercial directing appeal to you?

Mr. Hopper: I think that in a lot of aspects it's a more creative way of expressing yourself, even though I know it's very staid and there's a lot of people making decisions. The outcome is much more dramatic to me, and much more satisfying creatively. . . .

When I was doing "Easy Rider," and I did the cemetery scene with me taking the acid, most of those images that I used and the kind of editing style that I used I'd only seen in commercials and experimental filmmaking. . . .

I've always felt that the feature film was always a little behind. . . . People are used to seeing quick commercials and quick cuts and the production value of commercials. I think that's why our [movie] audiences have such a limited attention span right now, because of the quick sell of commercials.

AA: What's the challenge?

Mr. Hopper: [Commercial direction] would allow me to enter an area where I could experiment more and try things that you can't really do in features.

AA: How different is the storytelling in commercials?

Mr. Hopper: The one thing that bothers me in film, and I think it's everybody's nightmare in feature film, is that we have a linear story set up where we have to tell an external story and never get inside. In a novel, you can have a first-person experience because you can hear the person talking. . . . You can't do that in a feature film. But in a way, you do that in a commercial.

ONE ON ONE

AA: How?

Mr. Hopper: In a commercial, you can actually get into those areas visually. . . . The only way we can deal with it in feature film is narration.

I find narration really a cop-out most of the time. I think the closer we get to being able to explain ourselves visually without having to do it in narrative, the better off we are. . . .

Then you see your MTV music videos, which are also opening up an area of experimentation. And hopefully, eventually, all these things will seep back in a little later into feature filmmaking.

AA: Are there any product categories you're especially interested in creating ads for? Or any products for which you wouldn't direct commercials?

Mr. Hopper: I'm not really thinking of it that way. I could tell you things that I admire or that I think that are wonderful. I think the Xerox things, and . . . AT&T, a lot of those are really wonderful. . . .

I don't know who does them, but I'm sure they're top-of-the-line people. I think there's a Xerox copier ad with a child, an Oriental child, who's learning to walk. Then it goes into Michelangelo, they're repainting the Sistine Chapel. Then it goes through a variance of things that are just wonderful images.

AA: Are there any commercial directors specifically whose work you admire?

Mr. Hopper: I don't really know one from another. I only know when I see something that I like.

AA: Are there any social or environmental causes in which advertising hasn't played a role yet where you think it could? Or are there any for which you'd like to do work?

Mr. Hopper: You know, I see them on television. This egg is your brain being fried, or whatever it is. I think all those things are valid. We're a country that's a hard-sell country, so whatever we sell we should sell well, whether it's anti-drug [information] or it's [a message] about the environment.

AA: Have you ever appeared in advertising?

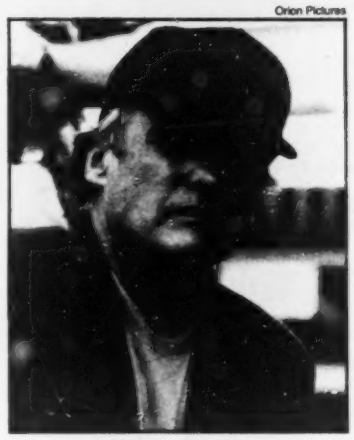
Mr. Hopper: I did one print thing years and years ago. John Huston and I did a thing for Jim Beam. I'd just directed "Easy Rider," and his first movie was "The Maltese Falcon," and they did a print ad saying: "There's no generation gap. Hopper just made 'Easy Rider' and John Huston's first film was 'The Maltese Falcon' and here they are arm-in-arm together drinking Jim Beam."

Orion Pictures



Dennis Hopper

The only reason I did that was because of John Huston.

AA: Other feature film directors like Spike Lee and Leonard Nimoy have recently become involved in directing commercials. What do you think of the trend?

Mr. Hopper: I think that's probably good. They've been doing it in Europe; this is nothing new in the industry, it's only new in this country.

We have such stigmas here, you know. "If they do commercials, they can't do features. If they do television, they can't do features." It goes on and on and on.

Your top cinematographers have certainly been doing commercials forever. Haskell Wexler, all of them, have been doing commercials. So I don't think there's any difference in directors coming in and doing commercials. I think it's good for the [advertising] industry.

AA: Do you have any reservations about your ability to mesh with corporate America?

Mr. Hopper: I've never had [experience with] it, so I wouldn't know. I've only heard nightmare stories. I'll have to do [a commercial] to find out, I guess.

AA: Do you have any commercial projects set up yet?

Mr. Hopper: No. I've lost a couple to people because I'd never done a commercial. I find that humorous.

AA: Now that you're entering the advertising business, it seems appropriate to ask what you—as a movie director—think of the way movies are marketed.

Mr. Hopper: Right now, it's very difficult to get a movie done unless you can go in and market it in a two-liner. They don't even read the script. [Studio executives ask,] "Well, what's it about? What category is it?" Then you've got to be able to explain what your film's about in two sentences or less and how they're going to market it, or they're not even going to read it.

AA: Have you been involved in creating the commercials and trailers used in marketing your movies?

Mr. Hopper: I've done them all, since the beginning, for all my movies. I've never been with anyone who hasn't encouraged me to do that. . . . I haven't ever bucked heads with anybody, except Universal Pictures at one point. [The studio] refused to distribute "The Last Movie" after I won the Venice Film Festival [in 1971] unless I re-edited it. I had final cut [authority] and refused to recut it, so it was never really distributed. . . .

It was my last movie for a long time. □

Exec views on media clash with plans

By Joe Mandese

The perceptions ad executives have about the effectiveness of different media don't match the reality of their media plans, a new study found.

The majority of advertiser and agency executives said network TV plays the greatest role in their overall marketing plans, but the same executives rated special-interest magazines and cable TV as the most effective media.

Of almost 500 ad executives responding to the 1991 Survey on Marketing Effectiveness & Media Value, 72% said broadcast network TV was "very/extremely" valuable to their plans. The survey was conducted by Myers Marketing & Research.

By comparison, 58% rated cable TV as "very/extremely" valuable, followed by special-interest magazines, 53%; radio, 39%; newspapers, 29%; and general-interest magazines, 23%.

When asked to rate each of those media on overall effectiveness and value, 47% said both cable and special-interest magazines performed the best, followed by broadcast TV, 43%; radio, 40%; general-interest magazines, 30%; and newspapers, 17%.

While the findings seem to support some ad executives' belief that agencies plan a disproportionate share of client media budgets around network TV, agency media executives disagreed.

"Effectiveness is a relative term. It really depends on what the client's marketing and communications goals are," said Richard Kostyra, exec VP-director of media services at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York.

George Hayes, senior VP-director of media planning of McCann-Erickson USA said: "If you're measuring effectiveness in terms of sales promotion, cable and special-interest magazines are head and shoulders above network. If you're measuring it in terms of reach, network beats them hands down."

Specific effectiveness responses to the survey support that view.

Asked to rate the "availability of marketing/promotional support," radio rated No. 1, followed by special-interest magazines, general-interest magazines, cable TV, network TV and newspapers.

But asked to rank effectiveness in "influencing consumer motivations," network TV ranked highest, followed by cable TV, special-interest magazines, radio, general-interest magazines and newspapers.

While McCann's Mr. Hayes said he believes network TV still is the most effective medium overall, he acknowledged a growing sentiment throughout the industry that its effectiveness is slipping.

"There is a perception that network television has lost some of its effectiveness and there may be a feeling that there is too much reliance on the medium," he said. "But you'd be hard pressed to say that cable was actually more effective than network TV."

The mail survey was conducted in March and April among executives who serve on an ongoing panel. □

THE TOP 200 BRANDS

Top brands pull away from the pack

By R. Craig Endicott

If all advertisers followed the lead of the Top 200 brands, the media business might not be in its current mess.

While the rest of the nation's advertisers spent 15.5% less in first quarter 1991 vs. first quarter 1990, the Top 200 brands boosted their spending 6.2%. The showing was even more impressive in light of an anemic 0.5% increase among the Top 200 in fourth quarter 1990 vs. fourth quarter 1989.

Although the Top 200's $3.7 billion in collective spending accounted for 42.1% of all advertisers' media expenditures—up from 36.6% in first quarter 1990—the Top 200 couldn't shoulder the entire industry's burden.

Spending below the Top 200 turned stingy. Excluding the Top 200, advertising plunged 12% in magazines, 26% in newspapers, 15.6% in network TV and 13.1% in spot TV. The Top 200, however, cut back only network TV a minuscule 1% to $1.5 billion. The only media to fare well among brands below No. 200 were cable, up 1%, and national spot radio and syndicated TV, each up 15%.

AT&T cut its first-quarter 1991 expenditures 28.9%, to $67.5 million, from the same period in 1990, unseating it as the top-spending brand, a position it had held for four consecutive quarters, according to Advertising Age's Top 200 Brands listing (see full chart on Page 18). The company reduced spending for Long Lines business and Long Lines overseas to $20.1 million, down 44% from first quarter 1990, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

Heavy maintenance-level ad spending by McDonald's restaurants, which grew 1.5% from the year-earlier period to $95 million, moved it to the No. 1 spot as AT&T tumbled to No. 5.

Despite overall growth, the Top 200 are not recession-proof. Growth in first quarter 1991 was less dramatic than the year-earlier growth of 9.5% from first quarter 1989.

Several top categories among the 200 were marked by spending cuts: Retail (non-food) advertising dipped 19.6% among the 12 brands in the Top 200; airlines dropped 0.7%; beverages 8.7%; credit/financial services 17.2%; and telephone services 8.7%.

The auto category again carried the big load, accounting for 22% of all spending by the Top 200, same as in 1990. But unlike each of the four preceding quarters in which growth in ad spending by Japanese brands far outstripped U.S. counterparts, the first quarter saw Detroit come out swinging.

With 14 of the 29 brands in the category U.S. nameplates, Detroit pushed its spending to $458.7 million, up 17.2%. Ten Japanese brands totaled $284.1 million, down 4%.

The Ford brand rose from No. 6 a year ago among all brands to No. 2 by spending $89.7 million, up 37.1%. The big beneficiaries were Ford Escort at $14.3 million, up 232.6% from the prior-year period; Ford general promotion for cars and trucks, up 322.5% to $16.9 million, and Ford Crown Victoria, which went from nothing to $7 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Chevrolet spent $88.8 million, up 27.4%, vaulting it from No. 5 in first quarter 1990 to No. 3. Chevrolet backed Caprice with $10.9 million, up 131.9%, and funneled $19.8 million into general promotion for passenger cars and light trucks, up from only $500,000 in the prior-year period.

Network TV, the big auto medium, received 7.6% fewer dollars than in first quarter 1990 as auto advertising rose in magazines, spot TV and newspapers.

Network TV faired poorly among food advertisers, the second-largest category among the Top 200 at $374.8 million. Network spending dipped 14% as spot TV rose 32%, syndicated TV, 17.5%, and magazines, 5%.

Network TV performed best among the third- and sixth-largest Top 200 categories, rising 30% from the entertainment category and 11.5% from the drug category, which grew a remarkable 17.2% in all media to $193.4 million. Seasonal flu and cold remedies abounded in the category, led by No. 12 Tylenol at $44.3 million, up 28.2%.

The biggest-spending corporation, based on Top 200 brands, was General Motors Corp. Its $256.6 million spending among eight Top 200 brands represented a 19.9% increase. Philip Morris Cos. was second, backing 10 brands with $204.2 million, up 5.1%. PM's top finisher was No. 8 Kraft at $55.4 million, up 11.3%.

Ad totals in this report are for 10 media provided by LNA/Arbitron. A "brand" is a product or service marketed under the same name. A brand's ad total can cross LNA/Arbitron-designated subclasses, but brand ad totals include only amounts from those subclasses where spending exceeded $500,000. □

Publishers pull in reins on circulation

By Ira Teinowitz

The recession and publishers' moves to drop so-called casual readers translated into first-half circulation declines, Audit Bureau of Circulations figures showed.

Donald Kummerfeld, president of the Magazine Publishers of America, said publishers responded to the recession by trimming circulation marketing.

"There is no doubt people are spending less on rate bases as part of their belt tightening. To some extent what you see is a planned decline because people are spending less on subscription acquisition," he said. "On the other hand, circulation response is better than it has been in a long time."

The figures were part of the audit bureau's FAS-FAX report comparing first-half circulation with the same period in 1990.

Only one of the nation's top 10 magazines grew during the first half. Woman's Day gained 3.2% to 4,751,977 amid heavy subscription promotion. The magazine added 862,501 subscriptions (a 155.6% increase), more than balancing a loss in single-copy sales.

In the top 20, the numbers were only slightly better. Playboy was up 1.8% to 3,498,802; also showing gains were Newsweek, up 6.0% to 3,420,167; People, up 1.9% to 3,235,120; Prevention, up 2.8% to 3,109,562; and The American Legion Magazine, up 4.4% to 2,984,389.

Of the top 100 magazines, 46 gained circulation, the audit bureau reported, though the size of losses tended to be larger than the gains.

Publishers noted two newsmagazines were among the titles with gains, and cited interest in the Persian Gulf War as a factor.

"It was just a very tough time," said Mike Boylan, vice chairman of the Enquirer/Star Group, which reported its National Enquirer and Star both declined in circulation and failed to meet their rate bases. "It was a combination of the war and the recession. My own habits changed tremendously during the war and my attention was diverted."

Newsweek's single-copy sales—while only a small part of the magazine's circulation—rose 25.2% to 222,094. Time's single-copy sales were up 25.8%, nearly overcoming efforts the magazine has taken in cutting back on subscription promotions. (Time's overall circulation dropped 0.2% to 4,248,565.) U.S. News & World Report saw its small single-copy sales grow 15.4%, but overall circulation rise 1.4% to 2,351,922.

One surprise in the report was the relative weakness of some sports magazines. Sports Illustrated reported circulation off 1.8% to 3,444,188 and The Sporting News said circulation fell 13.5% to 629,494. (Gannett Co. launched rival Baseball Weekly on April 5.) Sport's circulation fell 3.4% to 908,760.

Sports Illustrated, however, said its decline reflected an attempt to trim the bonus on its 3,150,000 rate base, rather than weakness in the category.

Inside Sports was up 4.5% to 692,304, and a few single-sport magazines did somewhat better.

Magazines with the biggest gains included Life, up 11.5% to 1,910,520; Elle, up 13.2% to 935,331; Gourmet, up 11.3% to 895,256; Vanity Fair up 8.7% to 813,881; Endless Vacation, up 9.2% to 811,256; PC/Computing, up 38.8% to 702,849; Country America, up 47.1% to 693,510; and Sassy, up 26.3% to 631,767.

Losers included both of Bauer Publishing Co.'s biggest magazines. First for Women dropped 13.4% to 2,392,722 while Woman's World dropped 11.6% to 1,363,992. The titles failed to meet their respective 2.5 million and 1.5 million rate bases. Among others, Glamour was off 9.0% to 2,012,305; Penthouse fell 10.3% to 1,501,821; The Family Handyman declined 13.9% to 1,150,662; and Yankee was down 10.3% to 903,954.

Penthouse's losses left the magazine 25% short of its 2 million rate base, since lowered. National Enquirer's 7.8% decline to 3,706,030 left it short of its 4 million rate base, and Star's fall of 11.3% to 3,207,951 was below that title's 3.5 million base.

The nation's biggest paid magazine, Modern Maturity, reported virtually no growth, a surprise considering its historic pattern of gains. The publication is included in the $5 membership fee for joining the American Association of Retired Persons.

Reader's Digest reported a slight drop with TV Guide and National Geographic reporting larger decreases. □

New marketing era for U.S.S.R.

Failed coup spurs hopes for more Western ventures

An Advertising Age roundup

U.S. marketers said da to plans for Soviet expansion following last week's failed coup.

turn of President Mikhail Gorbachev—so ably aided by Russian Republic President Boris Yeltsin—would speed Western involvement there.

Marketers "will be encouraged by the last gasp of the regime," said Reuben Mark, chairman-ceo of Colgate-Palmolive Co., which makes and markets toothpaste there through a joint venture with the Soviet government.

Still, most executives agreed it's too soon to tell how the developments will spur further embracing of capitalism.

Last week's coup, in which President Gorbachev was briefly ousted from power, began a nerve-racking 72 hours.

Among the concerns in the U.S. was whether the slow but steady progress by Western marketers, media and ad agencies seeking a toehold in the emerging Soviet market would be derailed or reversed by hard-line Communists who sought to usurp power.

But with the apparent resolution to the crisis by midweek, several executives said they intended to proceed with plans for joint ventures to satisfy the Soviet citizens' cries for more consumer goods.

Among those now attempting to enter the Soviet market through

MOSCOW NOTEBOOK

Advertising Age Correspondent Betsy McKay, who's also a senior editor at the Moscow Guardian, recorded events of the tumultuous week in the Soviet capital.

Muscovites tuning in to early-morning TV fare awoke to something different last Monday. Instead of the usual talk shows, similar to "Good Morning America," one of the four channels aired a solemn address to the Soviet people announcing that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev had to step down due to "ill health." The other three channels showed only test patterns.

Moscow Radio carried the same announcement, released by Tass, the official Soviet news agency, at 4 a.m. Moscow time.

The mood was tense, but some city life continued as if nothing unusual were happening. Only blocks from Red Square, street vendors hawked wares from flowers to bubble gum; a long line of shoppers seeking vodka crowded the sidewalk outside a liquor store.

Passers-by gawked at soldiers guarding Red Square, closed to the public that day. And in one telling sign of concern, Soviets on the street were refusing to speak to foreign reporters—re-

Michael Adams, an American serving as ceo of Young & Rubicam/Sovero in Moscow, allowed Advertising Age Correspondent Betsy McKay to keep track of his activities throughout the week of the attempted coup.

M. Adams

MONDAY: Michael Adams awakes to the voice of a TV broadcaster announcing President Mikhail Gorbachev had stepped down for health reasons. He immediately flips to Cable News Network while he dresses; he gets to his office about 7:30 a.m.

A group ironically called the Freedom Forum (the former Gannett Foundation), including retired Gannett Chairman Al Neuharth, is in town. Mr. Adams had been arranging for a crew to tape an 11:45 a.m. interview scheduled by the group with former Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

However, the interview is canceled.

"Shevardnadze was avoiding anything smacking of the press and was squirreled away, trying to get information," Mr. Adams says.

The Freedom Forum people think they should also cancel an afternoon of interviews with Soviet editors because of the logistical difficulties of moving among army tanks in the city and the possibility of put-

OTHER NEWS: COMPAQ IN REVIEW; AYER UNITS WANT OUT

Winner could end up with entire $60M account

By Jennifer Lawrence and Christy Fisher

HOUSTON—Compaq Computer Corp. will review its estimated $20 million to $30 million ad account in a three-month process that will include incumbent Ogilvy & Mather.

The review will cover only the company's North American business, not the $30 million international account also held by O&M.

But whoever wins the North American business could be in line for the entire $60 million account, said Kevin Bohren, VP-corporate communications.

"One requirement we will be looking for is global network capabilities," he said. "We would prefer to have one agency around the world; however, it is not a requirement."

Compaq, the No. 3 personal computer marketer in the U.S., has just named J. Walter Thompson Japan, Tokyo, as agency of record in Japan, a market Compaq is entering for the first time.

O&M has no affiliate there, which prompted Compaq to seek an outside agency in a review earlier this summer.

Compaq marketing executives have often credited O&M for contributing to the company's meteoric success in the PC market in the early '80s. O&M linked up with Com-

European agencies push for management buyback

By Dagmar Mussey and Jon Lafayette

N W Ayer's European agencies want to buy themselves back from the U.S. parent and form an independent, unified agency network.

If successful, the move would effectively strip the oldest U.S. ad agency of any majority presence in Europe at a time when other leading shops are concentrating on globalization.

A management buyout of the network is now being put together, said Joerg Lathwe-

Whittle: Future now belongs to new media

By Scott Hume and Kate Fitzgerald

CHICAGO—Admit that traditional advertising media don't work and consider diverting your budget—your whole budget—to the new, non-traditional media.

That was the call to arms sounded last week by Christopher Whittle in a combative keynote address to Advertising Age's Marketing Forum '91. But other speakers echoed his contention that marketers and agencies must rethink how best to reach consumers in a changing society and business marketplace.

Mr. Whittle, chairman of Whittle Communications, which has developed a number of targeted alternatives to traditional media, said marketers still try to reach consumers primarily through media such as prime-time network TV because they've developed a dependency, "and like any dependency it's hard to just say no" to it.

That dependency, Mr. Whittle said, has been created by factors divorced from how well those media work. Instead, it's resulted from memories of how those media used to work in the 1950s and 1960s, our happiness with the familiar and the organizations that have been built around using those media.

■ More coverage of Marketing Forum '91—Page 30.

Mr. Whittle also cited media reps, whom he likened to arms dealers who "peddle fear" by suggesting "if you don't do this, you will be destroyed."

The solution he offered is for marketers to "invest in a wide field of new media." Mr. Whittle went so far as to suggest advertisers consider investing their whole budgets in non-traditional media—"It's only risky if you believe the current ways are working."

"Everything should be high-

Pepperidge cookin'

Campbell unit to boost ad spending 50%

By Judann Dagnoli

Pepperidge Farm will boost ad spending in fiscal 1992 by at least 50%, a move expected to ease tension between the marketer and longtime ad agency Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

The increase comes after the company slashed ad spending 55.5% in fiscal 1991, a dropoff that sparked a rift between Pepperidge Farm and O&M, and led to rumors the company might renegotiate the agency's compensation (AA, June 24).

Dick Shea, president of the Campbell Soup Co. unit, said ad spending would increase "at least 40% to 50%" to $12 million for the fiscal year that began Aug. 1. The company spent about $8 million in fiscal 1991.

1992 spending could go as high as $16 million, he said.

The Persian Gulf War and the recession prompted first-quarter sales declines for the company's biscuit division and the sharp plunge in ad spending, Mr. Shea said.

He denied any problems with O&M.

"Our relationship with Ogilvy is about as long-term and as stable as any one you can find," he said.

And though Mr. Shea said financial "strains on Ogilvy" were exacerbated by Pepperidge Farm's steep budget slide, the planned spending increase has made the issue moot.

Pepperidge Farm's cutback "was a recognition that in the December-February period, business —for everyone—was terrible," Mr. Shea said.

But he added that to build volume and share, the company's ad spending is now "back on plan"

Daytime in demand

Scatter market prices top upfront; nets near sold

By Joe Mandese

In the first sign of a turnaround in the network TV scatter sales market, daytime inventory for the fourth quarter has tightened up as prices rise above upfront rates.

NBC is virtually sold out, and demand for ABC's and CBS' remaining fourth-quarter daytime units is high. ABC is now about 85% sold, while almost 90% of CBS' units are gone.

Network sales executives say the strong demand from daytime advertisers is pushing prices 15% to 25% above upfront costs, while agency buyers maintain the increase is slightly less.

According to consultancy Ephron, Papazian & Ephron's Netcosts report, daytime costs per thousand in the fourth quarter will rise 10% above upfront rates, while CPMs for all other dayparts will drop, well into the double digits.

Prime-time scatter prices will be down 18% from upfront rates in the fourth quarter, Ephron predicts.

The daytime scatter rate increase marks the first time a major network daypart is commanding scatter prices significantly above advance sales rates since

Cadillac takes youthful turn

By Raymond Serafin

Cadillac will use a provocative, confrontational campaign to try to win over import-loving baby boomers for its redesigned Seville and Eldorado models.

"Our goal is to alter the belief among young buyers that Cadillac doesn't make a car for them," said Peter Levin, director of advertising for General Motors Corp.'s flagship division.

The relaunch of the models is "a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity . . . to penetrate the emotional barriers the young affluents have relative to Cadillac," he said.

Division executives view the Seville, priced beginning at $34,975, and Eldorado, priced at $32,470, as the first major products to come out of a January 1987 restructuring that brought marketing, engineering and manufacturing together into one organization.

Cadillac, the luxury car sales leader for more than four decades, built its success by selling traditional luxury cars—better known for chrome than for handling—to an aging buyer base. The new Seville and Eldorado were developed to appeal to performance-oriented younger drivers.

The estimated $25 million campaign breaks Sept. 2 with two 30-second spots on network and cable TV, and will include six-page magazine inserts in a broad range of magazines, national newspaper ads and direct marketing.

The direct marketing effort is aimed at 170,000 prospects who will be offered 8-minute videocassettes of each new car.

The campaign evolved after heavy research by agency D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., showed Cadillac hadn't made many inroads with affluent buyers under age 45, the

Time drops title reps in Detroit

By Scott Donaton

Time Inc. Magazine Co. is eliminating individual magazine sales reps in its Detroit office in favor of new corporate account teams.

Officials of the company, which started a sales staff restructuring in June, say the Detroit action won't be implemented in other offices. They say the move reflects the unique nature of that market, dominated by automotive advertisers.

Richard Heinemann, VP-advertising for Time Inc. Magazine Co., denied Detroit was being used as a test market to determine whether the media giant can eventually switch to a nationwide corporate sales force.

Executives also deny the aim was to reduce staff, though four of the office's 20-plus jobs were eliminated with the move. But the reorganization comes amid rumors of impending layoffs at the Time Warner unit.

The company's key Detroit-based clients are Chrysler Corp., General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., all of which signed multimillion-dollar corporate deals with Time Warner in the past year.

"Sending seven different reps out to these [clients] doesn't make a lot of sense because so much of the business is concentrated."

Other area clients include Volkswagen of America, Kmart Corp., Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and Hiram Walker & Sons.

The magazine unit named four group sales directors, each of whom will oversee one automaker and several other accounts. They will report to Jim Graham, regional VP-sales.

The sales directors—Jeff Cor-

JULY AD RESULTS

Glee over small gains shows depth of slump

By Scott Donaton

It's a sign of how bad things have gotten for the magazine industry when single-digit ad page declines and minuscule revenue gains sound like good news.

MEDIA WORKS

Publishers Information Bureau reported its member magazines carried 9,538.9 ad pages in July, down 6.8% from the same month last year. Ad revenues totaled $413.5 million, a 0.2% increase.

The figures were interpreted by some as a sign that the ad page slump that began almost two years ago has reached bottom and that the industry may be starting on the long road to recovery.

"Monthly declines in advertising pages and revenue continue to show signs of abatement. This shows the first overall revenue increase since January," said James Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development for the Magazine Publishers of America.

The July performance did little to improve year-to-date figures. Ad pages for the first seven months reached 85,753, down 10.4% from a year ago, while revenues of $3.5 billion were off 4.8%.

Of the top 100 magazines in ad pages, 83 posted ad page declines through July, including nine of the top 10 and 23 of the top 25.

National Sunday magazines, tracked separately by PIB, were not as hard hit. Parade's 425.8 January-July ad pages were up 6.9% from the same period last year, while USA Weekend's 372.4 ad pages were down 1.5%.

Many of the nation's largest magazines continued to wallow in double-digit declines. Business Week, the top title in ad pages, was down 22.3% with 1,796.5 pages. No. 2 Forbes was down 18.6% with 1,698.1 pages.

Among leading weeklies, People, TV Guide, The Economist, Sports Illustrated, New York Magazine, Time, Newsweek and The New Yorker all suffered double-digit losses.

The two top 25 titles with increases through July were both monthlies: Modern Bride's pages rose 5% to 1,419.6, while Entrepreneur squeaked out a 0.3% gain with 1,176.1 pages.

Magazines aimed at affluent audiences continued to absorb some of the hardest blows, further shattering the myth that upscale titles are recession-proof.

Yachting, with 802.8 ad pages, was down 16.2%. Travel & Leisure's pages dipped 4.4% to 755.4. Architectural Digest saw pages fall 28.4% to 699.4. Town & Country's pages fell a dizzying 36.6% to 508.3. Bon Appetit was down 13.9% with 505 pages. Smithsonian's 481.2 pages were down 11.9%. And Art & Antiques, with 343.5 pages, was down 27.9%.

The women's service field, whose fortunes have soared and sunk several times during the ad downturn, started the summer on a sour note. All of the top seven books in the category were down in pages through July.

Good Housekeeping maintained its lead position despite seeing pages fall 7% to 877. Ladies' Home Journal was second with 831.9 pages, down just 1.6%. The others fared as follows: Family Circle, 824.9 pages, down 11.6%; Better Homes & Gardens, 716.3 pages, down 1.1%; Woman's Day, 660.7 pages, down 20.8%; Redbook, 598.4 pages, down 6.8%; and McCall's, 549.9 pages, down 1.9%.

Top 100 titles with solid gains include: Muscle & Fitness (831 pages, up 12.9%); Outside (497.2 pages, up 12.9%); Playboy (428.2 pages, up 6.8%); Penthouse (418.9 pages, up 13.2%); Parenting (416.6 pages, up 9.8%); Omni (387.8 pages, up 12.8%); and Scientific American (336.4 pages, up 25.2%). □

Sunkist unbottles juices

SHERMAN OAKS, Calif.—Sunkist Growers is introducing Sunkist bottled grapefruit juice and juice cocktail in southern California, continuing a roll-out that began in the Midwest and East Coast last year.

NEW PRODUCTS

Separately, Sunkist expanded a frozen concentrate juice line sold on the West Coast to include grapefruit and lemonade.

The juices are supported with couponing via Foote, Cone & Belding, Los Angeles.

Other new products:

Kraft General Foods' Knudsen division is unveiling in Western markets Knudsen Free Nonfat Sour Cream Alternative, a fat- and cholesterol-free product made from skim milk. To meet state labeling rules, the product will be sold as Knudsen Free Non-fat Sour Cream Substitute in California. TV and magazine ads will support next month via Grey Advertising, Los Angeles. Joseph Potocki & Associates, Irvine, Calif., created coupons.

Personal care

Noxell Corp. next month introduces Noxzema Free shave cream, a fragrance-, dye- and irritant-free formula. Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, handles.

Giorgio is introducing Atina Waterless shaving lotion and Atina Folding Handle, a reusable, twin-cartridge razor. TV and print ads, handled in-house, are planned.

Miscellaneous

Tobin-Hamilton is bringing out its first branded athletic shoes for adults and children, the AAU Stars & Stripes and the Bruce Jenner Signature Gold Medal Series lines. Newmark, Posner & Mitchell, New York, handles print ads, package design and point-of-purchase displays. □

FOR THE RECORD

A U.S. DISTRICT COURT ruling that lets regional Bell operating companies provide information services has been appealed by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, MCI Communications Corp., National Cable Television Association, National Association of Broadcasters and others.

EARLE PALMER BROWN COS., Bethesda, Md., is again challenging the decision to keep the U.S. Marines account at incumbent J. Walter Thompson USA, Atlanta, following a review. The U.S. General Accounting Office this month rejected a protest by EPB, and last week the agency appealed that decision. EPB said the GAO unfairly increased the projected costs of agency personnel needed to service the estimated $15 million to $17 million account.

SCHIEFFELIN & SOMERSET CO., New York, is reviewing its estimated $7 million to $10 million Johnnie Walker Red scotch account. Pitching are Avrett, Free & Ginsberg; Deutsch; Lowe & Partners; McCabe & Co.; and incumbent Smith/Greenland, which keeps Johnnie Walker Black, Tanqueray gin and other assignments.

'NEW YORK POST' owner and real estate developer Peter Kalikow filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection last week. The filing didn't include or have any immediate impact on the Post, though the daily could be used as collateral by Mr. Kalikow as he seeks to restructure $350 million in bank loans.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION of Advertising Agencies last week issued plans for evaluating and improving A.C. Nielsen Co.'s national TV ratings system, which has come under fire. Nielsen and a committee of the Advertising Research Foundation are expected to launch similar, independent initiatives in September. The moves are seen by some observers as a polarization in the ad industry over the best way to evaluate and improve the system.

PERRIER GROUP OF AMERICA reached a settlement with New York state Attorney General Robert Abrams over allegedly "deceptive labeling and other false advertising practices." The bottler, which signed the agreement without admitting wrongdoing, agreed to pay $40,000. The company reached a similar agreement in March with the Federal Trade Commission. Waring & LaRosa, New York, handles Perrier's U.S. account.

PEPSI-COLA CO., Somers, N.Y., named Tracy-Locke, Dallas, first agency of record for national marketing promotions. Tracy-Locke had handled a variety of local and regional Pepsi promotions. Its first national effort, a "Monster Match" Halloween promotion for Pepsi and Frito-Lay's Doritos tortilla chips, starts in September.

ANHEUSER-BUSCH brought the Texas portion of its summer Bud Man promotion to an early end last week. The action followed complaints from a competitor that prompted the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission to warn A-B its rights to sell in the state might be revoked. S&P Corp.'s Pearl Brewing Co. sued A-B in state court in San Antonio, charging the promotion violates a Texas law that bars alcohol companies from offering giveaways that require a purchase. D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, St. Louis, handles the advertising nationally with Waylon Co. doing sales promotion. A separate sales promotion agency, which A-B declined to identify, apparently handled the Texas promotion.

ALCOHOL MARKETERS have a negative image with the public, which believes the companies' advertising encourages illegal drinking by youths, a study conducted by the Wirthlin Group found. The study was conducted for an alcohol industry group known as the Century Council.

GENERAL MOTORS CORP. and the Texas attorney general's office settled out of court their dispute about GM advertising tied to a national quality award. The ads touted the Cadillac division's winning the 1990 Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award for manufacturing. GM admitted it erred in claiming to have beaten 167,000 other applicants for the honor, agreed not to make the claim again and agreed to pay the state $10,000 for investigative costs. McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, created the corporate ads.

NEW CAMPAIGNS: McDonald's Corp. has broken a broadcast and cable network TV spot for its 91% fat-free McLean Deluxe that features six National Football League players who wear number 91. Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, handles. . . . National Association of Broadcasters last week sent member stations three print ads that attempt to rebut a current cable industry campaign blaming broadcasters for possible higher rates. The NAB refused to say whether the campaign was handled in-house or by an agency, or if it might eventually include TV.

ACCOUNT ACTION: Phar-Mor, Youngstown, Ohio, to Saffer Advertising, Toronto, from Ketchum Advertising, Pittsburgh, for the drug retailer's $12 million broadcast account. . . . Madison Square Garden, New York, to Burkhardt & Christy from Grey Entertainment & Media for its $4 million account. . . . Kroger Food Stores' Indianapolis region kept Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Chicago, as agency for its broadcast ad account after a review.

Hertz piqued at poll

Magazine publisher, rival Avis face lawsuit

By Ira Teinowitz

A Corporate Travel poll has put the magazine straight into the line of fire in the rental car wars.

Hertz Corp. on Aug. 19 pulled its ad schedule in the magazine and sued both Gralla Publications, the magazine's publisher, and Avis Inc. after Avis began advertising its first-place award in the poll.

Avis' print ad, in national travel trade magazines, features the headline "Avis. Voted best car rental company" and an Oscar-like statuette. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles.

Hertz's lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan, calls the ad "false advertising" and seeks a preliminary injunction barring its use. It also seeks to force Avis to run correction advertising.

Hertz contends in the suit that the magazine failed to use sound survey methodology and that the poll "is not a reliable, valid survey." Avis is trying to portray the survey as scientific, the suit says.

The suit notes that Gralla President Robert N. Boucher Jr. in a June 7 letter told Hertz that the marketing manager who conducted the survey left, and both the ballots and the statistical tabulation of the results are now gone. Mr. Boucher, however, defended the results, saying he had no evidence of impropriety in the tabulation.

Hertz claims the results may be based on a very small sampling.

Avis last week said it's "dismayed" by Hertz's suit.

"The travel industry regularly uses awards as a measure of customer satisfaction," said Russell L. James, VP-corporate communications.

Avis called Hertz's challenge "puzzling."

"What is more regrettable . . . is that Hertz may be rushing to the courtroom rather than to the marketplace to compete," Robert Salerno, senior VP-general manager, said in a company statement. □

sen, manager and partner of Hamburg-based Wilkens Ayer, 60% owned by Ayer.

Ayer Chairman-CEO Jerry Siano couldn't be reached at press time for comment on the European agencies' plans, and an agency spokeswoman said Ayer's U.S. directors were unaware of the plan.

In Europe, Ayer owns majority stakes in TAPSA Ayer, Madrid (1990 billings of $272.2 million); Wilkens Ayer, Hamburg ($151.2 million); Ayer Ltd., London ($61.9 million); Publinter Ayer, Milan ($54.1 million); and Ayer Nederland, Amstelveen, Netherlands ($18.3 million).

Ayer also has minority stakes in Ayer France, Paris ($169.4 million), and Ayer Portugal, Lisbon ($3.5 million).

"We have no schedule, but I feel that by October or January we may have a new Ayer network," Mr. Lathwesen said.

Some clients in Europe have already been informed about the European agencies' desire to stage a buyback from Ayer, he said.

"Our main clients think an independent European Ayer network is a very good idea," he said.

Ayer's key European clients are Spanish carmaker SEAT and Iberia Air Lines of Spain, handled by TAPSA Ayer in Madrid, and Biersdorf, coordinated through Wilkens Ayer in Germany.

"Some even warned us not to be bought out by another network because this may lead to [client] conflict," Mr. Lathwesen said, adding that his agency's contract with Ayer specifies the shop can't be sold to another network.

An Ayer Nederland executive denied Ayer's Dutch agency is involved; other Ayer country managers couldn't be reached.

Mr. Lathwesen said he and the other shops had discussed the plan with Richard Hedger, who joined Ayer earlier this year as chairman-ceo of Ayer Europe. Mr. Hedger also couldn't be reached for comment.

New York-based Ayer is known to be seeking an agency buyer for a majority stake in its European network or even a minority piece of the agency's U.S. operations. But Mr. Siano insisted earlier last week that Ayer had no plans to pull out of Europe.

Mr. Siano has insisted any deal wouldn't be designed to raise cash for the agency, which he said was profitable both in the U.S. and Europe. Instead, he said, strengthening European operations is a priority.

In the past, Ayer has talked with a number of agencies about possible business combinations, including Japan's Dentsu, France's Eurocom and RSCG Group, the U.K.'s GGT Group, and U.S.-based TBWA, industry sources say.

But those talks have generally broken down over Ayer's unwillingness to give up majority control in the U.S., the region most valuable to a foreign agency.

Ayer has been under financial pressure for more than a year, partly because of debt taken on to make European acquisitions and partly because of account losses going back to Burger King Corp. in 1989. □ the network recession began in the fourth quarter of 1990.

"It's the first sign that something is going right somewhere in network TV," said Aaron Cohen, senior VP-executive media director at N W Ayer, New York.

But Mr. Cohen acknowledged the improvement is partially because ratings for daytime programming are down and advertisers need to buy more units to reach the same ratings levels as last year.

Daytime ratings for the Big 3 networks fell 6% during the 1990-91 TV season to a 13.6, according to Nielsen Media Research, and are down about 4% this summer compared with last summer.

Most of those losses have come from ABC and NBC, while CBS has remained flat.

Network executives say daytime ratings have been lost primarily to pay cable networks like Home Box Office.

There's also less daytime program inventory because NBC dropped an hour daily from its daytime schedule.

Mr. Cohen said 1 hour is equivalent to 6% of the Big 3 networks' daytime schedule.

"Does 6% less inventory have enough impact to tighten up the marketplace? Well, it certainly makes people think that they've got to spend their money faster in order to get the inventory they need," he said.

According to Ephron, Papazian & Ephron's estimates, demand for network daytime should continue throughout the 1991-92 season.

Although daytime isn't necessarily a harbinger of improvement in the scatter market for other network dayparts, Ephron predicts demand will also improve for all dayparts in the second half of the broadcast year. Prime-time rates are expected to be down only 3% by the second quarter of 1992, Ephron says. □ nish, Jim Herman, Gary Andersen and Tim Hildebrand—will keep their current titles as division managers of Time, Entertainment Weekly, Sports Illustrated and Fortune, respectively, but will no longer sell only their individual titles.

Time

The division managers of People, Money and Life will keep those titles, though their primary responsibility will be as corporate account managers reporting to the sales directors.

"They're dedicated to an account rather than a magazine," Mr. Heinemann said. "Sending seven different reps out to these [clients] doesn't make a lot of sense because so much of the business is concentrated, so we decided to focus our selling efforts."

Under the reorganization announced in June, the magazine unit named four regional sales VPs to whom all single-title reps would report. That structure remains in place in the New York, Chicago and Los Angeles offices.

Media buyers say the Detroit move reflects the growing trend toward multimagazine and cross-media packaging.

The nation's automakers were among the first marketers to cut corporate deals with Time Warner. Chrysler, GM and West Coast-based Mazda Motor of America in the past year have signed on for packages valued at $40 million, $80 million and $100 million, respectively. Ford is believed to have signed a multimagazine program. □

Doing the fast thing

That holiday 'Hook'

Peter Pan film may fly high with big tie-ins

By Marcy Magiera and Ira Teinowitz

"Hook," a holiday release from Sony Corp.'s entertainment division, is looking like the season's marketing phenomenon.

The Steven Spielberg movie is also shaping up as the first test of the synergies between Sony's hardware and software operations, something highly touted when the Japanese company paid $3.4 billion for Columbia Pictures Entertainment in November 1989.

The film from the Tri-Star Pictures unit has already hooked Mattel as a promotional partner, and Ed Russell, Tri-Star senior VP-publicity, promotion and field operations, said the studio is discussing promotion deals with McDonald's Corp. and Coca-Cola Co.

A McDonald's spokeswoman said she knew of nothing in the company's marketing plans involving "Hook."

If such a tie-in does happen, it will spark a fierce promotional battle among restaurant chains with holiday movie tie-ins. Burger King Corp. earlier joined with Walt Disney Co. to promote "Beauty & the Beast," another holiday release. Pizza Hut will partner with Universal Pictures for a promotion tied to the sequel to "An American Tail."

Promotional deals could add $25 million to $30 million in media exposure to the $10 million to $15 million Tri-Star is likely to spend to advertise "Hook."

The movie stars Robin Williams as the grown-up Peter Pan, who must return to Neverland to rescue his children from the villainous Captain Hook, played by Dustin Hoffman. To succeed, he must recapture his boyhood imagination and spirit, which he does with the help of Julia Roberts'

$88M review for Nynex?

By Jon Lafayette and Joe Mandese

NEW YORK—Nynex Corp. may be dialing an account review for its $88 million in media buying.

The telecommunications company has been working with consultants to analyze media buying practices, leading to speculation the Baby Bell may consider consolidating the assignment.

Nynex has examined media buying practices for its corporate account to make sure it was being done efficiently, confirmed Matthew Stover, VP-public affairs, corporate communications.

"We have not made any changes," he said. "I wouldn't want to speculate on what we'll do in the future."

One source close to the company said to keep an eye on the Nynex business.

The analysis could extend beyond media assessment to a full agency review.

Nynex spent $88.7 million on measured media advertising in 1990, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

"It could be bigger than that, depending on what they end up deciding to do," said the source, who indicated the analysis could extend beyond media assessment to a full agency review.

Nynex's media buying is now handled by a wide range of agencies servicing the operating units: Ogilvy & Mather, Young & Rubicam and Chiat/-Day/Mojo, all in New York; Cabot Advertising, Boston; Lohmeyer Simpson, Morristown, N.J.; Schnurr & Jackson, Albany, N.Y.; and Leonard Monahan Lubars & Kelly, Providence, R.I.

'Healthy' frozen foods launch offensive

ConAgra, KGF face off in pizza

By Judann Dagnoli and Julie Liesse

Pizza is shaping up to be the next battleground in "healthy" frozen foods.

ConAgra Frozen Foods' Healthy Choice brand is racing ahead of rival Kraft General Foods' Eating Right for a slice of the $1.2 billion frozen pizza market.

Among regional marketers, McCain Ellio's is introducing a line called Healthy Slices into its markets, which comprise 30% of the country.

The hard-fought battle, however, will likely be between Eating Right and Healthy Choice, which is now introducing a four-item line of french bread pizzas nationally.

Kraft General Foods has yet to start marketing its product.

A company spokeswoman said it's "premature" to discuss Eating Right pizza, though TV spots from Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, featuring brand spokeswoman Chris Evert have already been shot.

ConAgra also refused to comment on its pizza, but retail sources say the line contains four varieties: deluxe, pepperoni, Italian turkey sausage and cheese. Each has less than 30% of calories from fat and has less than 330 calories per serving. The suggested retail price for the

Le Menu offers taste guarantee

By Judann Dagnoli

In what's believed to be a company first, Campbell Soup Co. is offering a money-back taste guarantee.

The effort breaking today promotes the marketer's Le Menu Healthy line as the best-tasting of consumers' healthy choices in the frozen food segment, specifically comparing the taste of its Herb Roast Chicken to competitors'.

Although ConAgra's top-selling Healthy Choice brand isn't mentioned by name, a commercial shows products with that brand's green packaging.

The spot TV and radio campaign,

TV age gap narrows

ABC targets older viewers, tightens ratings race

By Joe Mandese

An already tight prime-time network ratings race will grow even narrower this fall as the age of ABC's audience grows older and closer to that of its rivals.

MEDIA WORKS

A "conservative" fall scheduling strategy by ABC will raise the age of its audience by 1.5 years, to a median age of 36.5, in the fourth quarter, predicted Steve Sternberg, VP-manager of broadcast research at Bozell, New York.

While it will still be the youngest skewing of the Big 3 networks, Mr. Sternberg said, the gap will narrow between the age of ABC's audience and those of CBS and NBC, which will remain virtually unchanged.

He predicted the median audience age of CBS will be 44.5 and NBC will be 41.4.

The Bozell study analyzed the various narrow demographic segments of audience data from Nielsen Media Research to estimate the median age of each network and individual programs. The median age is the point where half the viewers are older and half are younger.

The narrowing of the Big 3's audience composition is significant for network advertisers, because the TV networks are delivering identical household ratings.

ABC, CBS and NBC finished Nielsen's July ratings sweeps in their first ever three-way tie, with each network delivering an 8.7 rating and 17 share.

While each of the networks is predicting it will take the lead this fall, several agencies, including Bozell, expect household ratings parity to continue through the fourth quarter.

As a result, Mr. Sternberg said, the audience composition of each network will play a more important role than ever for marketers.

He attributed the aging of ABC's audience to the network's shift from "innovative and younger-skewing" shows toward a more conservative schedule that will appeal to older viewers.

" 'Thirtysomething' is out, and 'Homefront' is in. 'Homefront' will definitely skew older than 'thirtysomething,' " Mr. Sternberg said, referring to one of ABC's scheduling tactics.

"Homefront" is a post-World War II serial drama about returning soldiers and their families.

Other young-skewing shows canceled by ABC include "China Beach" and "Twin Peaks," whose Saturday night time slots are being filled by "The Young Riders" and "The Commish," both expected to skew older.

Mr. Sternberg said ABC also added to its schedule two reality programs, "FBI: Untold Stories" and "American Detectives." Those shows are predicted to have median ages of 51.4 and 51.5, respectively.

With a median age of 27.8, Fox Broadcasting Co. will have the youngest-skewing audience. Mr. Sternberg predicted that 11 of Fox's 17 shows on its fall schedule will have median ages in the 20s.

With a median age of 21.5, Fox's "Beverly Hills 90210" will have the youngest audience of any network show and CBS' "Murder, She Wrote" will be the oldest, with a median age of 55.9. □

News briefs on print, electronic and alternative media.

Ready for takeoff. Following a three-month delay, Turner Broadcasting System last week began testing the Airport Channel, an ad-supported electronic medium in airport departure terminals. Using programming from Turner's Cable News Network, Airport Channel airs news and consumer and travel information; it devotes 30% of airtime to commercials. Advertisers participating in the six-week test include AT&T Co., American Express Travel Related Services Co., GTE Corp., General Motors Corp., Johnson & Johnson, Sears Brand Central and SkyTel. TV monitors are in airports in Cincinnati, Dallas, Denver, Miami, Minneapolis and Washington. Airlines participating in the test include American Airlines, Northwest Airlines, United Airlines and ComAir. The system will be expanded into more airports in 1992 and may add airlines.

Another CNN coup. Following its acclaimed coverage of the Persian Gulf War, Cable News Network topped other media including the Big 3 networks in coverage of the recent attempted coup in the Soviet Union, according to a national survey conducted by Opinion Research Corp. Fully 54% of 398 respondents ranked CNN first for coverage of the Soviet crisis. Nineteen percent named ABC, 15% said NBC and 13% named CBS. The phone survey was conducted Aug. 20 and has a margin of error of plus or minus 4%. CNN reported its highest ratings during the staged Soviet coup since the Persian Gulf War, including a 1.7 rating from Nielsen Media Research for Aug. 20, representing 1.04 million TV households, up from an average daily rating of about 0.5.

Mag gets TV debut. Gamepro, a videogame entertainment magazine published by IDGC/Peterborough Publications, on Sept. 28 makes its national debut as a weekly half-hour TV series, running on network affiliates, cable and independent networks. The show, produced by Samuel Goldwyn Co. and hosted by J.D. Roth, will give game tips and strategies for electronic games as well as reviews and news on the latest games and systems. The series is geared toward the nation's 30 million-plus home videogame enthusiasts.

Campuses get kiosks. MarketSource Corp. is introducing InfoSource, ad-supported, interactive kiosks on college campuses. The kiosks offer customized information on academics, sports, news, travel and local dining and entertainment, shown on a computer screen. Movie previews and music videos are featured on a 12-minute continuous video loop, with 4 minutes devoted to commercial time. The kiosks will be installed at 10 major universities this fall and 75 by spring. IBM Corp. is a developing partner and major sponsor. Other charter advertisers include entertainment companies and package-goods marketers including Planters LifeSavers Co. □

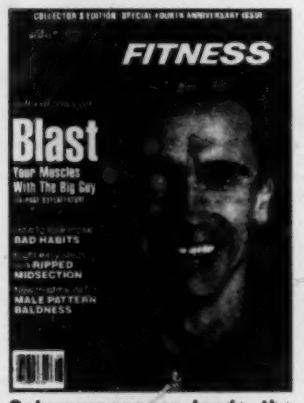
COVER STORY

The Terminator tops covers' face space

By Janice Kelly

Cover Story is a monthly ranking of celebrities' popularity as reflected by their appearance on the covers of more than 30 of the nation's leading publications.

Renaissance man Arnold Schwarzenegger beat out all others to win top Cover Story honors for August.



Schwarzenegger leads the class in August covers.

Magazine editors pumped up their coverage of Mr. Schwarzenegger's latest action-thriller "Terminator 2: Judgment Day," his U.S. tour promoting the President's Council on Physical Fitness & Sports and the birth of his second daughter.

While several celebrity and men's publications have carried stories on him, Weider Health & Fitness had Mr. Schwarzenegger doing double duty in August, appearing on the covers of both Men's Fitness and Muscle & Fitness. Overall, he earned 15 points.

Cover Story assigns point values to cover appearances based on factors including prominence of the photo and frequency of the publication.

Balancing out the Schwarzenegger hype in August was coverage of Michael Landon, with 10 points. Entertainment weeklies and supermarket tabloids profiled the actor, who died July 1.

Oprah Winfrey tied for third place with 8 points as supermarket tabloids followed her long-term romance and weight problems. She tied with actor Keanu Reeves, who won attention for his films "Point Break" and "Bill & Ted's Bogus Journey."

A three-way tie for fifth place with 7 points involved actresses Andie MacDowell, who followed her appearance in the film "Green Card" with two less successful films, "Hudson Hawk" and "Object of Beauty"; Kathleen Turner, starring in "V.I. Warshawski"; and Annette Bening, who stars in the film "Regarding Henry." Much coverage of Ms. Bening focused on the fact that she's expecting a child with longtime bachelor Warren Beatty.

Elizabeth Taylor and Patrick Swayze tied for eighth place with 6 points. Stories on Ms. Taylor discussed her upcoming marriage, while People called Mr. Swayze "The Sexiest Man Alive." The actor also won attention for his summer film, "Point Break."

At 10th place with 5 points each were Julia Roberts, Delta Burke, Prince Charles and Princess Diana.

July's Cover Story lineup included Ms. Roberts (14 points); Mr. Landon (10); Kiefer Sutherland (8.5); Kevin Costner and Harrison Ford (8 each); Delta Burke (7); Sally Field (6); and Linda Hamilton, Christian Slater, Ms. Bening and Geena Davis (4 each). □

Agencies adjust to demands of global clients

By Julie Skur Hill

While nothing excites an agency more than gaining a global brand, clients' demands for a consistent image and quality of work are forcing agencies themselves to make adjustments in how they operate.

The opportunity to work on a global brand means "a lot of trade-offs and a lot of new muscles will have to be developed," said Carl Spielvogel, chairman-ceo of New York-based Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, whose agency operates in 39 countries.

In short, global clients are irreversibly changing day-to-day agency business operations as they anticipate more and more global assignments.

Fueling this is the creation of a single market in Europe and the elimination of all trade barriers within the European Community by Dec. 31, 1992. As clients reorganize in Europe, they're increasingly expected to favor using just one agency to handle brands, not just in Europe but globally.

Last year, more than $1.4 billion in pan-European business was assigned, according to a survey by Advertising Age's Euromarketing newsletter. The figure comprises 106 accounts worth more than $3 million each. Of the total, at least 80 accounts were new assignments.

"As you look at marketing global brands . . . the brand carries staggering clout with the agency, with the media," said Bruce Mason, chairman-ceo of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, Chicago. "Smart clients—S.C. Johnson, Kimberly-Clark, Kraft General Foods—recognize that."

He contended that as global brands become more important than ever, they further empower the client. But there's also good news for agencies.

"Once they pick a network, I don't think they're going to change [agencies] very quickly. It takes a while to get an agency to understand your business in 60 countries," Mr. Mason added.

"Clients will not get rid of an agency," he said. "They'll put pressure on the agency to get

Who has what accounts where

For the seventh annual Advertising Age World Brands report, the following criteria were used:

- Accounts must be served in at least four countries as of June 30, 1991.
- The combined client business must total at least $5 million.

The report is divided into sections. Those agencies listing offices in 34 or more countries overseas—12 of the 26 agencies surveyed—are included in the first section.

rid of the people who are causing the problem."

Relationships

Representing a global brand requires "many more touch points [between agency and client] than you'd ever had on local or regional accounts. You might have to talk to 45 different people from the client," said Michael Sennott, exec VP-regional director of Europe at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

"Part of the bargain you strike [on a global account] is that you get closer to the client," said Frank Clark, senior VP-area director Americas at Grey Advertising.

"What happens is you work both with the headquarters and on a local basis. You end up with two clients and two levels of client," a situation that can sometimes require diplomacy and sensitivity, he said. "You [may] wind up interpreting the client to the client."

To handle these different levels, several multinational agencies have adjusted their own structures in the past few months.

McCann is consolidating many of its international accounts in Frankfurt, including Bayer, which was previously handled by the Duesseldorf office.

"More clients are using certain markets as lead markets for rolling their products across Europe," Mr. Sennott said. "We're just doing the same."

In July, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising combined its North American and non-North American operations into one unit, allowing the network to service clients on a seamless worldwide basis.

"We were not exploiting our multinational clients," Chief Executive Robert Louis-Dreyfus said in explaining the change.

Last month, Backer Spielvogel Bates created the BSB Americas Team, a group of experts from various marketing disciplines throughout North America. The mission of the team, similar to the agency's Eurocenter in Paris, is to assist clients in expanding throughout North America as the U.S. moves toward free trade with Canada and Mexico.

"The challenge that we and our clients face is to restructure in a way that we can take advantage of the opportunities in these trading zones," Mr. Spielvogel said.

The agency likes the regional organization so much it's in the process of developing a similar setup for Asia, he added.

Lintas:Worldwide has created the Worldwide Creative Council, the Worldwide Media Council and the Worldwide Integrated Communications Council to bring together specialists within key disciplines from around the world. The three networks have been formed to ensure horizontal communication within Lintas:Worldwide, officially split into three geographic zones—Europe/Africa, the Americas and Asia/Pacific.

Young & Rubicam Advertising recently named Tim Pollak vice chairman-director of client service worldwide, a new post. The former president of Y&R's New York office is responsible for overseeing his agency's 25 worldwide account directors.

"We have to develop people who understand marketing and account management across borders," Mr. Pollak said. "My job is to help guide those people to help them understand the way clients are organized globally . . . [and] create operating efficiencies."

Because global advertising is growing so rapidly, staffers learning how to juggle a 35-country media buy or how to be sensitive to the mores of 20 nations often find the process a trial by fire.

"We now have around 25 employees who we call 'Europlayers,' " who specialize in handling pan-European business, said Grey Duesseldorf CEO Bernd Michael.

Multinational shops hoping to pitch Fuji's amateur film account had to meet the marketer's strict requirements. Howell Henry Chaldecott Lury, London, created this ad.

make new demands on agencies vying for their accounts.

One such company is Fuji Photo Film Co., now looking for its first multinational agency to handle an estimated $8.4 million in amateur photographic film advertising in France, Germany and the U.K. Fuji had its multinational contenders jumping through hoops never seen by local shops.

Peter Samwell, Fuji's divisional director, London, said the Japanese film marketer decided "it would be too difficult to get three agencies to work together" on a common strategy.

Fuji uses Lintas in Germany, Howell Henry Chaldecott Lury in the U.K. and is between agencies in France.

On July 12, Fuji wrote to nine agencies asking them to pitch the account. Another nine agencies asked to be included in the review, but three shops dropped out because they didn't have wholly owned subsidiaries in the three initial markets.

Fuji's Peter Samwell: "It would be too difficult to get three agencies to work together" on a common strategy.

Each contender was asked to answer a four-page, detailed questionnaire about the agency's background, management, policies, analysis of accounts won and lost in the past year, potential staffing of the Fuji account and experience handling pan-European clients. Agencies working on local Fuji business never underwent so rigorous an exercise.

After Fuji executives pored over the answers, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, DDB Needham Worldwide, N W Ayer and Lintas:International were named as finalists.

Pitching for pan-European business "is far more complex and expensive for an agency to do [than local accounts]. It takes triple the time because you have three account teams instead of one. It's more difficult to control. When you are running a pitch in your own country, you know what your people's workloads are. It just becomes much more logistically difficult," said Michael Bray, managing partner and managing director of DDB Needham International, London.

On Aug. 2, the three candidates visited Fuji's continental European headquarters in Duesseldorf to question Fuji's newly formed pan-European ad agency committee that Mr. Samwell chairs.

Presentations will take place in Duesseldorf in the middle of this month with a decision due by the end of September.

Pitching a global client also heats up competition, not only among agencies but within an agency.

When D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles pitched the estimated $20 million Australian-based Qantas Airways account, staffers around the world competed to become part of the team representing D'Arcy.

Led by Sydney-based DMB&B/Weekes Morris Osborn, the agency's winning pitch—against McCann-Erickson, Backer Spielvogel Bates' George Patterson Pty. and incumbent Chiat/Day/Mojo—actually involved D'Arcy offices in Tokyo, Singapore, London,

New York, Los Angeles and Auckland. A total of about 30 people were brought in from around the world.

Each D'Arcy office in countries where Qantas flies assessed the airline's image in that market. Drawing on its worldwide resources is part of a process the agency has developed to pitch highly desired, broad-based business.

"Once [the research results are] pretty clear, we use some of the best teams to work on executing that concept," said John Ferries, New York-based D'Arcy president for Asia/Pacific and Latin America.

"It's a little competitive but that may be good. Some of that is inevitable," Mr. Ferries said.

For a pitch for Qantas, "we brought [people from the different teams] together in Australia with their ideas and didn't let them go until it was done."

For the Qantas pitch, after sifting through the best of the creative work from D'Arcy teams around the world, "we brought [people from the different teams] together in Australia with their ideas and didn't let them go until it was done," Mr. Ferries said. "We used people from three different countries in the last two, three weeks to finish the idea.

"This global effort was crucial to our success in winning the account because it ensured that our solution was global, which Qantas wanted; it ensured we incorporated the different target consumer beliefs and behaviors. . . . And it demonstrated how we would work on the account as an integrated global network."

Going "glocal"

The process of developing global creative offers many challenges, such as going for universal appeal while avoiding a simplistic approach.

"There is a difference between addressing the similarities of consumers and going for the lowest common denominator."

Marcio Moreira
Vice chairman
McCann-Erickson Worldwide

"Let me throw a word of caution in," said Marcio Moreira, McCann's vice chairman in New York. "There is a difference between addressing the similarities of consumers and going for the lowest common denominator."

Language barriers and national restrictions, such as laws that allow only those TV ads shot in a particular country, confine creative, but they can be overcome.

"Obviously, it's easier to do all voice-overs—but that doesn't mean it has to be done that way," Grey's Mr. Clark said. "It's harder to sell across a lot of different markets because it gets more people involved, which can mean more changes. In the end, you can have a camel that looks like an elephant. . . . but you can still do great things that run globally."

He cites Coca-Cola Co.'s global ads as outstanding.

These barriers discourage creatives who don't see the rewards that can accompany international efforts. As a result, Saatchi is developing a cash reward system to motivate to each market. TBWA clients Henkel, Philip Morris Cos. and Beiersdorf's Nivea have adopted this approach.

Leo Burnett International had to adapt Tony the Tiger for Japanese audiences.

Global

Even big ideas that eventually expand around the world may be tested for local reaction.

Leo Burnett International has slowly gone global with major ad symbols such as the Marlboro Man and Tony the Tiger after careful testing in each market around the world.

"Creative can't just be clones of what's used in other markets," said Hank Feeley, chairman-ceo. "It could be a terrible mistake. The client could lose sales, and then you'd lose the client."

H.J. Heinz Co. ketchup ads have needed adjustment before running in Japan.

"We found the ads [first created for the U.S.] were too Americana. . . . The 'slower, thicker ketchup' theme works in Japan but the execution of that theme is very, very different," Mr. Feeley said.

McCann sees local adaptations as a way to motivate creatives.

"We take 'not invented here' and now make it 'improved here,' " Mr. Moreira said.

If the local agency sees a way to alter an ad for the local market, he added, not only has the ad been tailored to better fit the market, "this creates a sense of co-authorship." □

What's in it for you?

Market access. Pure and simple.

Because the Asahi Shimbun is Japan's most widely read and influential daily newspaper. A power-house media vehicle reaching more than 8,000,000 households and offices every day. With the majority home-delivered.

And to families where professional, executive and management profiles predominate. Where home ownership is most common. And income significantly above the national average.

Quality reader-access that attracts quality advertisers who appreciate the unrivalled reach of the paper, as well as the cost-effectiveness of its regional-/national-edition options.

So if your clients are looking to make a name for themselves in Japan, take a look at the Asahi Shimbun. You'll find there's more in it for all of you.

Nintendo fires up videogame attack

By Cleveland Horton and Kate Fitzgerald

Nintendo of America over the weekend kicked off the biggest TV campaign in its history in a bold move to permanently zap competitors.

The commercials are for the long-awaited Nintendo Super NES 16-bit videogame system, where Nintendo has lagged.

With a $25 million ad budget for the new game plus another $10 million for the original 8-bit videogame console and the handheld Game Boy, Nintendo is moving maximum artillery to the front lines for a fall videogame assault.

In Nintendo's sights is Sega of America, for now the No. 1 marketer of 16-bit videogame systems with its Genesis model, introduced in 1989. Analysts say its tenure at the top of the category will be short-lived.

Nintendo is deploying its Super Mario Brothers against Sega's Hedgehog in the battle of the 16-bit videogame systems.

"Sega's very existence is at stake, now that Nintendo's finally gotten into the 16-bit market," said Allen Bohbot, president of toy media buying agency Bohbot Communications. "The power of the Nintendo name is redefining the market again."

Toy retailers report early demand for Nintendo's Super NES, even before advertising appeared, was significantly higher than expected; major retailers including Toys "R" Us are predicting a sellout.

"Right now Super NES is the Whittle's new gamble

Mall showrooms give feel of auto test drives

By Scott Donaton

Whittle Communications is looking to the nation's auto marketers to support a new venture called Highway One, a chain of showrooms where consumers can take a simulated in-store test drive.

The project is one of several moves planned by Whittle following an agreement last week by Forstmann Little & Co. to invest $350 million for a one-third stake in the media company.

Details about Highway One are sketchy, but Whittle sources say the company will begin testing the shopping mall operation this fall.

Consumers will be able to sit in cars and experience a simulated test drive using "electronic kiosks" developed by Whittle, these sources say.

It wasn't clear whether the stores will sell cars or simply direct buyers to the nearest dealers. It also was unclear if they would feature competing brands.

The Whittle sources say Mr. Whittle initially is seeking the support of domestic auto marketers and recently met with Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca.

They indicated he may have already secured a commitment from at least one car company to participate in the test.

A Chrysler spokeswoman confirmed the company had been approached about the project and was considering participating in it.

Whittle officials wouldn't comment.

The project is being developed under Vice Chairman Gerry Hogan, and sources said Highway One will cost upwards of $200 million to launch.

"We have a number of major capital-intensive launches planned," said Whittle Vice Chairman Alan Greenberg of the Forstmann Little investment.

"This gives us the money to fuel our growth," he said.

Last week, Whittle also met with marketers and ad agency executives to outline a plan to re-

Coke-CAA deal shakes agency role

An Ad Age roundup

The advertising agency business, dwindling in importance to clients and suffering from the recession, took another big blow last week.

Soft-drink giant Coca-Cola Co. named Creative Artists Agency—the most powerful Hollywood talent agency—as "worldwide media and communications consultant."

Coca-Cola said in a statement CAA will work with company executives and agencies to develop "global strategies for marketing, promotion, new technologies, sports, arts and entertainment."

Despite assurances to the contrary from Coca-Cola executives, the broad mission of CAA and its well-known chairman, Michael Ovitz, appears to significantly erode the dominant marketing role historically played by the marketer's ad agencies.

Mr. Ovitz's agency handles superstars such as Kevin Costner,

Coca-Cola Co. will likely use its new alliance with Creative Artists Agency to go after younger consumers, attacking Pepsi-Cola Co.'s dominance in entertainment marketing and its place in pop culture.

To do that, the cola marketer is expected to use CAA's extensive clout and entertainment experience to develop marketing strategies ranging from product placement in TV shows and films to new celebrity endorsements.

ABC loosens rules

Net draws fire for ad dispute resolution plan

By Joe Mandese

NEW YORK—ABC is reconsidering a proposal that would require advertisers to mediate their own false-ad claim disputes.

The plan, disclosed as the network loosened other longstanding restrictions on competitive ad claims and endorsement, was immediately attacked by the ad industry.

Late last week, ABC said it was rethinking the plan that was to have complaints go to the advertiser rather than the network.

"My suspicion is that [ABC] has probably been spending a lot of time trying to resolve competitive challenges," said Rich Pollet, senior VP-general counsel of J. Walter Thomspon USA. "It seems reasonably clear to me that it is a way of them cutting down on their staff time."

Bertrand Lanchner, senior VP-general counsel of N W Ayer, agreed.

"ABC is trying to duck the workload on challenges," he said.

Besides shifting the burden to advertisers, Mr. Lanchner predicted the change would slow resolution of challenges.

"Some advertisers are not going to be as attentive to challenges when they come from a competitor as when they come from a network," he said. "The fact that a challenge is coming from a network makes it more serious, because the advertiser knows that if the network finds against him, he is off the air."

He said there would be no incentive for an advertiser to respond quickly since its spots would keep running until the challenge was resolved.

After hearing complaints about the ad challenge plan, ABC said it's reconsidering the proposal, but still plans to codify the other

Zero profits at Saatchi?

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Analysts slashed their forecasts for Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s 1991 profits to zero last week after CEO Robert Louis-Dreyfus and Chief Operating Officer Charles Scott painted a grim picture of the advertising market.

The Saatchi executives were explaining the financial results—a $7.1 million pretax loss for the first six months of 1991—in meetings with analysts and shareholders. Before the results were announced Sept. 5, analysts were forecasting pretax profits of about $25 million for the full year.

"In light of revenues not looking like picking up in the last quarter, I'm going for the worst case scenario of break-even," said Lorna Tilbian, an analyst at U.K. stockbroker Warburg Securities.

Saatchi's severance costs of close to $8.8 million following layoffs of about 500 staffers in the first half were largely responsible for the loss.

Because Saatchi has just changed its financial year to end Dec. 31 from Sept. 30, figures aren't directly comparable with last year's results. However, Saatchi calculates that $600 million revenues for the first half represent a 4% drop from a year earlier and that the $7.1 million loss compares to pretax profits of $23 million.

"We're budgeting for revenues staying flat" for the rest of the year, a Saatchi spokesman said.

Describing their efforts to cut costs and improve efficiency, Messrs. Louis-Dreyfus and Scott said seven Saatchi-owned companies lost about $10 million total in the first half.

Of those seven businesses, they have fixed problems at four and are still working on the other three, they said. The seven companies weren't identified.

Two Saatchi companies in the U.K.—London agency KHBB and Zenith Media, the media buying arm for all Saatchi agencies in the U.K.—were singled out as doing especially well during the first half.

Chairman Maurice Saatchi said ad revenues declined in the U.S. and the U.K. and were static elsewhere, with no evidence of any overall increase in client spending. □

Louis-Dreyfus: 'On the right track'

Robert Louis-Dreyfus, ceo of Saatchi & Saatchi Co., London, talked to Advertising Age European Editor Laurel Wentz last week about Saatchi's performance following the release of the holding company's financial results for the first six months of 1991.

ONE ON ONE

Advertising Age: Do you expect a recovery to begin this year? Or in 1992?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: We think [in] the second part of this year revenue will be flat, but we expect to make a profit before 1992.

Unfortunately, I don't see any sign yet of revenues rebounding in 1992. For the time being—we haven't done our budget [yet]—we don't have a sign that clients are going to be spending more.

AA: The financial community is concerned that WPP Group may run out of money soon. Could that happen to Saatchi?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: Absolutely not. When we did our refinancing—I don't know if it was smart or not—we did a forecast for three bad years. Cash flow is ahead of where we thought it would be for the first six months.

R. Louis-Dreyfus

Our average debt was $450 million last year. This year, average debt was $382 million [for the first half] and in June debt was $350 million, so we are on the right track. Our bank loans run until 1996. We feel pretty good about it.

AA: There is still speculation that U.S. agencies AC&R and Campbell-Mithun-Esty may be sold. What are your plans for those shops?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: I never comment on that.

AA: Are you done with cost cutting?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: If revenue is flat for the second half, the cost cutting is complete except maybe [letting go] one or two guys somewhere in I don't even know what country. Cost cutting is 99.9% complete. All indications we have from July and August [show] we are on target.

AA: Can you give some idea how Saatchi's two networks, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising and Backer Spielvogel Bates, are performing individually?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: We don't divulge that kind of information.

AA: What functions has Charles Scott, Saatchi's former group finance director, taken over from you since you appointed him chief operating officer in July?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: He's running the seven divisions. To be fair to him, these [first-half financial] numbers are mine. The next ones are his.

AA: Now that he's taken over daily operations, how long will you stay?

Mr. Louis-Dreyfus: You can be reasonably sure that until we show good numbers, I'll be around. □

Sports marketing: a high-rollers game

DALLAS—The $18 million Quaker Oats Co. reportedly spent to sign Michael Jordan as a Gatorade endorser sounds like big money to fans, but it's only a drop in the corporate sports marketing bucket.

Companies spent $23.52 billion on sports marketing in the U.S. last year, more than five times the $4.2 billion spent on tickets for all spectator sports, according to a new study from the Sports Marketing Group and The Associated Press.

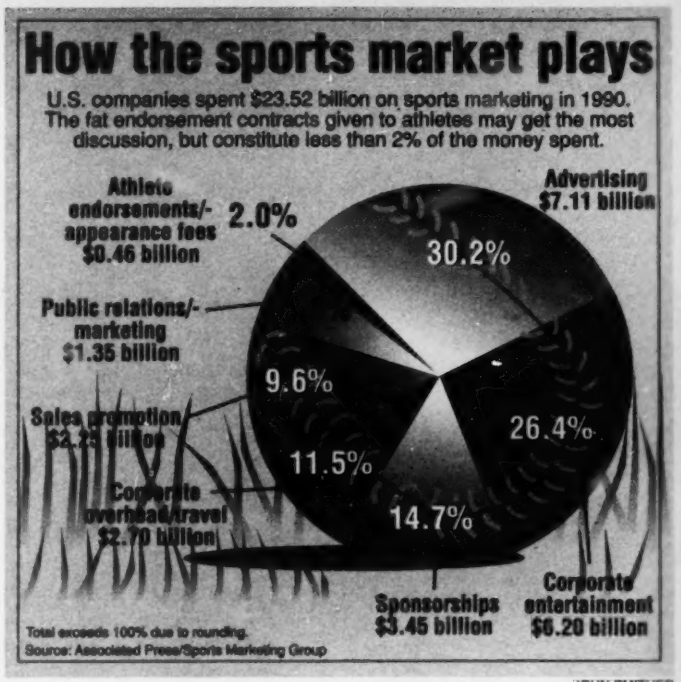
The single largest share, 30.2%, went to advertising.

Remaining sports marketing dollars were spent for corporate entertainment at, or in connection with, sporting events ($6.2 billion); sponsorships ($3.45 billion); corporate overhead and travel ($2.7 billion); sales promotion ($2.25 billion); public relations ($1.35 billion); and athlete endorsements and appearance fees ($460 million).

The 10 heaviest corporate spenders last year were General Motors Corp. ($445 million), Philip Morris Cos. ($405 million), Anheuser-Busch Co. ($400 million), Nike ($200 million), Ford Motor Co. ($130 million), AT&T Co. ($125 million), Chrysler Corp. ($120 million), RJR Nabisco ($115 million), Procter & Gamble Co. ($110 million) and Coca-Cola Co. ($95 million).

Those 10 companies accounted for $2.145 billion, or only 9% of the total, indicating the depth of corporate involvement in sports-related marketing.

Nearly $3 billion was spent on TV advertising, 42% of the total investment on advertising. Broadcast network represented 64% of TV spending, or $1.9 billion, followed by spot TV ($570 million), network cable TV ($360 million) and syndicated TV ($150 million).



How the sports market plays
U.S. companies spent $23.52 billion on sports marketing in 1990. The fat endorsement contracts given to athletes may get the most discussion, but constitute less than 2% of the money spent.

JOHN SMITHER

Other ad media for sports marketing dollars were newspapers ($2.42 billion), magazines ($860 million), radio ($440 million), stadium and program advertising ($230 million), production fees ($160 million) and outdoor ($30 million).

The three-month study was based on hundreds of phone and in-person interviews with teams, networks, marketers, ticket brokers and other related businesses.

Corporate sports marketing was the single largest contributor to the $54.52 billion spent last year on all facets of spectator sports, ahead of the $11.05 billion schools spent on athletics and $6.2 billion spent for licensed products.

But consumers still spent more to take part in sports than to watch; $125.16 billion was spent on participant sports.

There may be trouble ahead for sports marketing, however, said Nye Lavalle, Sports Marketing Group managing director.

Economic doldrums are reining in many corporate sports budgets, ad sales during TV sports programming are slowing and sponsors are pulling out of events. Fans are resisting higher ticket prices, and companies are beginning to rethink their sports investment, he said. □

WPP woes persist

Former execs seek cash; analysts stay wary

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Two former high-level WPP Group executives, including former Ogilvy Group CEO Ken Roman, have filed separate claims against the company seeking compensation.

Ken Roman

As speculation continued last week about WPP's possible cash-flow difficulties, it was learned Mr. Roman has initiated administrative proceedings regarding his "golden parachute" benefits.

Both Mr. Roman and WPP confirmed arbitration proceedings have begun, but neither would offer any details of the proceedings.

"It's a private issue, and I'm not going to discuss it," Mr. Roman said.

Mr. Roman, who left Ogilvy two years ago, made his claim in the spring, say sources close to the company.

Under Ogilvy Group's golden parachute provisions, executives—including Mr. Roman—were entitled to three times their annual salaries and bonuses. The parachute plan covered 24 senior officers and was worth a total of $28 million. Mr. Roman's cash compensation was in excess of $500,000 annually.

Former WPP Treasurer Simeon Galpert is alleging unfair dismissal in his case, scheduled to be heard before a U.K. industrial tribunal in late October.

Sources close to the company say Mr. Galpert is seeking an undetermined amount of severance pay.

Mr. Galpert has handled WPP negotiations with its banks over new financing arrangements to keep WPP from breaching financial covenants and possibly running out of money. That plan was announced April 4, but he had left in March and filed the unfair dismissal claim in London in June.

WPP confirmed it's contesting the claim.

In an earlier dispute, Bruce Beach, who resigned as managing director of Ogilvy & Mather's Chicago office in January, filed suit against Ogilvy Group June 17 in U.S. District Court in Chicago.

His suit, which hasn't come to trial, alleges he wasn't paid $310,000 in performance bonuses due him from 1990.

Separately, in February, Mr. Beach filed a re-

Time Warner, Mazda sign $96M deal

Cross-media package gets 'Meaning of life' theme

By Scott Donaton and Cleveland Horton

Mazda Motor of America is entering into a precedent setting $96 million deal with Time Warner for an extensive, three-year cross-media package that will help the automaker through a critical marketing period.

The program, set to start this year, is built around an umbrella theme, "The meaning of life." That theme stems from an editorial project of the same name that ran in Life in December 1988, in which a number of celebrities addressed the issue.

The Mazda deal, known to be in the works, is one of the largest integrated marketing packages sold by Time Warner. Besides the $40 million Chrysler Corp. deal signed in the fall of 1990, the company sold an $80 million program last year to General Motors Corp.

"This truly is the most integrated marketing program that we have engineered," said one Time Warner official who requested anonymity. "It is certainly multimedia."

The centerpiece of the program is Mazda's space commitment to Time Warner's magazines. The deal extends beyond Time Warner's New York-based titles—Time, People, Sports Illustrated, Money, Fortune, Life and Entertainment Weekly—to include some Time Publishing Ventures magazines, including Sunset, Southern Living, Cooking Light, In Health, Parenting and the fledgling Martha Stewart Living.

Other elements of the package include syndicated or cable TV programming, tied to the "Meaning of life" theme, to be sponsored by Mazda. In addition, Life is preparing to publish a book based on "The Meaning of Life," which Mazda will use as a marketing tool, perhaps to draw customers to showrooms.

"Efficiency is not the reason to do it. There's more of an emphasis on promotion and merchandising, rather than straight media."

The package may also involve Time Warner's selective-binding and ink-jet imaging capabilities used to personalize advertising and editorial messages.

It's not clear whether Mazda will adopt "The meaning of life" in all its advertising, handled by

Tyson fight suffers black eye

By Ira Teinowitz and Joe Mandese

Mike Tyson's indictment last week on rape charges threatens to knock out some major marketing plans leading up to his Nov. 8 heavyweight bout with Evander Holyfield.

The pay-per-view telecast through Time Warner Sports' TVKO unit won't include commercials, but sponsors planning promotions and advertising around the fight are scrambling to review options.

An unidentified automaker has pulled out of negotiations for a major sponsorship since Mr. Tyson was indicted, Time Warner executives said, though negotiations with Coca-Cola Co., which has signed Mr. Holyfield as an endorser, and other potential sponsors are continuing.

Time Warner identified the other potential partners as a watch company, as official timekeeper; Eveready Battery Co.; and a fast-food chain.

"We are continuing to solicit companies for sponsorship. We are very open about the situation."

Eveready Manager of Corporate Information Patrick Farrell, however, said the company "was not involved in any way with this fight."

The fight's two biggest sponsors, Anheuser-Busch and Southland Corp., last week said they will proceed with ad-supported promotions planned long before the controversy about Mr. Tyson began.

But there were some indications that A-B might lower the level of its national TV advertising that will support the fight.

One option might be for A-B to supply the promised advertising touting the fight but exclude mention of its name or brands.

A-B, the main fight sponsor, is contracted to run $5 million to $6 million in network and cable TV spots promoting the fight's availability as a pay-per-view event on TVKO, in return for bumpers and the ring mat bearing the

SRDS on the block

Maxwell seeks to trim $2.3 billion in debt

By Scott Donaton

British publisher Robert Maxwell is trying to sell Standard Rate & Data Service, the leading U.S. publisher of media and marketing information directories and software.

The highly profitable SRDS is part of the information services group of Macmillan, the U.S. arm of London-based Maxwell Communication Corp.

Based on financial data obtained by Advertising Age, industry observers estimate SRDS could sell for as high as $150 million to $200 million. But several potential buyers say they viewed SRDS as a maturing business with little opportunity for growth and won't make an offer.

Robert Maxwell

Macmillan President Kevin Shaffer confirmed Mr. Maxwell plans to make asset sales to cut debt but wouldn't comment on the potential sale of the ad-supported SRDS directories. SRDS Publisher Craig Burr wouldn't comment either.

Mr. Maxwell, chairman of Maxwell Communication, said at last week's annual meeting he expects to reduce the company's $2.3 billion debt load by at least $750 million by next March through asset sales. He said the company is negotiating the sale of some businesses but didn't identify them.

SRDS, circulating primarily to ad agency media buyers and planners, publishes more than 30 directories and data bases that include ad rates and circulation reports for business and consumer magazines, newspapers, TV, radio and other media.

The listings are free, but the directories carry paid ads and most have a paid circulation base. SRDS also publishes several controlled circulation publications.

Like most media outlets, SRDS has felt the sting of the recession. Ad pages are down for its leading directories, while circulation has been hurt by layoffs and buget cutbacks at agency media departments.

SRDS had revenues of $37.3 million for the fiscal year ended March 31, down 4.7% from fiscal 1990, according to a "summary fact sheet" sent to potential buyers by Bankers Trust. Cash flow for the directories for fiscal 1991 was $19.7 million, down 10%.

The company also faces a number of long-term growth hurdles. SRDS is likely to eventually offer subscribers electronic versions of all of its directories, which may make them less attractive as an ad vehicle. And the spread of media rate negotiation could render SRDS a less useful reference tool.

"It's a premier property, an institution, [but] our attitude on SRDS is it's a very mature business without a lot of upside and we're not wildly interested in it," said the president of one trade publishing company who asked not to be named.

At least two potential buyers, Cahners Publishing Co. and K-III Holdings, are believed to have decided against making offers. Neither would comment.

Other potential buyers include McGraw-Hill and Canadian publisher Maclean Hunter, publisher of similar media information directories in Canada and Europe.

Mr. Maxwell picked up SRDS as part of his $2.6 billion acquisition of Macmillan in 1988.

One source said Mr. Maxwell is also considering the sale of the smaller Macmillan Directories Business, consisting of four wholly owned subsidiaries: National Register Publishing Co., publisher of 16 directories, including the Standard Directory of Advertisers; Salesman's Guide; Gulfstream Publishing Co.; and Marquis Who's Who. □

Nabisco nibbles on candy

By Judann Dagnoli

Cookie/cracker king Nabisco has its sights on candy with the test-market launch of a new line called Little Fudgies.

Little Fudgies, chocolate-covered versions of Mini Oreo and Mini Chips Ahoy! cookies, are packaged in 1.3-ounce bags rather than Nabisco Biscuit Co.'s traditional cartons.

A Nabisco spokesman denied the line is targeted at candy consumers, but an early version of a TV spot for Fudgies used the theme "To get a great candy, get a Little Fudgie."

Nabsico wouldn't discuss the TV spot, via FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, or give specific test markets.

Sources say one test market is Pittsfield, Mass., where Nabisco is placing Fudgies displays in supermarkets' candy aisles.

With the introduction, the company that already dominates the $7 billion cookie/cracker market with a 44% share is heading into a $9.7 billion field staked out by RJR Nabisco sister company Planters LifeSavers Co.

That unit only markets gum and hard-roll candies, however; Nabisco earlier sold off its Butterfinger, Baby Ruth and other entries in the $5.2 billion chocolate candy business.

Nabisco already markets a chocolate-covered version of its standard size Oreo cookie but so far hasn't marketed chocolate-coated Chips Ahoy! or any of its mini-cookie items.

Having nearly tapped out niches in cookies, Nabisco has lately demonstrated its determination to increase market share with moves into other crossover brands. Earlier this year, the company rolled national with Mr. Phipps pretzel chips, a combination chip/pretzel.

Mr. Phipps joined an aggressive new-product lineup at Nabisco in the past few years. They include Mini Chips Ahoy!, Sprinkled Chips Ahoy!, Fat-Free Premium Crackers, Ritz Bits Sandwiches With Cheese and Ritz Bits Sandwiches With Peanut Butter in 1990, followed by My Goodness! low-fat cookies, Teddy Graham Bearwiches and Mini Oreos this year. □

Baltics aware of Western brands

By Elena Bowes

GLOBAL NEWS

Consumers in the Baltics and nearby St. Petersburg are familiar with many popular Western food and personal-care brands, according to a recent Nielsen Marketing Research report.

Rowntree Mackintosh Confectionery's After Eight chocolate mints, Nestle's Nescafe coffee, Carlsberg Brewery's Carlsberg beer, Remy Martin cognac, Philip Morris Cos.' Marlboro cigarettes and Unilever's Rexona deodorant were mentioned frequently in the report. Nielsen wouldn't release detailed information on each product's popularity.

In the study, published by Nielsen in Frankfurt and the EKI Institute in Tallinn, Estonia, 2,000 consumers were asked what brands they know, use and consider to be well-made in product groups including confectionery, coffee, liquor, baby food, cigarettes, detergent and deodorant.

The 63-page study was based on a door-to-door survey and questionnaire conducted in May.

The German-language study also gives a demographic and economic overview of Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and St. Petersburg, formerly Leningrad.

One Western marketer, Kellogg Co., is likely to make the list in the future as it plans to enter the Baltics soon.

Kellogg and Adazi, a private Latvian company, have entered into a joint venture called Kellogg Adazi Food Products and will build a plant to make Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Frosted Flakes and possibly other ready-to-eat cereals. The plant is expected to open in 1993.

The joint venture will also distribute the cereals throughout the Baltics, as well as in the republics of Russia and Byelorussia, said Dick Lovell, Kellogg communications manager. Ad plans will be developed "down the road," he said. □

At a time when independent media buying companies are hot, a few are sizzling.

SFM Media Corp. this week is expected to land a $10 million media buying assignment for J.P. Morgan & Co., capping off a $130 million new-business run this year.

The New York shop has already added Alfred Dunhill Ltd., American Isuzu Motors, James River Corp. and Matrix Essentials in 1991.

Combined with about $150 million in new business last year, SFM has nearly doubled total billings to about $600 million in just two years.

"We've had a very good couple of years," said Chairman-President Walter Staab. "But there's no question about it, this has been a tremendous period of growth for all independents."

In the past two years, more than $1 billion in media buying assignments has moved to independent media companies from full-service ad agencies.

Mr. Staab said those moves have been prompted by a trend among clients to "unbundle" agency services and consolidate media buying to maximize clout.

The principals of the independents say the growth is coming from advertisers seeking an alternative to full-service agency relationships. They say the development has been as threatening to agency/client relationships as the recent deal between Coca-Cola Co. and Hollywood talent agency Creative Artists Associates (AA, Sept. 9).

In that deal, Coca-Cola is calling on the talent agency to help develop marketing strategies that have traditionally been the province of the soft-drink marketer's ad agencies.

But ad agencies are fighting back against buying shops and, in some cases, winning.

"Our biggest competition is not other independents, it is the [ad] agencies."

Some top full-service agencies have begun pitching their media credentials independently from the rest of their services. Young & Rubicam, New York, recently pitched and won media-only assignments from 20th Century Fox Film Corp. and Perrier Group.

Starting in October, major agencies including Backer Spielvogel Bates; Bozell; DDB Needham Worldwide; Lintas:USA; J. Walter Thompson USA; Saatchi & Saatchi

The couple: Part III

By Cleveland Horton

The flirting neighbors meet again in a new network TV spot for Taster's Choice coffee, and this time he asks her for a date.

The series' third spot, which broke Sept. 15, opens at a dinner party where the female neighbor, played by Sharon Maughan, is a guest.

The dinner party is almost over when the doorbell rings. The hostess answers the door and greets the male neighbor, actor Anthony Head. He apologizes profusely to the hostess, who is his sister.

She ushers him in, noting he's just in time for coffee. The neighbors then share yet another magical moment before he asks her out.

The commercial is described as a "teaser" for the fourth episode, already shot and

Heinz marketing gets $100M boost

By Judann Dagnoli

H.J. Heinz Co. is pumping up a deflated marketing budget by $100 million for its current fiscal year in an effort to reverse volume declines and slipping earnings increases.

"This will be the year when Heinz is on the attack," said Chairman-CEO Anthony J.F. O'Reilly at Heinz's annual meeting last week. The company will "increase marketing support for our major brands, particularly in the tuna, food and weight-loss categories," he said.

Heinz's fiscal year began in May.

Mr. O'Reilly said proceeds from the sale of Hubinger Co., a corn milling operation, will be used to boost marketing spending to $550 million. Spending had fallen sharply in the first quarter of 1991, sources say.

The $100 million increase represents a 20% hike over the last fiscal year and is more than double the company's traditional 8% increase in marketing spending, said Ted Smythe, VP-corporate affairs.

The spokesman said the increase will go to advertising and consumer promotion rather than trade promotion, but Mr. O'Reilly's remarks at the annual meeting seemed to contradict that notion.

Wall Street sees problems at Heinz, led by CEO Anthony O'Reilly.

"Because two-thirds of all food buying decisions are made in the store, we stress deals, allowances and trade promotion that strengthen our presence at that critical point of sale," Mr.

N W AYER:

The past catches up with its future

By Laurel Wentz and Jon Lafayette

As merger rumors swirled around N W Ayer, its chairman was unable to explain how the agency planned to remain independent while building a strong international network.

"I'm working on it, but there's nothing I can talk about yet," he said.

No, that response didn't come from a top Ayer executive last week but from Ayer Chairman Neal O'Connor in 1971.

Twenty years later, current Ayer Chairman Jerry Siano still faces essentially the same Catch-22: The agency has no major client that wants to employ the small Ayer international network around the world, and agencies don't want to tie into the Ayer network because it has no global business to offer.

Mr. Siano has said Ayer wants to strengthen its European network but isn't willing to relinquish control of the agency or go public. He's expected to clarify his strategy this week.

Ayer, one of the U.S.' oldest ad agencies, was actually one of the first to expand abroad, opening in the U.K. and Latin America to service Ford Motor Co. during the '30s. But Ayer lost the Ford account to J. Walter Thompson Co., and World War II diminished Ayer's interest in foreign affairs.

"Management didn't have the vision, and we didn't have an account to push it," one former senior Ayer executive recalled.

Ayer didn't start looking abroad again until the late '60s, long after rivals JWT and McCann-Erickson Worldwide were well-established globetrotters, and its efforts since then have been marked by fits and starts.

In 1967, Ayer bought a London agency, Alexander Butterfield, but sold most of its interest in the shop in 1971 to Pemberton Group, which agreed to represent Ayer in the U.K. Tom Maxey, now Ayer's vice chairman, was made VP-international operations and sent to London to work with Pemberton.

In 1974, Ayer entered a unique three-way joint venture with Charles Barker & Sons, London, and Werbeagentur Dr. Hegemann, Duesseldorf, and changed the name of the network to N W Ayer ABH.

The joint venture picked up a number of affiliates, then took off when Ayer landed the $30 million Pan American World Airways account in 1978. Before long, the Ayer network, including some 28 agencies, closed in on agencies such as

Consumers question marketers' commitment

By Judann Dagnoli

An overwhelming majority of consumers say they base purchasing decisions on the environmental friendliness of products and companies, but few think big business is doing its part to save the Earth.

Those are some of the findings of the third annual Nationwide Environmental Survey conducted for Gerstman & Meyers, a packaging company.

The study found 83% of respondents said they prefer buying environmentally safe products, up from 82% last year. Sixty-one percent claimed they have passed up products within the past year due to environmental concerns, up from 56% a year ago.

Another 79% said they consider a company's environmental reputation when buying, the same response rate as a year ago.

But apparently consumers don't have much faith in marketers' current environmental track records. While almost three-fourths of respondents (72%) rated environmental labeling on consumer products as important, only 15% found current environmental packaging claims "extremely or very believable."

Price is now playing more of a role in environmental buying decisions. While most consumers said they would pay more for environmentally safe packaging, the 1991 survey found more price resistance than previously.

This year, 37% of respondents said they would pay 15% more for an environmentally safe package, a significant decrease from 1990, when 47% expressed a willingness to pay 15% more.

As in last year's survey, consumers demonstrated confusion about which products are kind to the Earth.

A full 69% of respondents said they believe plastic packaging contributes most to the solid waste problem, up from 60% a year earlier, but industry officials say that belief is flawed.

Despite the concern about plastic, however, 65% of respondents said they prefer using plastic ketchup bottles (up from 56% last year), and another 61% said they buy milk in plastic containers (up from 56%). While 70% of respondents said they don't buy carbonated beverages packaged in plastic, that figure is lower than last year's 75%.

In other specific product categories, 52% rated toothpaste in a pump as extremely or very harmful to the environment and 51% said frozen entrees in microwaveable dishes are very harmful. Perceived more "friendly" are breakfast cereals in cardboard boxes, rated extremely or very harmful by only 6%; juice in a milk-type carton (13%); and soda in an aluminum can (14%).

Overall, 91% of consumers rate marketers the least concerned about the environment, more so than the U.S. government (86%) and the public (85%).

"Consumers are clearly concerned about the solid waste problem and want to be part of the solution, but they need to see business and government taking action," said Jonathan Asher, Gerstman VP-director of marketing services.

"The fact that 91% of those polled feel that business is not concerned enough about the environment should convince corporate America that it is time to do something," he said.

The survey, conducted in person last June, included 318 female heads of household ages 21 to 59 responsible for household grocery shopping, and was conducted by Joel Benson Associates. Those surveyed live in Ridgewood, N.J.; Dallas; Detroit; San Francisco; Seattle; and Erie, Pa. The margin of error is plus or minus 5%. □

While Your Competition Is Spending Millions Raising Awareness, Changing Perception And Altering Attitudes, You Could Be Making A Sale.

Certainly, you want everyone to know your product exists. You want them to know so eventually they'll buy. That's the point of advertising in the first place. But all the image campaigns in the world won't do you any good if you can't make a sale.

That's where newspaper comes in. It can deliver something no other medium can. A receptive audience. An audience that's already predisposed to buy. And buy they do. In record breaking numbers.

In fact, research shows newspaper readers to be the heaviest purchasers of everything from travel to appliances, cars to investment advice. And of those who made unplanned purchases (in other words, went on crazy, wild, spur-of-the-moment spending sprees), 60% cited newspapers as the number one reason why. That's right. Newspaper's the culprit. Now isn't that the kind of clout you'd like your advertising dollars to buy?

Milk-Bone bites Purina

EAST HANOVER, N.J.—Nabisco Foods Co.'s Milk-Bone dog biscuits is taking an amusingly biting jab at Ralston Purina Co.'s Purina Biscuits in a new network TV commercial that broke last week.

Created by FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, the commercial shows a dog asking his unseen master why he's being fed those "new biscuits," adding, "Don't you love me anymore?" The spot states Milk-Bone has half the fat of Purina Biscuits, ending with the dog saying, "Please give me back my Milk-Bone."

Purina last year ran a commercial saying, "If it isn't Purina, bury it in the yard." Martin Marshall Jaccoma Mitchell, New York, handles Purina. □

MEDIA MIX

News briefs on print, electronic and alternative media.

Connoisseur chases consumers. Hearst Magazines is backing its June redesign of Connoisseur with a massive circulation-building campaign. The monthly hopes to expand its rate base 56.3%, to 500,000 from 320,000, in two years, said Publisher Carol Ference. The magazine this month breaks a $2 million outdoor, transit and radio campaign in Los Angeles and New York, themed "Art and culture, inside out" and created by the MacDougall Co., New York, and Marc Balet, Connoisseur creative director. A 2 million-piece direct mail effort is slated for December, following a similar push in July, and newsstands will carry more copies in more visible displays.

Video ventures in store. Actmedia, Norwalk, Conn., and Klever Kart, Salt Lake City, are developing a video screen for shopping carts similar to Information Resources Inc.'s VideoCart system. The screen will carry pricing information, ads and promotional messages; initial testing is scheduled for early 1992. Separately, Actmedia Canada, Mississauga, Ontario, has purchased Retail Resource Group, a Toronto-based in-store promotion and sales merchandising company.

Lifetime catches Orion's stars. Lifetime Television bought exclusive cable TV rights to 39 films from Orion Television Entertainment, a division of Orion Pictures Corp. Thirteen films—including "Mermaids," "Dances With Wolves," "Alice" and "Silence of the Lambs"—will run on Lifetime before syndication. The other 26 have been in syndication. All the films will make their basic cable TV debut on Lifetime, starting in October 1993.

Snow job. The New York Times Co. Magazine Group unveils a redesign of Snow Country with the October issue. The revised cover and pages will allow larger photos and splashier graphics for the eight-times-a-year title. Snow Country's September issue was its largest ever for the month, with 89.1 ad pages, up 18.7% from a year before.

Shoppers count in Wal-Mart. Wal-Mart Stores is installing Shoppers Calculator, solar calculators attached to shopping carts and carrying ads. ADDvantage Media Group, Tulsa, Okla., plans to install the device in all Wal-Mart stores and selected Acme and Kroger supermarkets; other chains featuring the calculator include Shop-Rite, Publix, Dierbergs and Homeland supermarkets. ADDvantage sells ad space.

Snow Country's* October issue is the first under its redesign.

Branching out. Lear Publishing, publisher of Lear's, will launch Connection, a monthly, themed newsletter making its debut as a 12-page supplement to the November issue of Lear's. Charter subscriptions cost $48 per year. The newsletter will focus on themes such as money, style and business, and initially won't carry ads.

Pump up the volume. Radio ad sales improved in July, posting a 3.1% gain over July 1990, the Radio Advertising Bureau reported. Using an index of stations in 100-plus markets, the bureau found local revenues rose 3.5% and national spending was up only 0.1%. The July performance is an improvement over year-to-date spending, down 3.1% through July.

PBS goes to school. The Public Broadcasting Service has joined Cable in the Classroom, a nonprofit consortium of 43 cable operators and 20 cable networks supplying commercial-free programming to 18,000 junior and senior high schools. Members include Tele-Communications Inc., Cable News Network, the Discovery Channel and the Family Channel; all pay membership fees. □

Stations reduce research

NEW YORK—The trend among TV stations to choose a single ratings service presents problems for agencies—and for the ratings services.

Nielsen Media Research last month shut down its local metered market ratings service in Detroit and reverted to a diary-based service. It was the first time ever that Nielsen shut down a metered market service.

Nielsen cited economics for the switch. Only one commercial TV station was subscribing to the metered service.

"Agencies are not happy about it," said Joanne Milano, VP-media research director of Lowe & Partners. Nielsen "took a step backward, because meters are a superior way of measuring ratings."

While Nielsen plans to introduce other metered markets soon, the rapidly changing economics of local ratings are becoming all too clear, Ms. Milano said.

A Lowe study found the number of stations subscribing to both Nielsen's and Arbitron's ratings services this year is 347, down 27% from 1989. Nielsen added 85 stations during that period, and carries 414; Arbitron added 51 stations and carries 196.

According to an Arbitron survey of the top 50 ad agencies, 21 use Nielsen 100% of the time and 10 use Arbitron 100% of the time, with the balance using both services to varying degrees.

In 1990, 53% of commercial stations were single service, up from 24% in 1985, Arbitron reported. □

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL GROUP

Ad ratio gains posted for '91

LINCOLNSHIRE, Ill.—Despite the economic downturn, several industries this year are significantly increasing ad expenditures as a percentage of sales, a study by Schonfeld & Associates found.

Schonfeld sees double-digit percentage increase in ad-to-sales ratios for 11 business sectors.

They are: air courier services (11.7%); bakery products (17.8%); cable and pay TV services (17.7%); dairy products (22.9%); hospital and medical service plans (13.3%); household audio and video equipment (14%); motion picture and videotape distributors (24.8%); periodical publishing and printing companies (22.4%); phonograph records, audiotapes and discs (23.4%); pre-packaged software (16.2%); and videotape rentals (29.8%).

The research is based primarily on 10-K reports filed by publicly held companies, grouped by industries based on four-digit Standard Industry Classification codes. In the 10-K reports listing "advertising" expenditures, companies may include promotion spending as well.

Industries to watch in 1992 include airlines and hotels, where ad spending growth is expected to be only 5% and 6%, respectively.

Besides ad-to-sales ratios, the annual report forecasts 1992 ad spending for more than 5,700 companies, using historical data.

The new study also includes sales growth rates as well as advertising growth rates by company.

Industries to watch in 1992, Schonfeld said, include airlines and hotels, where ad spending growth is expected to be only 5% and 6%, respectively, less than in past years.

This moderation undoubtedly reflects the recent pressure on travel revenues and profits due to the Persian Gulf War.

Health service providers will continue double-digit growth rates in 1992, Schonfeld predicted.

Some service chains now have budgets of more than $25 million and growth rates above 15%. Outpatient service companies still have small ad budgets but show growth above 20%.

In the packaged computer software industry, ad growth will be 16.2% next year, faster than the 7% to 13% growth rates of computer hardware makers, the report found.

Despite industry turmoil, department store chains will spend $4.8 billion, Schonfeld reported. Variety store chains will show stronger ad growth of 8.9%, increasing spending to $3 billion.

Copies of the 203-page study are available for $295 from Schonfeld & Associates, 1 Sherwood Drive, 60069. Phone: (708) 948-8080. □

Specialty shops spice up sales for pet foods

By John C. Maxwell Jr.

Pet food sales through specialty outlets and veterinarians grew 10% to nearly $1.1 billion last year, outpacing other outlets' gain of 2.8% to $6.4 billion.

That put industrywide sales at $7.5 billion, up about 4% from 1989.

MAXWELL REPORT

Dollar sales gains should continue to outpace volume growth as companies aggressively "trend up" product lines. Unit growth through grocery store channels was down 1% to 2%, with volume gains coming from non-grocery outlets such as discount stores, pet shops and feed stores at the expense of supermarkets.

It's estimated pet food sales through non-grocery outlets now account for 20% of total industry sales and will keep growing. But near-term gains by non-grocery outlets will be blunted by aggressive introduction of nutritional/prescriptive new products by grocery-oriented marketers.

Such products will get trial because of large ad budgets and prices lower than pet store and veterinary products.

Hill's Pet Products and Iams Co. dominate the specialty segment of the market, with Hill's estimated at $575 million in retail sales in 1990 and Iams at an estimated $275 million.

Product introductions reportedly hit a high last year. And discounting was in abundance as marketers such as Alpo Petfoods and Kal Kan Pet Care tried to gain market share during limited volume growth.

Looking at share performance, Ralston Purina Co.'s decline continued, falling 1.2 points from 1989, but it was still a strong leader with a 25.8% market share.

Nestle's Friskies PetCare Products, in the No. 2 position, was flat at 14%. Mars Inc.'s Kal Kan, primarily due to the success of its Pedigree dog food line, moved ahead of Heinz, going to 12.5% from 11.7%.

It's estimated pet food sales through non-grocery outlets now account for 20% of total industry sales and will keep growing.

Heinz Pet Products dropped slightly to 11.6% from 12%, and Grand Metropolitan's Alpo moved ahead 1.8 points to 9.4%, aided by the successful rollout of the Garfield cat food line.

Quaker Oats Co.'s share fell to 8.4% from 10.9% of the market as a result of weak sales of its moist and soft-dry dog food products. □

Ingersoll seeks European boost

By Elena Bowes

LONDON—Ralph Ingersoll, the U.S. publisher who owns U.K. and Irish newspapers through Ingersoll Publications, is talking with European publishing groups and U.K. financial institutions about recapitalization.

Mr. Ingersoll, who bought the Birmingham Post & Mail Group and Coventry Evening Telegraph in 1987 for about $100 million, said he'd like to sell a significant minority share of the Birmingham company by yearend but wouldn't name potential candidates. He said he'd like to raise $68 million through recapitalization.

Mr. Ingersoll said he'd like to use at least part of the money to invest in European titles, especially in the German-language sector.

He denied reports he's negotiating to sell the entire regional newspaper group.

The group includes the Birmingham Post, Evening Mail, Sunday Mercury, Coventry Evening Telegraph and 50% of the Irish Press Newspapers chain.

Six financial and editorial executives from the regional group approached Mr. Ingersoll about a management buyout but he said he isn't interested.

Mr. Ingersoll came to the U.K. to run the papers as part of an agreement that removed him as head of Ingersoll Publications' U.S. papers in July 1990, following the failure of his St. Louis Sun and the company's financial problems. The U.S. company, which has gone through its own restructuring, has since been renamed the Journal Co. □

Turner forges multimedia packages

By Alison Fahey

Turner Broadcasting System is aggressively pitching media packages that combine cable TV, home video and book publishing.

"Turner Broadcasting really does have the ability now to offer mini-media packages," said Terry Cunningham, VP-sales promotion at Turner Broadcasting Sales, the unit that oversees corporate ad sales.

Created in July 1986, Turner Home Entertainment distributes and markets home videos and has access to more than 1,400 movie titles. Turner Publishing, formed in November 1989, develops and markets books related to news and entertainment programming on Turner's four cable networks: Cable News Network, Headline News, TBS and Turner Network Television.

Turner has crafted some multimedia packages before, but the strategy has become a part of the company's "corporate philosophy" since the home video and book publishing divisions have grown, Mr. Cunningham said.

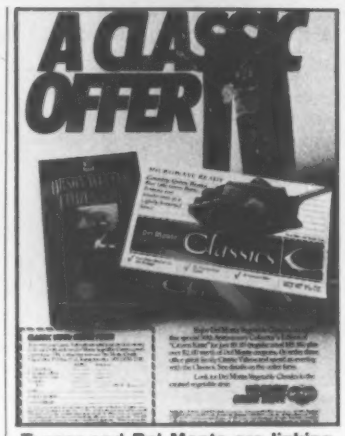
Such packages allow marketers to sponsor the release of a videocassette and be part of a supporting promotion. Turner would back the promotion with spots mentioning the sponsor on its cable networks.

The marketer could also be mentioned in a Turner-published book related to the movie and run its own commercials on some or all of Turner's cable networks.

"We have 17 [sponsorship] opportunities for 1992 that involve our home video and/or our publishing division," said Lou LaTorre, exec VP-sales, Turner Entertainment Networks, the unit that houses TNT and TBS, Turner's entertainment cable networks.

Turner recently sold one new multimedia sponsorship package to Del Monte Foods. It ties Del Monte's Vegetable Classics brand to a 50th anniversary edition home video of "Citizen Kane."

As part of the deal, a Del Monte commercial airs at the start of the videocassette, and the company is being mentioned in 15- and 30-second on-air promo spots on Turner networks.



Turner and Del Monte are linking up in a classic promotion.

The promotional spots broke late last month and tell consumers to look for a special offer in retail video stores and in national free standing inserts.

The first FSI, headlined "A classic offer," ran Sept. 8 and offers consumers a special deal on "Citizen Kane" and three other videos from Turner with proofs-of-purchase from Del Monte Vegetable Classics.

Del Monte will support the promotion, running through yearend, with additional FSIs and in-store ads.

Del Monte has allocated its entire cable budget for the next two quarters to Turner networks, Mr. Cunningham said, but declined to release specific dollar amounts.

McCann-Erickson Worldwide, San Francisco, is Del Monte's agency and helped develop the media and promotional package.

Turner is shopping another package called "Save the Earth," centered on special environmental programming blocks set to be telecast on TBS next February and May.

Sponsoring marketers would get tagged on promo spots and could tie into a related video and book to be published in more than 120 countries.

Another sponsorship deal involves the video release marking the 50th anniversary of "Casablanca," scheduled for second quarter 1992, where advertisers could hook up with the video and a related book.

Turner has presented proposals to Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York, and the agency is evaluating the packages for its clients, said Betsy Frank, Saatchi's senior VP-director of TV information and new media.

Saatchi buys TV time for such clients as Procter & Gamble Co., a leading cable TV spender.

Eventually, the packages will include Turner's newer, place-based media ventures, such as Checkout Channel and Airport Channel.

Checkout Channel is a TV medium situated at supermarket checkout lanes; Airport Channel is a similar network located in airport departure terminals. Both services are in test.

Turner is also discussing the creation of customized media packages with several publishing companies.

"You're going to see a lot more cross-promotional opportunities for marketers, specifically by tying in with publications," Mr. Cunningham said. □

Buyers

Advertising, and Y&R will start pitching media services alongside those of the major independent buyers through the Media Service Register, a new venture of the Advertising Agency Register.

Those agencies and others have produced slick presentation tapes of their media credentials that AAR will send to 3,000 clients.

"Our biggest competition is not other independents, it is the [ad] agencies," Mr. Staab said.

Since agencies must maintain fully staffed media departments, their costs are fixed and any new media billings are incremental, he said. As a result, agencies can often "outbid" independents on commission rates because their margins are better, he said.

Still, independents are increasing billings at a faster rate than full-service agencies.

No. 1 independent Western International Media, Los Angeles, recently has picked up buying assignments from Bally Manufacturing Co. and Vons Cos. It was also instrumental in helping Walt Disney Co. place $100 million with Carat Espace, Paris.

SFM appears to be narrowing the gap. While Western International claims billings of nearly $1 billion, industry executives say it's actually about $700 million.

Moreover, the majority of Western International's billings comes from buying media for small ad agencies that don't maintain their own buying departments.

SFM, on the other hand, primarily handles advertisers' national accounts directly. □

Kroger Atlanta splits account 4 ways

ATLANTA—The full-service ad agency concept took a hit last week when the regional Kroger Food Stores account was split among several small boutiques.

Finalists at various points in the competition to succeed former national agency Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Chicago, included Austin Kelley Advertising, Fitzgerald & Co., McCann-Erickson Worldwide, J. Walter Thompson USA and Ross Roy Inc., all here, plus W.B. Doner & Co., Baltimore.

But creative responsibility for the account, with an estimated $8 million to $10 million in annual spending for TV and radio, was given to Creative Consultants, a two-person creative boutique. Media planning and buying was assigned to Massotti's Media Services, and Metier Marketing was assigned strategic planning, communication development and research. Phelan & Lowry was hired for special promotions and community and employee relations programs.

Kroger had asked finalists to present a "menu" of their services, from which the retailer said it would pick and choose services. Austin Kelley, Doner and Fitzgerald withdrew from the competition at that point, a Kroger source said. JWT also withdrew, but because its Los Angeles office was pursuing the Safeway Stores account.

"None of the [big] agencies really got the gist of what was asked of them," this source said. "They were asked for a portfolio of services and were told, 'You'll be paid well for your services, but you won't be paid on a traditional percentage basis for anything.' "

The Kroger Atlanta account, one of the chain's largest, is the fourth region lost by CME since the supermarket decided to decentralize its broadcast advertising function this summer. The national account was valued at $22 million.

Kroger regions in Indianapolis; Nashville, Tenn.; and Roanoke, Va., have retained CME.

CME is still a finalist in the Columbus, Ohio, region's review, but not in Memphis, Tenn.; no decision has been made by the Detroit or Louisville, Ky., regions. □

McCann, then represented in 46 countries.

But when Ayer lost Pan Am to Doyle Dane Bernbach in 1981, 20 associate agencies left the network.

Ayer later that year won the $10 million Deere & Co. account in Europe, Africa and the Middle East, and Chairman Louis Hagopian spoke of plans to spend heavily to rebuild by buying majority stakes in its overseas agencies.

But it was already too late.

Ayer was dropped by Nestle, one of the first big clients to align its agencies internationally. It lost a shoot-out for the $40 million Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. account to JWT, and potential global business from clients AT&T Co. and Gillette Co. never developed. Today, Ayer handles Procter & Gamble Co. business, but only in the U.S.

Throughout the '80s, many independent agencies sold themselves to gain international networks. Ayer nearly merged with D'Arcy MacManus Masius in 1985, but Benton & Bowles beat it to the altar.

So despite having spent millions, Ayer appears to have been left behind, with minimal presence in Asia and Latin America. Its European network ranks in the top 10 shops only in Spain.

The U.K. in particular is a problem, because it's often the focus of pan-European assignments.

In London, Ayer has been sliding from No. 36 in 1988 to No. 43 in 1990 with billings of $60 million, putting it behind all other U.S. agencies in London except relative newcomers Bozell and Chiat/Day/Mojo.

Ayer has been tinkering with the London agency for several years and has been looking for an acquisition to beef it up.

But other agencies have already found solutions to similar problems in the past few years.

Lintas:Worldwide and BBDO Worldwide, among others, have found themselves with such feeble London agencies that they couldn't hold onto international business or win local clients in the U.K.

Both bought into excellent local agencies and are now thriving as Still Price:Lintas and Abbott Mead Vickers/BBDO.

Similarly, TBWA Holmes Knight Ritchie and BMP DDB Needham are far stronger agencies than TBWA and DDB Needham Worldwide used to be in the U.K.

To find a solution, Dick Hedger, 53, was hired earlier this year as chairman-ceo of Ayer Europe.

The former Saatchi & Saatchi executive is energetically pursuing his job, but it's unclear whether he's looking to buy more agencies, sell existing ones or merely foster an Ayer network spirit in Europe.

Recently, several Ayer executives in Europe have mentioned the possibility of a European management buyback, among other options, though others have denied they've heard the idea.

Last week, executives for Wilkens Ayer, Hamburg, were unavailable to elaborate on any buyout proposals.

Mr. Hedger is on the road so much even his secretary isn't sure where he's off to next.

"He was in two places in Germany yesterday and he's in Holland today," she said. "Then he's going . . . uh . . . somewhere else."

One London agency executive said he might be interested in having talks with Ayer, except that he couldn't reach Mr. Hedger.

Mr. Hedger didn't return phone calls last week. In an interview in May in New York, shortly after starting his new job, he said: "Ayer bought a number of good agencies. Still, the agencies that Ayer bought are not really Ayer."

He said his first objective is to make them "really Ayer." And "not to take away the good things" the agencies do.

Eight of Ayer's 15 agencies in Europe are affiliates in which Ayer has no equity. Ayer has a minority stake in France and Portugal and owns a majority in Spain, Italy and Germany. The U.K. shop is the only agency in Europe Ayer owns 100%.

Despite sharing some accounts, the agencies don't really operate as a network, so Mr. Hedger sees his job "to consolidate as a network."

The reputation of Ayer—which is No. 19 among the top 20 European agency networks when ranked by gross income by equity—"is not bad," he said. "It's just not strong. It's not top of mind."

Outside London, there are bright spots: Ayer owns a majority in one of Spain's best agencies, TAPSA/N W Ayer, and is also a majority shareholder in creative, fast growing shops in Italy and Germany.

Of Ayer's few pan-European clients, Spanish automaker SEAT and Iberia Air Lines of Spain are there largely because of Ayer's strong Spanish agency.

And Wilkens Ayer in Germany brought in the Beiersdorf business, now held in six European countries and Mexico.

Fernando Ocana, chairman of TAPSA/N W Ayer, Madrid, said Mr. Siano is always open to ways of improving the European network.

"Ayer has never been 100% multinational owned, it's always had local participation," he said. "Ayer and Jerry Siano have always wanted their key people to participate more and more, in Europe and globally."

In the Asia/Pacific region, Ayer's sale of its New Zealand agency this summer completed a withdrawal that started in 1989 when the U.S. agency sold back its 49% stake in Connaghan & May Ayer, Sydney, to local management.

"Ayer's lack of global business at this end of the world determined our decision to sell," Pip Muir, former ceo of Ayer New Zealand, Auckland, said in July when Ayer sold its New Zealand operation to Walkers Advertising.

Contacted in New York last week, Ms. Muir, who's exploring future opportunities at Ayer, said: "From Ayer's point of view, it was not a competitive network [in the Asia/Pacific region]. It was a good time to sell. We had created an excellent, high creative profile." □

Holiday shoppers to go downscale

Economy dulls sparkle of upscale gifts

An Advertising Age roundup

It's beginning to look a lot like a lean Christmas.

Downscale is in, along with mass merchandisers, warehouse clubs and outlet stores, retail insiders say.

Out are high-end designer names, department stores like Neiman Marcus Co. and Saks Fifth Avenue, and upscale specialty retailers like Sharper Image Corp., Williams-Sonoma and Hammacher, Schlemmer & Co.

HOLIDAY MARKETING

"Stores like Kmart, Radio Shack and warehouse bed and bath shops will be filled this holiday season, but people are going to eschew pricey items and expensive labels," said Kurt Barnard, publisher of Retail Marketing Report. "This is the kind of Christmas where people stay home and make things rather than eating out and dressing up."

Consumer confidence remains extremely low due to the recession, and though economists predict a gradual improvement, no immediate economic upturn is expected.

In a national survey conducted last month by Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, 40% said they expect to spend less on gift-giving this year than they did last year, while 30% expect to spend more and 30% expect to spend the same. That's a gloomier forecast than the August 1990 survey, when 34% expected to spend less. The survey was conducted among a national sample of households, with 450 people participat-

Fight looms over TV clutter

Agencies say CBS move voids upfront deals

By Joe Mandese

Major ad agencies are on the warpath against the rise in commercial clutter on network TV and are threatening to renegotiate their upfront buys.

Setting off their wrath was CBS, which recently approached agency media executives about its plan to redistribute the number of prime-time commercials it airs.

The network said it plans to keep its overall prime-time commercial load the same but would move units into higher-price, hourlong shows like "60 Minutes" from lower-price, hourlong programs like "Rescue: 911."

Agency executives say if CBS proceeds with its plan, they want to renegotiate their upfront deals.

"We don't think it's acceptable to do after we've made our deals," said Richard Kostyra, New York-based exec VP-director of media services at J. Walter Thompson USA. "I would expect that advertisers who bought into a program thinking there was going to be 7 commercial minutes [and] suddenly find out there are 8 are due some form of compensation."

While CBS has openly approached agencies about its plans, ABC and NBC began adding commercial time during the mid-1980s without telling the ad community.

Through the first six months of 1991, the number of commercials airing weekly on the Big 3 networks increased 0.4% to 6,342, compared with the same period in 1990, ac-

No more 'monsters'

Volvo carefully documents new advertising

By Raymond Serafin

In its first campaign since the "monster truck" ad scandal, Volvo will again use dramatic demonstrations to illustrate safety. But this time, video cameras and still photographs documented that there was no foul play.

The first major image work for Volvo from Messner Vetere Berger Carey Schmetterer, New York, is said to feature a spot for the new Volvo 960 sedan in which the passenger compartment stays intact after the car is hit from behind during a rainstorm and crashes head-on into a wall.

Officials at Volvo Cars of North America and the agency wouldn't talk about the campaign until after dealer previews Oct. 4 to 6; ads break Oct. 7.

A source familiar with the production of the crash commercial said Volvo and

"The production company and the agency made it clear that we shouldn't modify the car in any way."

Messner Vetere took stringent on-set precautions to guard against a repeat of what happened a year ago, when the roof of a Volvo car was reinforced before an oversize

Chevy trucks trade 'Heartbeat' for 'Rock'

WARREN, Mich.—Chevrolet will drop its "Heartbeat of America" music in 1992 model-year truck ads, replacing it with the Bob Seger song "Like a Rock," said sources familiar with the campaign. The campaign, to be unveiled this week, is said to focus on the emotional bond between drivers and their trucks. Lintas:Campbell-Ewald handles.

Warner readies retail stores

BURBANK, Calif.—Warner Bros. will open four Warner Bros. Studio stores, similar to the Disney Store retail units, by Nov. 1 in Los Angeles; Schaumburg, Ill.; Danbury, Conn.; and Fairfax, Va. At 6,000 to 8,000 square feet, the stores will be about twice the size of the average Disney store. Newspaper, radio and outdoor ads, created in-house, support.

Ciba-Geigy mulls media buying setup

NEW YORK—Ciba-Geigy Pharmaceuticals has begun a review of independent media buying services, and that could lead to a consolidation of assignments, buying sources said. The company spent an estimated $38 million on media in 1990, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service. Both a corporate spokesman and a spokesman for

Ad slide dogs titles

Few magazines make page gains in August

By Scott Donaton

Magazine publishers have a whole new definition for the dog days of summer.

Magazine ad pages fell 10.2% to 10,263.6 in August from a year earlier, Publishers Information Bureau reported. For the first eight months, pages totaled 96,034.9, down 10.3%—a staggering 11,064.5 pages—from the same period in 1990.

Among the top 10 magazine ad categories, only computers and office equipment posted gains in both pages and revenues after eight months (see chart). Nine categories were down in pages while eight fell in revenue.

The severity of the ad page drought showed in the weak August performances of several titles. Metropolitan Home saw pages fall 49.6% to 45.7 for the month; it posted a year-to-date decline of 29.6%. Architectural Digest's 116.5 pages for August were down 46.8% (down 31.8% for January-August). Esquire's August pages were down 40.7% to 53.2 (down 34.3% for the year). European Travel & Life, with 21 pages, was off 37.8% for August and 15% for the year. And Reader's Digest fell 35.4% to 41.9 pages for August; it was down 19.7% for the year.

MEDIA WORKS

Conversely, Penthouse continued to show solid gains with August pages up 70% to 63.1. Decorating Remodeling was up 64.5% with 54 pages, and Soap Opera Digest was up 39.4% with 26.2 pages. Year-to-date gains were 18.4%, 3.5% and 6%, respectively.

In the national Sunday magazine category, Parade carried 477.5 ad pages through August, an increase of 7.3%. USA Weekend's 422.4 pages for the period were down a slight 0.5%.

Local Sunday magazines didn't fare as well. The New York Times Magazine pages dipped 26.2% to 1,652.3 through August; the Los Angeles Times' Sunday magazine was down 5.5% with 555 pages.

Although Bride's became the first magazine of the year to top the 2,000-page mark, its 2,220.1 ad pages were down 5.7% from the year before. Second-ranked Business Week's 1,930.6 pages were down 22.8%. Modern Bride was a close third with 1,927.8 pages, an increase of 1.9%.

The remainder of the top 10—People, Forbes, Fortune, Vogue, The Economist, TV Guide and Sports Illustrated—all suffered double-digit declines.

Modern Bride was one of just two top 20 titles with an increase in ad pages through August. The other was No. 15 Golf World, up 0.3% with 1,141.4 pages.

Many titles published by Family Media, which shut down last month, may disappear from the PIB list after the August report. 1,001 Home Ideas saw pages drop 25.2% to 338.2 for the first eight months; Golf Illustrated's 362 pages were down 12.5%; Health, whose subscription list was recently bought by rival In Health, was up 8.6% with 275 ad pages; HomeOwner was up 11.4% with 184.8 pages; and World Tennis had 289.6 pages, up 0.6%.

Discover, recently bought by Walt Disney Co. and resuming publication with the November issue, was off 14.3% through August with 227.3 pages. □

MEDIA MIX

News briefs on print, electronic and alternative media.

Letter from the editor. Conde Nast Traveler in its October issue —which includes the results of its "readers' choice" survey—invites readers to join a new "Reader Advisory Panel." The magazine will survey the panel on various lifestyle and travel-related issues on behalf of advertisers, which can use the information to better tailor their marketing efforts, said Publisher Thomas Florio. "It's really putting the reader and the advertiser together to talk to each other," he said. The monthly expects 5,000 to 10,000 readers to join the panel, which the editorial staff also will poll.

ABC-TV tunes in radio promos. In an effort to reach more finely targeted audiences than traditional network TV fall promotion strategies, ABC this month is using local radio promotions to back three new series: "Home Improvement," "Sibs" and "Good & Evil." Tie-ins with local radio stations and some advertisers in eight markets are customized to each show. For example, KEGL-FM, Dallas, and Elliot's True Value hardware store are sponsoring a "Handy Man Hero" contest promoting "Home Improvement." The radio listener who calls in the worst home repair horror story wins a $1,000 shopping spree at Elliot's.

Vote of unconfidence. Political ad spending on TV is projected to total $230 million in 1992, up only 0.9% from 1988, the Television Bureau of Advertising reported. "While we expect record spending by political candidates next year, it will hardly be a windfall for broadcasters, especially in the context of the current depressed media economy," said bureau President Jim Joyella. TvB projects $200 million in spot and local spending, up 5.8%, and $30 million in network spending, down 23%.

Separately, TvB estimates total U.S. TV ad spending will rise 4% to 6% in 1992, up from a projected $27.7 billion for 1991. Network TV is expected to grow 4% to 6%; spot and local TV, 3% to 5% each; syndication 7% to 9%; and cable TV 8% to 10%.

Hachette job. Hachette Magazines is redesigning the 24 service-oriented titles of its Woman's Day Special Interest Publications. The first of the remodeled publications, Home Decorating Ideas, appeared on newsstands Aug. 27.

CNN and Tass hit the books. Turner Broadcasting System's Cable News Network and Tass, the Soviet news agency, have reached an agreement to publish a book of photos and text about the recent coup attempt in the Soviet Union. The book is tentatively titled "Three Days That Shook the World: The Collapse of Communism in the Soviet Union" and will be produced by Turner Publishing, a division of Turner Broadcasting System. □

All-new Camry gets $120M in ads

By Cleveland Horton

Toyota is laying the groundwork for an all-out war against Honda.

Toyota Motor Sales USA has put $120 million in advertising behind its all-new Camry, a midsize sedan that competes directly with American Honda Motor Co.'s Accord.

While the Camry is already Toyota's volume leader, the Accord is the best-selling car in the U.S.

Toyota's attack started subtly last week with a few print ads and TV spots, but for the next three weeks all Toyota spots will be devoted exclusively to the Camry.

Fully 40% of Toyota's estimated $300 million-plus overall ad budget will be devoted to the Camry, said Ren Rooney, corporate marketing manager. Overall ad spending will remain "about the same" as this year, but Camry spending will jump up 77%, he said.

At that level, the Camry campaign will rival total ad spending on Honda cars (excluding the upscale Acura division).

Honda is expected to spend heavily on two redesigned models —the Civic and Prelude—but it may have to reallocate its budget to defend Accord's turf.

Some observers are surprised by Toyota's direct competition with Honda.

"This is the first time a Japanese company has publicly stated it is taking on another Japanese company," said John Rettie, editorial director at J.D. Power & Associates.

Toyota isn't alone in singling out the Accord. Ford Motor Co. is committing $100 million-plus to advertising for its newly redesigned Ford Taurus and Mercury Sable. Taurus was the top-selling car before Accord jumped to No. 1 two years ago.

The Camry still has quite a way to go before claiming the best-seller bragging rights. Honda sold 410,561 Accords in 1990; Taurus ranked No. 2 with 313,274; Camry was fifth with 284,595. Toyota's goal is to sell 300,000 Camrys in 1992.

The Camry campaign is a distinct departure from Toyota's traditional advertising, positioning the car as star rather than people.

One of four announcement spots shows a number of narrow mirrors rising into the picture, eventually revealing a full side view of the Camry. The voice-over notes how a car often reflects the values of the owner.

The announcement spots will be followed by four commercials concentrating on specific aspects of the new car.

The special effects-laden commecials feature longtime Toyota announcer actor Martin Sheen and push four aspects of the sedan: increased interior space, added safety, reduced interior noise and added power.

All the Camry ads, including print executions, carry a new theme line: "We just couldn't leave well enough alone."

The 2-year-old tagline "I love what you do for me" is in the ads but isn't spoken in the TV spots.

Saatchi & Saatchi DFS/Pacific, Torrance, Calif., handles the account.

One Camry spot features Toyota's Georgetown, Ky., plant, where Camrys are assembled. The "made in America" theme may make it more appropriate for the spot markets in the Midwest, where the domestic car companies dominate, as opposed to the coasts.

Some observers believe Toyota needs to focus more attention on individual models rather than relying on the company's reputation for building reliable cars.

"Toyota itself is such a strong brand that in some cases it overshadows individual models," said Chris Cedergren, senior VP at Auto Pacific Group, a consultancy.

Apart from the Camry ads, Toyota has a bank of 20 commercials for its other models, each featuring people interacting with their cars. □

Clutter

cording to the Television Bureau of Advertising.

The increase is significant because the number of 15-second spots airing weekly during the period dropped 7.4%. That indicates the increased volume wasn't because more shorter-length spots were being sold but because there was more commercial time.

Network sources say NBC started increasing the number of commercials around 1986 when it began adding units to the hit prime-time series "The Cosby Show" from lower-price shows in its prime-time lineup.

ABC moved more units into some of its successful half-hour comedies, said a former ABC sales executive.

The trend continued throughout the 1980s, the executive said, but has gone undetected.

Now, agency media executives say they plan to increase scrutiny of network clutter.

"We're going to use whatever devices we can to monitor programming time and commercial time to see exactly what kind of abuses are being made by the networks. And we will make it an issue with our clients," said Michael Drexler, exec VP-media director of Bozell.

"We're going to use whatever devices we can to monitor programming time and commercial time. . . ."

He said the ad community will expand monitoring of all network non-programming time, including commercials and promo spots, using a variety of services including Nielsen Media Research's Monitor-Plus commercial tracking system.

Mr. Drexler predicted that the 1990 Television Commercial Monitoring Report, to be released soon by the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers, will show an increase in clutter and a decrease in the overall programming time of network TV shows.

In 1989, the Four A's and the ANA found that ABC was the least cluttered network with 10 minutes, 42 seconds of clutter per prime-time hour and CBS was the most cluttered with 11 minutes, 40 seconds. NBC had an average of 10 minutes, 58 seconds.

But a new study from the Network Television Association notes that the Big 3 are the least cluttered of all TV outlets.

The average non-program time per prime-time hour on the Big 3 was 12 minutes and 35 seconds, compared with 14 minutes, 16 seconds for Fox Broadcasting Co.

But agency media executives say the issue is no longer just paid commercialization but all non-programming time, including promotions.

The NTA study shows that the Big 3 networks air the highest level of national promo time: an average of 2 minutes per prime-time hour.

Bozell's Mr. Drexler said agency media executives plan to offer a compromise to CBS and any other network that wants to add commercial time to its programs.

Instead of limiting each show's commercial time, they want the networks to commit to a minimum amount of program time and then manage the non-programming portion however they see fit.

"As far as we're concerned, it doesn't make a difference whether it is a promo or another commercial, except for the fact that we don't want to see more competitive commercials added to a pod," Mr. Drexler said.

"If they want to add more commercials, for whatever their economic reasons are, it should come out of their promo time, not their programming time," he added. "That's the key issue that we want to fight."

One media director said agency media executives will also ask the networks to start reporting the length of programs they order from producers.

"Right now, they don't report anywhere what time lengths they request from producers when they order programs," he said. "We've asked, and they won't tell us. But we know that's what they're doing. They're going to the producers and saying, 'I asked you for 24 minutes last year, but I want 23 minutes this year.' We don't think that's in the viewer's best interest."

Meanwhile, CBS executives said they don't plan to make a final decision on the prime-time commercial shifts until November.

"We're faced with a situation with CBS maybe being able to break even this year," said Senior VP-Sales Joe Abruzzese. "We're not talking about making $300 million profit. . . . We're talking about keeping our head above water." □ pickup truck ran over a line of cars.

The reinforcement, not noted in the ad, prompted a probe by the Texas attorney general and caused Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York, to resign the $40 million account.

The Federal Trade Commission last month ordered Volvo and Scali to pay $150,000 each for the deceptive advertising.

This time, "everything was documented via videotape and still photography," the source said.

The spot was directed by Doug Taub of Zuma Films, Santa Monica, Calif., using 10 cranes and 11 cameras to capture the crash in a single take. The "monster truck" commercial used several takes, which may have been a factor in the reinforcement decision.

"The production company and the agency made it clear that we shouldn't modify the car in any way," said Al Vardin, manager of Shelley Ward Enterprises, Aqua Dulce, Calif., which handled the setup of the cars and the crash.

Messner Vetere also created a 30-minute "infomercial" being tested on San Diego TV stations for six weeks.

Volvo's market share has slipped slightly, from 1.0% in the first eight months of 1990 to 0.9% in the same period in 1991, according to Automotive News. It isn't clear, however, that the ad scandal was the reason for the decline. □

P&G spends $2.28 billion, surges to head of Top 100

But cuts become commonplace as 43 companies in the select group invest fewer marketing dollars in their 1990 budgets

By R. Craig Endicott

Procter & Gamble Co. rolled forth an advertising budget hike in 1990 that took it to the top of Advertising Age's latest ranking of the nation's leading national advertisers.

P&G passed Philip Morris Cos. to retake the lead for the first time since 1987 in the 36th annual Advertising Age 100 Leading National Advertisers report.

Powered by a 26.8% increase in U.S. advertising, P&G's outlay soared to $2.28 billion in 1990, overcoming a $293 million margin built by Philip Morris in the prior year.

The surge in P&G's spending, which included more than 30% increases for its toiletries and beauty aids business, diapers and detergents and cleaners, was atypical of the Top 100.

Total U.S. ad spending by the elite group hit $35.6 billion for a 5.6% increase, down from a 6.4% gain in 1989 and a 6.7% advance in 1988. Reduced spending in the fourth quarter clearly had an impact on 1990 totals.

Philip Morris' advertising advanced to $2.21 billion, its more modest 6.6% growth held in check by a huge tobacco division that cut spending 11.6% from 1989. Tobacco advertising accounted for 20% of the company's total.

P&G, the perennial No. 1 advertiser until acquisitions helped push Philip Morris into the lead, regained the top spot in much the same fashion. Its toiletries juggernaut, accounting for $513.2 million in media advertising, included measured spending of more than $100 million from recent acquisitions: Noxell Corp. and the Max Factor and Betrix lines from Revlon.

Total spending by toiletries and beauty aids alone was an estimated $1 billion with unmeasured advertising folded into media expenditures monitored by LNA/-Arbitron Multi-Media Service. Unmeasured media is advertising and promotion that includes such "unmeasured" ad forms as direct response and sales promotion (see story on Page 71).

The billion-dollar ad club included No. 3 Sears, Roebuck & Co. and No. 4 General Motors Corp., both at $1.5 billion. Combined, the four accounted for 21% of the total spending attributed to the 100 Leaders.

Aggregate growth of the Top 100 declined from previous years as 43 spent less in 1990 than 1989, a year in which 30 showed declines. An indication that some of those cuts are more than temporary is the fact that half of those operated with either flat or declining ad budgets in the prior year as well. In many cases, marketing budgets took a back seat to payroll cuts, plant closures, debt reduction and even bankruptcy proceedings. Two of the Top 100 are in Chapter 11.

As the economy continued to soften in 1991's first quarter, 36 of the Top 100 spent fewer dollars on their leading brands than in the prior-year period, according to an Ad Age study that monitored spending for brands drawing $7.4 million or more in media advertising in the quarter (AA, Aug. 19).

Even so, the nation's top media would have been hard pressed to make ends meet in 1990 without Top 100 spending volumes. The Top 100 accounted for 77.4% of all network TV spending, 42.4% of spot TV, 79.3% of syndicated TV, 42.8% of magazine and 22.5% of newspapers.

The group increased its spending 7.7% in network TV to $7.85 billion; 10.2% in spot TV to $3.94 billion; 1.2% in newspapers to $2 billion; and 29.3% in syndicated TV to $1.26 billion.

The rest of the nation's advertisers bought only 0.5% more network TV than in 1989, 0.01% more newspaper ads, 5.1% more syndicated TV and 1.8% less spot TV, according to LNA/Arbitron.

General Motors led the nation in network TV spending at $593.4 million, up 18.1%; P&G took spot TV honors at $304.5 million, up 39.8%; Philip Morris led magazines with $260 million, down 7.6%, and syndicated TV with $133.8 million, up 25.2%; and No. 30 May Department Stores Co. captured newspapers at $214.4 million, up 5.4%. Only No. 6 PepsiCo lost its position as a media spending leader from '89. It

CORPORATE PROFILE

American Brands' huge U.S. tobacco and liquor franchises are between a rock and a hard place: They compete in flat categories that are falling under increasing public scrutiny.

The company's domestic tobacco business, up only 1.7% in sales to $1.6 billion in 1990, met with deep declines in full-margin cigarette brands that offset gains from value-price business. Overall share declined to 6.8% in 1990 from 7% a year earlier in a market that grew only 0.7% in unit volume.

Similarly, its Jim Beam Brands liquor operation declined from 9.8% to 9.6% of a market that also grew only 1% in volume in 1990. Beer, wine and distilled spirits consumption is declining.

Still, international sales bolstered the company's overall tobacco operations.

Tobacco marketers were hard hit by a federal excise tax on tobacco in 1991. This favored the value-price segment—the growth area at American Brands.

Full-price brands were another matter. Pall Mall slid 15% to 11.9 billion units sold; Carlton Filter dropped 4.9% to 8.5 billion units; Lucky Strike declined 15% to 3.3 billion units; and Tareyton fell 12.4% to 3.3 billion units, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat, First Securities.

Ad spending on these brands also headed south led by the 28.4% drop to $19.3 million in support of Carlton Filter, the leader in the Carlton line.

The value-price segment grew to nearly 19% of industry sales, up 4 points from 14.9% in 1989. American Tobacco's market share in the value-price segment grew to 8.7%, up 1.6 points.

American Tobacco introduced in 1990 a number of targeted value-price brands, such as Misty for women, which received $4.7 million in ad spending in 1990.

Bull Durham was rolled out in March. Ad support is expected to run about $12.3 million in the first year.

There was little movement in the company's major liquor brands. Jim Beam bourbon dropped to No. 6 from No. 5 in distilled spirits as case depletions increased 1.2% and market share inched to 2.4% from 2.3%.

The company continues to rank No. 3 in spirits on its 9.6% market share in unit volume, behind Heublein (14.3%) and Jos. E. Seagram & Sons (13.8%); its share is down from 11% two years ago.

Liquor advertising was consolidated at Fallon McElligott in September 1990. Fallon already handled about $8 million in business and picked up work previously handled by Chicago agencies BBDO and Cramer-Krasselt, each with about $3 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

American Express Co., hurt by troubles at its Shearson Lehman Bros. subsidiary, is gearing up for what it calls a "major marketing campaign" this fall.

The company, which has bought heavily into the World Series this October, is expected to start a new positioning campaign that adopts a "family" approach to marketing its varied card products, including the basic green, Gold, Platinum and Corporate cards, as well as its newer Optima revolving credit card. The move is likely to reshuffle agency assignments to account for substantially reduced spending behind individual cards.

AmEx's 84% earnings decline came largely from a $1 billion loss at Shearson Lehman Bros., now 100% owned by AmEx. Its troubles were assuaged in August 1991 by an infusion of cash from Berkshire Hathaway for an exchange of preferred stock.

Recession-related slowdowns in consumer spending and market share declines also hit the company's Travel Related Services unit, which accounts for 40% of total corporate revenues.

For the six months ended June 30, AmEx earned $520 million, compared with a $300 million loss in the first half of 1990, on revenues of $12.7 billion, up 5.7%. But earnings declined in the travel services unit.

AmEx had 36.5 million cards issued worldwide as of yearend, a 7% increase, according to the company, but the worldwide share of charge volume declined 2 points to 16.4%. In the U.S., AmEx's share fell to 24.5% from 25.2% in 1989, mostly because of inroads by Visa International, which has steadily gained share.

Earlier this year, AmEx introduced an Executive Corporate Gold Card with a $100 annual fee.

Even as the company unifies its general card-marketing efforts, it has introduced promotions to support particular products. For example, Your Company, a quarterly magazine introduced in September 1990, targets corporate cardmembers who run small businesses. The magazine runs ads only from its four sponsors: AmEx, IBM Corp., United Parcel Service of America and Cigna Corp.

AmEx cardholders can now charge long-distance calls placed with MCI Communications Corp. and US Sprint, in response to AT&T Co.'s successful Universal card rollout. And "Weekend Privileges," a new campaign to stimulate card use for leisure travel, offers promotional packages and special rates for vacations.

Ad spending dropped 18.8% in 1990. The company's base charge card was supported by $79 million in 1990, a 15% drop. That figure is expected to drop to about $60 million in 1991. Budgets for network and spot TV in particular took a beating, both falling 32%. Much of the decline stemmed from substantial reductions in Gold Card spending.

AmEx's growing publishing arm, which accounts for less than 1% of total revenues, is said to be exploring alliances with other publishers to extend the ad sales power of its titles such as Travel & Leisure and Food & Wine.

Shearson was split into a retail brokerage called Shearson Lehman Bros. and an investment banking arm, Lehman Bros. The brokerage hired Chiat/Day/-Mojo to replace Ally & Gargano but slashed media ad spending by 43% to $8.5 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

The food segment is the odd man out now that American Home Products Co. has tightened its focus on healthcare from the June 1990 sale of Boyle-Midway (its household products and depilatory business) for $1.25 billion to Reckitt & Colman.

Healthcare now accounts for 87% of worldwide sales, compared with 55% before the sale.

Boyle-Midway's partial inclusion in 1990 returns distorted financial results. Apart from Boyle-Midway's share, the company would have grown 4.3% in sales compared with 0.1% reported.

The company's food products—largely dominated by the Chef Boyardee brand—in 1990 showed a modest sales increase of 2.3% and an operating income decline of 0.5% from operations mostly within North America. Despite the segment's poor returns and lack of strong global coverage, it received strong marketing support during 1990.

Chef Boyardee Hamburger Italiano line carved out a 3.5% share in its second year competing in the $881 million dry-package dinners category, dominated by General Mills' Hamburger Helper and Kraft USA's blue-box dinners, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service. Measured spending of $7.7 million behind the line helped push total Chef Boyardee media spending up 44%.

With help from its Microwave Meals line, Chef Boyardee claimed 27% market share in the $1.17 billion shelf-stable canned and microwave dinners category, according to InfoScan. The brand got two new varieties of canned pasta for children in 1990, as Chef Boyardee kept its dominant share of the $700 million canned pasta category.

American Home Food Products also introduced Microwave Meals under other brands in 1990, adding four entree varieties for Ranch Style and six under the Luck's moniker.

AHP's Pam No Stick cooking spray continued to dominate the $97.1 million cooking oil sprays category, claiming a 73% share, according to InfoScan.

The healthcare business continued to benefit from the 1989 acquisition of A.H. Robins Co., whose operations were nearly fully integrated by yearend. In February 1991, Wyeth-Ayerst International and Whitehall International were merged.

Whitehall Labs added Dristan Sinus to its Dristan brand family, backed by $2.4 million in measured spending. Spending emphasis shifted from Dristan regular nasal spray to Long Lasting Dristan Nasal Mist with $3.5 million in media support, up from just $9,600 in 1989.

Advil claimed 11% of the pain reliever category, making it No. 2 behind Johnson & Johnson's Tylenol. Products under the Anacin aspirin brand held 7% of the pain reliever market.

Whitehall added a fourth agency to its stable, moving five brands to Avrett, Free & Ginsberg. The shop gained Arthritis Pain Formula and Semicid, from Young & Rubicam; Compound W, from McCann-Erickson Worldwide; and Freezone and Outgro, from Partners & Shevack, all in New York.

Wyeth-Ayerst, a worldwide leader in female contraception products, in late 1990 won U.S. approval to sell the Norplant System, a reversible, five-year contraceptive implant that's the first of its kind.

CORPORATE PROFILE

American Stores Co., the holding company that owns large food and drugstore chains, expected a tough 1991 because of the slowdown in consumer spending.

The first quarter was "slower than we would like," Jonathan L. Scott, American's president-chief operating officer, told shareholders in June.

Same-store grocery-only sales were up 1% on average in the first quarter, but same-store sales at American's grocery-combination stores dropped 0.55%.

Efforts to retire debt and lower interest payments were helped by the sale of most of American's Alpha Beta stores. In June 1991, American completed the sale of 142 southern California stores to Food 4 Less Supermarkets for $248 million.

The state of California in May 1990 had challenged American's plans to merge its Lucky Stores with Alpha Beta. The sale of the Southern California Alpha Beta stores was part of a consent decree that settled the antitrust suit; American admitted to no violations of the law.

With most of the Alpha Beta stores sold, American probably will change the name of its 75 Skaggs Alpha Beta stores to Jewel Osco units. The company also agreed to sell 51 Osco drugstores in Utah, Colorado and Wyoming to Pay Less drugstores for $60 million, but withdrew Acme Food Stores from the market after rejecting a bid in the $1 billion range.

By June 1991, the company had settled more than 25,000 cases of litigation relating to salmonella-contaminated milk in Jewel Osco units. American had accrued an additional $32.5 million charge to fourth-quarter 1989 earnings as a result of this litigation.

The biggest change in media spending occurred in network radio, where American spent $9.1 million last year, a category it spent nothing on in 1989.

Spending in newspapers declined 15.1% to $69.5 million but increased 182% in Sunday newspaper supplements, to $131,700.

Lucky had 16.4% of the southern California market early this year, behind Vons Cos.' 17.9% and Ralph's Grocery Cos.' 17.8%. Jewel leads in Chicago at 38%; Skaggs Alpha Beta is tied with Kroger and Tom Thumb in Dallas at 13%, according to Supermarket News.

CORPORATE PROFILE

AMR Corp.'s American Airlines is moving ahead on its course to become a global carrier, bolstered by its new presence at London's Heathrow Airport.

American paid $445 million to acquire three U.S.-London routes from Trans World Airlines. The new service—from Boston, New York and Los Angeles to London—began in July.

The acquisition makes American the largest U.S. carrier to the U.K. market, though Delta Air Lines won't be far behind when it completes its purchase of Pan American World Airways' North Atlantic routes.

To launch the Heathrow routes, American ran its largest media campaign ever in conjunction with a service start-up. The carrier spent nearly $20 million, three times more than its major Latin American push last year.

American also plans to expand its Latin American service in December when it increases its weekly flights by 27.5% to 181.

American held onto its No. 1 position in 1990 as the nation's largest carrier, but for the first seven months of 1991 United Airlines shared the lead spot. Both carriers hold an 18.3% share of the U.S. market based on revenue passenger miles, according to PaineWebber. American had a 17% share in 1990 compared with United's 16.6%. Delta was third.

To jump-start air travel last spring, American initiated the largest fare promotion in its history, offering consumers short-term fare specials and new discounts for business travelers. But the move resulted in higher overall fares for the long term.

Still, American Chairman Robert Crandall didn't see "reasonable levels of profitability" returning until the third quarter of 1991. Boardings have been affected by the recession and, in the first quarter, by the Persian Gulf War.

American remains an aggressive marketer. It's just launched a three-year worldwide soccer promotion tied to its sponsorship of World Cup '94 in the U.S.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Anheuser-Busch Cos. continues to grow into an even bigger player in the U.S. brewing industry but is looking to other regions and products for growth.

The world's largest brewer in 1990 saw its beer shipments rise 7% to 86 million barrels and its share of the U.S. beer market near 43%. While some of the increase was undoubtedly due to last-minute buying to avoid an alcohol tax increase, A-B continued to gain share in 1991 and claimed 44% of U.S. beer sales at midyear, closer to its stated goal of selling 50% of U.S. beer.

Last year, A-B's sales rose mostly on the strength of Bud Light, Bud Dry and Busch Light. Budweiser, the nation's No. 1 beer with 25.1% of U.S. sales, eroded very slowly and the Michelob brands more quickly. Michelob's problems prompted a review of advertising this summer and the return of the account to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles from DDB Needham Worldwide. A-B is also testing a premium-price Miller Genuine Draft clone called Michelob Golden Draft and Golden Draft Light.

Under Steve Burrows, new VP-marketing, A-B is increasingly relying on a constant supply of new products to keep its drinkers and lure new ones. Its strong share forces A-B to constantly balance growth against cannibalization. The balance seems to have worked for Bud Dry, which in 1990 shipped 1.6 million barrels, more than enough to overcome losses of Budweiser.

A-B cut back on national advertising in favor of local advertising and promotions, though it claims the 12.7% drop in measured advertising overstates the real change.

A-B has looked to Europe for beer expansion, but in the U.S. the big expansion is in snacks. A-B early this year expanded to national advertising for Eagle Snacks chips and nuts. Tortilla chips were added in some markets.

Snack Food magazine estimated A-B had achieved 8.3% growth to $325 million in sales in 1990 for a 5.8% share of the potato chip market.

A-B also moved closer to creating its own bread brand. Iron Kids, a product with many of the health benefits of wheat bread, but with the color of white bread, was expanded into all its 27-state Cambell-Taggart bread territories.

CORPORATE PROFILE

AT&T Co.'s six-month courtship and eventual buyout of NCR Corp. for $7.4 billion in stock this May signaled its intention to become a major computer marketer and to offer customers worldwide links between computer and telephone networks.

The company also wants to grab a bigger piece of the international long-distance market, an area of fierce competition among AT&T and its rivals, MCI Communications Corp. and US Sprint.

AT&T launched a new TV campaign this May via Young & Rubicam targeting business callers and themed "A world of help." A consumer effort called "Reach out world" has been running for a year.

AT&T also promotes a new foreign-language translation service called Language Line with a print campaign from Wunderman Worldwide that runs in major newspapers.

However, domestic long-distance service remained the core of the company's business. AT&T last year captured a 68% share of total revenues in the estimated $56 billion long-distance telephone market, up from 66.4% the previous year.

MCI's share was about 15%, up from 12.5%, while Sprint captured about 10% of the market, up from 8.3%.

AT&T was the leading media spender in each quarter of 1990 before cutting back in first quarter 1991.

The Universal card has been a success since its launch in late March 1990. It was the No. 6 credit card in the U.S. by mid-1991, opening up 5.2 million accounts (8.5 million cards issued).

Part of its success was attributed to initial features that included waiving permanently the annual fee for customers who signed up in 1990 and used the card to make purchases at least once a year. A 10% discount on long-distance phone calls and 90-day insurance coverage on retail purchases were also offered.

Those features were dropped this March, after they had been extended through the first quarter. Analysts contended the company dropped the features to concentrate on profits.

The residential long-distance market turned into a discount war in early-to-mid-1991 as AT&T's two big rivals introduced new schemes to pull in customers. Sprint restructured its Priority plan by reducing a customer's maximum expenditure from $200 to $20 a month before they could get a 20% discount on off-peak for out-of-state calls. MCI has a plan reducing rates by 20% when the customer calls another MCI user.

In April, AT&T introduced a new discount program called Any-Hour Saver, which offers one hour of domestic calls for $12.

AT&T significantly increased its use of TV in 1990 especially for long-distance service, which pulled $151.3 million in media advertising, up 84%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Bayer's U.S. subsidiary Miles increased ad support for its top two brands in 1990 but cut spending sharply for smaller franchises.

An 18.3% increase in measured media for the flagship Alka-Seltzer brand and a 50.6% jump for Flintstones vitamins contributed to overall 3% growth in media spending in 1990, to $115.3 million.

Alka-Seltzer line extensions benefited from increased spending in 1990. Launched in late 1989 and backed with $11.2 million in media in 1990, Advanced Formula Alka-Seltzer continued to receive the majority of the Alka-Seltzer antacid media budget. Alka-Seltzer Plus Sinus Allergy Medicine was rolled out in late 1990 and received $3.2 million in ad support.

Miles' Flintstones leads the $95 million children's chewable segment with a 30% share, said Julie Wolfe, senior analyst with business consultancy Kline & Co.

Miles in May 1991 rolled out Mycelex, the company's first drug to be transferred from prescription to over-the-counter status.

In March 1990 Miles launched S.O.S Juniors steel wool cleaning pads. But instead of adding to the budget, spending for S.O.S oven cleaning pads and S.O.S scouring pads was cut to near zero, and $2 million was spent advertising Juniors.

Miles admits competition hurt the S.O.S division in 1990. Sales of glass cleaners slipped and spending on them was cut 57.5%, to $2.1 million. Miles in mid-1991 began testing S.O.S Kitchen Safe, made from ingredients approved for use in food.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Bell Atlantic Corp. is turning to retail outlets to sell services this year and looking to expand into a much wider range of services following a federal court decision to lift restrictions barring the Baby Bells from owning consumer information services.

Last month, Bell Atlantic began a trial program to sell services, particularly Caller ID and Home Intercom, through Hecht's stores around Baltimore, Washington and Richmond, Va. Previously, Bell Atlantic had relied heavily on advertising to sell special services.

Last year, Bell Atlantic supported its corridor program, better known as Dial 10 NJB. Using the special access code gives dialers a lower rate calling into New York. Guardian, aimed at business users, offers insurance against a breakdown of their phone systems.

Support for Bell Atlantic's Yellow Pages directories was mixed. It spent $5.6 million on the Chesapeake & Potomac Yellow Pages, up 7.7%, and $6.9 million on the New Jersey Bell Yellow Pages, up 2.5%.

In January 1991, VP-Corporate Relations and Advertising Christopher Clouser resigned, later to join Northwest Airlines. His responsibilities were assumed by Philip Campbell, vice chairman-cfo, until March, when A. Gray Collins was named to the post from exec VP-external affairs.

The decision to give the Baby Bells access to information services must survive an appeal, and restrictions remain in effect until an appeal can be heard.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Bristol-Myers Squibb Co.'s Excedrin headache was a December 1990 U.S. District Court ruling against ad claims that Aspirin Free Excedrin was better than Extra-Strength Tylenol.

Bristol was forced to pull its $10 million effort, replacing it with retro advertising that revived the "Excedrin headache" of the '60s.

The comparative ad campaign, coinciding with a $30 million effort for Nuprin, bespoke of a decidedly more aggressive Bristol.

Bristol this spring introduced Bufferin AF Nite Time, an aspirin-free pain reliever and sleep aid, with ad support of $12 million-plus.

Ad spending shifted significantly for Ban antiperspirants, Bufferin and Excedrin analgesics brands.

Total media spending for Ban brands was up 7.2%, with Ban Solid getting $13.6 million, up 134%.

Support for Ban Spray may have been a casualty of the green revolution; advertising vaporized after the company spent $4.9 million on the brand in 1989.

Overall ad spending for Bufferin dipped 25.6%. Spending for Bufferin tablets was up 164% to $10.3 million; at the same time, ad support for regular Bufferin tablets and capsules was slashed to $1 million from $12.6 million.

Media support for the Clairol line dipped 7% to $66.7 million. Few new products hit the market, exceptions being Lock 'n Roll hair curlers, with $2.6 million in media in its first year, and several new extensions to the Condition hair treatment and styling line. Condition spending was $3.7 million, up 19.4%.

During 1991's first quarter, the toiletries, beauty aids and household cleaners segment was restructured from a regionally run unit to a single global operation to copy operations of other segments. Growth lies outside the segment's mature categories in North America.

Among the segment's leading household products, Drano received a professional-strength extension; the Renuzit air freshener brand got new potpourri scents in 1990, and in early 1991, a Fragrance Jar extension.

Last fall Bristol bought a minority share in Upsa Group, Agen, France, to expand its OTC business in Europe, where Upsa is the No. 2 analgesics marketer. Bristol plans to help develop Upsa's operations internationally.

Bristol has worldwide aspirations for its prescription drugs as well, seeking approval for cholesterol-lowering drug Pravachol in at least 22 countries and developing anti-AIDS drug Videx.

CORPORATE PROFILE

New President-CEO David Johnson stirred the pot at Campbell Soup Co. in 1990, slashing spending in U.S. marketing 5% and ending the company's practice of annually upping the marketing ante by 15%. The idea was to improve the bottom line even at the risk of losing share points.

As a result, Campbell's calendar 1990 media advertising, half of which was spent in the company's fiscal year ended July 31, 1990, was reduced by about $14 million to $116.9 million.

The strategy was short-term. With financial goals essentially met, the company is hiking its domestic ad spending 30% for fiscal 1992 and "returning to brand building."

Part of Campbell's plan to shore up profitability has been to emphasize efficiencies across the board: Headquarters staff was cut by 267 in May 1990, the agency roster was consolidated, the position of category manager was eliminated, more umbrella campaigns were used and fewer products were introduced.

This year, Campbell has abandoned the umbrella approach for advertising individual varieties. While ad spending was flat, condensed soup case volume climbed 4%—compared with flat to declining volumes for several years—behind the new strategy and including new kids' introductions of Souper Stars, Curly Noodle and Teddy Bear soup.

Campbell dominates canned soups with a 76.5% share of the $1.7 billion category, Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service reported.

Campbell's frozen foods division pulled two products introduced earlier in the year: lunchtime frozen Souper Combos and Harvest Grain breakfasts. They had introductory budgets of $13 million and $5 million, respectively.

Harvest Grain, which began national distribution in July 1990, was a "healthy" breakfast entree introduced almost simultaneously with rival H.J. Heinz Co.'s Weight Watchers' low-calorie frozen breakfasts. Distribution difficulties and consumer misunderstanding of the product's name were blamed for poor sales. The company is restaging the line under the name Great Starts Healthy.

Campbell, leader in the $800 million frozen breakfast entree market, in 1990 introduced Great Starts Budget Breakfast and in 1991 launched Big Start, a large breakfast meal.

Campbell's Mrs. Paul's brand, which had been rumored to be headed for the auction block, registered a surprising 40% gain in profits in calendar 1990 attributed to price increases, a 55% hike in ad spending to $8.7 million and value-added positioning.

The recession helped drive up volume at budget-price Swanson by 15%. But the recession hurt Le Menu, which suffered a 20% volume decline in supermarkets in the first quarter of calendar 1991.

Le Menu took a battering from competitor ConAgra's Healthy Choice. In 1990, newly introduced Healthy Choice had a phenomenal 9.7% share of the $3.4 billion overall frozen-dinner/entree market, compared with Le Menu and Le Menu LightStyle's 5.5%.

As a result, Campbell in 1991 recast LightStyle into Le Menu Healthy, a low-fat, low-sodium line.

Spending for V-8 vegetable juice plummeted to $3 million from $11 million. Campbell is trying to revive the brand with a new campaign.

Campbell's weakest link was Pepperidge Farm, normally a star performer with about 6% of the cookie/cracker market, compared with leader Nabisco Biscuit Co.'s 44%. The recession drove consumers away from the pricey lines, and by spring volume had dropped about 8%.

The hemorrhage prompted Pepperidge to drop its original fiscal 1991 ad budget projections by 55% to $8 million and renegotiate compensation with agency Ogilvy & Mather. Campbell spent only $656,000 in media on Pepperidge in the first quarter of calender 1991, down 87%.

Pepperidge Farm President Dick Shea said the unit plans to boost spending in fiscal 1992 "at least 40% to 50%" to about $12 million and that it could go as high as $16 million by yearend, dispelling the need to renegotiate compensation.

The unit is rolling out a line of low-fat cookies this fall called Wholesome Choice, to compete with Nabisco's My Goodness!, testing on the West Coast.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Canon, in the midst of a five-year "global corporation plan" that includes aggressive worldwide marketing, sharply boosted its U.S. ad spending to help drive up copier and camera sales.

Worldwide, company profits jumped 60.2% last year on a 27.9% rise in sales as the company also boosted global advertising 32.8% to $535.1 million.

In the U.S., Canon USA increased media spending 38.8% to $20 million on cameras, the company's original business. A big portion of the totals backed the launch of the EOS Rebel single lens reflex camera in a campaign featuring tennis player Andre Agassi. The network TV portion for cameras more than doubled to $12.7 million.

The advertising apparently has paid off: Canon believes the $300 EOS Rebel, introduced in September 1990, has become the best-selling quality 35mm camera in the country.

Though lesser spending amounts were involved, Canon also has moved boldly in the camcorder market. Rather than hold its ad fire for the holiday season, Canon has aggressively advertised the compact Canovision 8 camcorder in the spring, reflecting in part Canon's belief that camcorders aren't as seasonal as once considered.

But the approach also has helped win dealer acceptance of the camera early in the year, assuring adequate shelf space for the Canon entry when the heavy holiday buying season does come.

Canon's camcorder marketing included tie-ins with Little League baseball, with the Canovision 8 being designated the "official" Little League camcorder and Canon sponsoring telecasts of the Little League World Series.

According to Television Digest, Canon's share of the camcorder market rose a point to 3% in 1990, and its rank rose one position to No. 10.

Copiers are Canon's biggest business, accounting for nearly 40% of worldwide sales. Canon USA's media spending on copier advertising rose 9.1% last year to $26.5 million as Canon claimed about one-fourth of the U.S. copier market, making it category leader nine consecutive years.

In an effort to expand the so-far disappointing size of the color copier market, Canon earlier this year shifted its ad strategy to stress the competitive edge color copies can provide in presentations and reports.

Canon also has launched a new corporate campaign that attempts to unify the look and message of Canon ads. The theme line of the $2 million-plus print campaign is "Your image matters to us."

CORPORATE PROFILE

Carter Hawley Hale Stores, overwhelmed by debt, recession and agile competitors, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization in February. But a possible savior, investor Sam Zell, emerged in July for the West Coast's biggest department store chain.

Mr. Zell's Zell/Chilmark Fund, which invests in troubled companies, proposed to invest $290 million in Carter Hawley in return for a controlling stake. Other offers could surface, because by mid-September the committee of creditors had not endorsed the bid, which it felt was too low.

Carter Hawley's problems began in 1987 when it loaded up on debt to fend off a takeover attempt by The Limited. With little money to invest in remodeling, the retailer has been criticized for its tired-looking stores and uninspired merchandising.

Before filing for reorganization, Carter Hawley refocused all its attention on the West Coast. In December 1990, the retailer sold its 26-store Thalhimer Bros. division to May Department Stores Co. for $317 million. Last April, the company merged management of its 12-store Weinstocks division with its 22-store Emporium division; the stores' names didn't change.

Carter Hawley has 83 full-line department stores in six Western states. The company has no plans to open other stores.

The stores cater to middle-to-upper-middle-income customers, carrying similar merchandise and many of the same private-label lines. The three divisions oversee their own advertising creative, media and production. Carter Hawley chains all rank first or second in sales in their primary markets.

In calendar 1990, Carter Hawley's media spending returned to 1988 levels. The 1989 figure was depressed mainly from spending cutbacks at Emporium following the October 1989 Bay area earthquake.

CORPORATE PROFILE

A stumbling U.S. economy, broad-based market-share erosion and increasing costs for sales incentives in 1990 through the first half of 1991 at Chrysler Corp. have led some observers to question its long-term viability.

Despite the naysayers, Chrysler defied most analysts' predictions by eking out a profit in 1990—the result of an aggressive cost-reduction program. The No. 3 domestic auto marketer posted a loss of $810 million in the first half of 1991, however, but kept intact its $16.4 billion, five-year development program.

Chrysler reorganized its vehicle development teams last January, creating four teams made up of representatives from marketing, product planning, design, vehicle engineering, manufacturing engineering, procurement and supply, and finance. The system gives team members broad decisionmaking authority in hopes of responding quicker to market forces.

The company is banking on a flurry of key new products in 1992. Early in the year, Jeep will get an all-new sport-utility vehicle dubbed the Grand Cherokee.

Also coming in early 1992 will be the Dodge Viper, a low-volume V-10-powered sports car that will be an important image leader for the company. By fall of 1992, Chrysler will bring out the first midsize sedans from its highly touted LH project.

One factor that's continued to hurt Chrysler is its almost total reliance on the North American market, a highly competitive free-for-all in which more than 40 car and truck brands compete.

Italy's Fiat Auto conducted extensive talks with Chrysler in 1990, with the goal of acquiring a stake in the U.S. auto marketer or at least striking a joint distribution agreement. Talks broke down late in the year, but analysts predict Chrysler will continue to seek a partner for international expansion.

Chrysler's share of the U.S. car market was 9.3% in 1990, down 1.1 percentage points from 1989. The company sold 860,834 cars in the U.S., a decline of 15.6%.

Chrysler also slipped on the truck side, its U.S. share falling 2.4 points to 18.2%. Some of the share loss was attributed to reduced minivan availability because of a production changeover.

It defended its position as the minivan segment leader by backing its Plymouth Voyager, Dodge Caravan and Chrysler Town & Country with $32.3 million in measured media, up 56%.

Chrysler's share of the combined car and truck market in 1990 was 12.2%, a loss of 1.6 percentage points. Unit sales of 1,698,068 represented a 15.3% decline.

The company stabilized its combined car-and-truck market share in first half 1991, coming in at 12.4%, same as the prior-year period. But with industry sales slowed by the recession, Chrysler's unit sales of 767,659 in the first half of 1991 represented a 14.9% falloff from the same period a year earlier.

Chrysler in November announced a $40 million deal with Time Warner that included special single-advertiser issues of Fortune, People and Life, and a series of insert advertorials, all built around the theme "Rediscover America."

Chrysler bought $106 million in airtime from CBS-TV to sponsor broadcasts of the 1992 and 1994 Winter Olympics and signed on as an official sponsor of the U.S. Olympic Team.

Chairman Lee Iacocca, 66, has announced he will retire as Chrysler's chief executive the end of 1992. The leading candidates within Chrysler to succeed Mr. Iacocca are President Robert Lutz and Vice Chairman Robert Miller, but there are rumors Chrysler's board would consider outside candidates.

CORPORATE PROFILE

The recession wasn't good to the electronics industry, particularly leading electronics specialty chain Circuit City Stores, which experienced a 6% decline in sales from comparable stores in the last half of fiscal 1991.

Circuit City's fiscal year, ended Feb. 28, 1991, saw a 3% decline in same-store sales.

The chain, with 26 stores in the L.A. area, found itself fighting for customers with newcomers Silo and The Good Guys!

Circuit City responded to the softening environment nationwide by cutting inventory and increasing marketing spending, to 6.2% of sales from 6%.

In May 1991, Circuit City took the media buying portion of its account in-house, from J. Walter Thompson USA, leaving JWT to work on creative only.

The No. 1 electronics specialty chain focused on the growth of its Superstore format, opening 34 outlets in fiscal 1991, including new markets Cincinnati and St. Louis. It plans to open 25 more Superstores in fiscal 1992.

Circuit City also is moving into malls with a new format called Impulse—small units with more select merchandise. There are now 14 such stores, up from four in 1990.

Bernie Andrews became exec-VP operations, replacing Bill Rivas who retired. Mr. Andrews, who joined the chain in October 1990, had been president-marketing at Montgomery Ward & Co.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Citicorp Chairman John Reed has discovered that being No. 1 isn't always an asset. While Citicorp continues to be the nation's largest bank according to some positive criteria, it also leads the market in one major negative: bad loans.

In 1990, the company wrote off $1.1 billion in delinquent debt. And with no sign of improvement in its loan portfolio, the company is expected to turn in an equally bad performance in 1991.

Citicorp has begun a cost-cutting program that apparently includes ad spending. In 1990, Citicorp reduced its media budget 15%, with most cuts from national media.

However, Citicorp shifted some of those funds into local media and expanded its effort to unify advertising for regional banks and s&l's in eight states.

To point up the difference between its services and those of other banks, Citibank offered its credit card users a "price protection" guarantee, in which it reimbursed customers for the difference between the price they paid and the lowest advertised price for an identical item within 60 days of the purchase.

Citibank this month began a five-month test in Chicago of a program called "Free Gifts" that rewards frequent users of its MasterCard and Visa credit cards by awarding them points for purchases. Points can be redeemed for catalog gifts.

This June Citibank began testing a "secured" MasterCard and Visa credit card, which allows less-credit-worthy users to establish credit by paying an initial $300 into a certificate of deposit account.

The past year was a rocky one for one of Citicorp's agencies. N W Ayer lost the $10 million New York retail bank account to FCB/Leber Katz Partners but kept Citicorp's inactive corporate account and direct marketing duties for Citibank Visa.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Clorox Co. ended its misadventure in laundry detergent in May 1991, saying it would refocus on "basic brands."

Clorox detergent with bleach, introduced in 1988 as an attempt to piggyback on the bleach franchise, fizzled as the company failed to keep up with the maneuvers of Procter & Gamble Co.

Foote, Cone & Belding, Clorox's bleach agency, took over detergent advertising from DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, in January 1990. But as detergent titan P&G reshaped the category with superconcentrate powders and Tide With Bleach, Clorox last year slashed detergent ad spending 70% to $2.1 million, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

By early this year, Clorox's detergent market share in the 45% of the nation where the product was sold had slumped to 2.5% from a peak of nearly 6% in 1989, Prudential Securities analyst Andrew Shore estimated.

Admitting defeat, Clorox took a $78.6 million after-tax charge from its fiscal results ended June 30, 1991, to exit the field.

In new products, Clorox went national with Professional Strength Liquid-plumr in March 1990 and with Control cat litter and Clorox Clean-Up, a household liquid cleaner with bleach, in May 1991.

Clorox's most successful recent launch was the March 1990 national rollout of Take Heart salad dressing. Take Heart was backed by $11.1 million in media spending last year.

Take Heart helped boost Clorox's share of the estimated $1 billion salad dressing market to nearly 23% in mid-1991, up from 16% before the launch.

A few of Clorox's brand extensions confound analysts and observers. Its $169 Kingsford Pro Grill, introduced nationally this spring, plays off its top-selling Kingsford charcoal line, but is a curiously high-price item from a marketer of low-price package goods. Also, Hidden Valley frozen entrees entered test in early 1991 with a name associated with salad dressings. Critics say the line is out of touch with the move toward healthier frozen food.

Clorox remains largely a bleach company. Its bleach sales edged up 1.4% in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1991, to $360 million, with bleach contributing 21.9% of company sales and 35%-40% of profits, according to Mr. Shore.

Clorox faces a critical problem with Clorox 2, the dominant color-safe bleach and its No. 2 source of profits. The product is under attack from both detergents with bleach and competition from P&G's Biz and DowBrands' Vivid bleach. Mr. Shore estimated Clorox 2 unit volume dropped 5% in fiscal 1991. Clorox increased media spending on the brand 4% to $16.3 million in 1990.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Coca-Cola Co. is gearing up to solidify its lead over Pepsi-Cola Co. in the U.S. and abroad, the latter now accounting for 61% of sales and 80% of operating income.

The world's largest soft-drink marketer is preparing its first coordinated worldwide ad campaign for 1992.

Part of that image will be shaped by Coca-Cola's new linkup with Creative Artists Agency, Hollywood's most powerful talent agency, hired in September to work with the company and its agencies to develop "global strategies for marketing, promotion, new technologies, sports, arts and entertainment."

Coca-Cola in July inked a deal with 27 of the 40 U.S. amateur sports federations that will send athletes to the 1992 Olympic Games.

The global initiative combined with the sponsorship of individual sports federations could boost Coca-Cola media spending for soft-drink brands, which has been slowly declining.

Some of Coca-Cola's biggest brands, including Coca-Cola Classic and Diet Coke, were outspent by Pepsi-Cola brands.

Diet Coke was backed with $69.1 million in media (up 13.9%) vs. $76.5 million (up 29.7%) for Diet Pepsi. Coca-Cola Classic got $67.6 million (down 4%), while flagship Pepsi pulled in $73 million

Ink makes it personal. There was a time when the most sincere notes and the most important documents were written and individually signed by hand using quill and ink. Since then, ink has been the long standing and classic means of expressing personal involvement in a message. Time has also proven ink to be a most powerful means of eliciting a personal response.

Now, Kodak combines the potential of advanced technology with the powerful personal touch of ink. Here are only a few examples of how high-quality, Kodak ink-jet technology can bring innovative solutions to personal printing.

If you're interested in improving your image and getting more personal with your customers, call (513) 259-3100, or write Eastman Kodak Company, Dayton Operations, 3100 Research Boulevard, Dayton, Ohio 45420-4099.

With direct mail ink-jet imaging not only avoids the perils of paper labels, but also provides greater versatility and improved response rates. Kodak ink-jet gives you the highest quality imaging for addressing and the flexibility to position personalized messages practically anywhere. You also get bar codes with tested readability rates of 100%. All Kodak products have received US Postal Service POSTNET bar code certification.

As a major player in high-volume, variable data imaging, Kodak offers the only imaging system capable of full-page variable-data printing at full production speeds. The system's versatility makes it perfect for everything from instant scratch-off lottery tickets to individualized sweepstakes mailings.

Dual image, ink-jet synchronization lets you move from conventional addressing to creative addressing. For catalogs you can address as well as deliver personalized messages both inside and outside. And, you can address and code inside order forms to solicit response and speed fulfillment. For magazines, Kodak's Selective Imaging and Gathering means ads can be selectively bound in and personalized. Individualized messages can be imaged both inside and outside for maximum impact and reader involvement.

Case sales for Coca-Cola Classic rose 2.1%, while those of Pepsi rose 0.1%, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst at Wheat, First Securities. Yet both declined in share, Classic sliding to 19.4% from 19.5% of the total market and Pepsi to 17.3% from 17.8%.

Carving away those share points were players in the faster-growing diet segment, which rose in case sales to 29.4% of the total market, up from 27.9% in 1989. Diet Coke remained segment leader by far with a 31% share, aided by a 7.5% growth in sales. Its market share, however, dipped slightly for the first time, by 0.5 percentage points.

Diet Pepsi, No. 2 in the segment, took those share points, rising from a 20.6% share in 1989 to 21% last year as sales increased 11.4%. In the overall market, Diet Pepsi holds a 6.2% share and ranks No. 4, compared with Diet Coke's 9.1% share and No. 3 ranking.

Coca-Cola's corporate soft-drink share grew to 47.6%, reversing a market share decline in 1989 to 47.5% from 47.8% in 1988.

In 1991, criticism of Coca-Cola's creative advertising heightened as management changes were announced at Coca-Cola and its flagship Coca-Cola USA division.

Ira C. Herbert, exec VP at Coca-Cola Co. and president of the North American business, said he would retire at yearend. Mr. Herbert will be replaced by M. Douglas Ivester, senior VP at Coca-Cola and president, Coca-Cola USA.

Theodore J. Host, Coca-Cola USA's senior VP-marketing, resigned Aug. 1 and will be replaced in October by Pierre Ferrari, a senior marketing executive at the Coca-Cola Foods division.

Pulling Mr. Ferrari from Coca-Cola Foods fueled speculation that Coca-Cola would try to sell off its foods division, which posted only a 1.3% sales increase in 1990.

Media advertising for Minute Maid was $24.8 million in 1990, down 40.4%; it lost share points, falling to 22.9% from 23.3% market share for orange juice.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Colgate-Palmolive Co. has succeeded in improving profitability in the U.S. despite a continued struggle to prop up its relatively weak market-share positions.

Such a trend will be hard to maintain if it can't stop share erosion and push new hit products onto the market.

Colgate scrapped its centralized ad function—headed by Clay Timon, who left as VP-director of worldwide advertising—and developed a five-year plan calling for a global approach to new products and business development and annual growth in earnings of 15%.

To further that plan, Colgate cut its workforce by 8% earlier this month and eliminated 25 plants. The company said overcapacity had developed from acquisitions in the late '80s, and from the trend toward concentrated formulas in soaps. Consolidation of production will take place in regions like Europe where goods and services will move more freely across borders in 1992, the company said.

Advertising implementation has been turned over to operating executives. So far, Colgate's two major agencies—Young & Rubicam and FCB/Leber Katz Partners—haven't felt any tremors.

This year, Colgate purchased Murphy-Phoenix Co., marketer of Murphy's Oil Soap, which has 6% of the household cleaner market. Colgate's Ajax cleanser holds a 2.5% share of that $1.2 billion market at the manufacturer level. Colgate also has 27% of the $750 million dishwashing liquid market at the manufacturer level, most held by Palmolive dishwashing liquid.

Colgate U.S. media spending has yet to regain its 1988 level. After a 27% drop in 1989 to $79.6 million, media volume rose 3% to $82 million in 1990, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

The biggest slash in U.S. ad spending was applied to the Fab laundry detergent line, which fell from $8 million in 1989 to less than $1 million in '90. The company has fared poorly in the $3.8 billion detergent market, with its share dropping from more than 8% in 1990 to less than 7% this year.

Lynn Hyman, analyst with First Boston, attributed Colgate's difficulties to slowness to react to the superconcentrated detergent trend and capacity restraints. This year Colgate is repositioning Fresh Start as the "original" superconcentrate. It's also moving Fab Ultra concentrated detergent into 18% of the country.

Colgate achieved efficiencies by promoting in tandem Colgate toothpaste and Fluorigard mouthwash with $7.8 million, up from less than $1 million in 1989.

Colgate is awaiting FDA approval for an anti-plaque toothpaste. The product, Colgate Gum Protection Formula, will strengthen the Colgate brand's 26% share of the $1 billion domestic market behind Procter & Gamble Co.'s No. 1 Crest.

CORPORATE PROFILE

ConAgra's acquisition of Beatrice Co. seems a very healthy choice.

With the August 1990 purchase of the three remaining Beatrice companies—Hunt-Wesson, Swift-Eckrich and Beatrice Cheese—ConAgra vaulted into the No. 2 spot among U.S. food companies, with sales of $19.5 billion for its fiscal year ended in May. Fully 77%, or $15 billion, of that total is sales of prepared foods, marking the company's growth beyond its commodity-oriented roots.

After combining the successful Swift-Eckrich with its own troubled Armour meats operation to form Armour Swift-Eckrich, ConAgra this fall will introduce Healthy Choice extra-lean ground beef. In a similar setup with Hunt-Wesson, a line of shelf-stable Healthy Choice soups and meals entered test in the fall of '90.

The major product initiative at ConAgra has clearly been the expansion of the Healthy Choice brand—foods with reduced calorie, cholesterol, fat and sodium levels.

The 2-year-old brand, whose sales hit the $329 million mark for ConAgra's fiscal year ended in May, is regarded the most successful new name in the freezer case since Stouffer Foods Corp. introduced Lean Cuisine in 1981. Healthy Choice has about an 11.3% share of the $2.9 billion market for premium frozen dinners and entrees, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan.

In the freezer case, ConAgra added to its existing Healthy Choice dinner and entree varieties and brought the brand into three new categories—frozen desserts, breakfast muffins and sandwiches, and egg substitutes. Beyond that, ConAgra is testing Snoopy's Choice frozen meals for kids, the line of shelf-stable meals and soups, and the extra-lean ground beef.

ConAgra also boosted its presence in the freezer case with Kid Cuisine dinners, a $75 million franchise that drew $4.4 million in media support during its first full year, and Ultra Slim-Fast frozen dinners, a joint venture with Thompson Medical Co.

ConAgra estimates its corporate share of the entire frozen-food market volume at 28.2%, which includes Healthy Choice, Banquet, Morton, Kid Cuisine, Patio, La Choy, Swift Premium and Chun King.

Hunt-Wesson launched Wesson canola oil, the first national competitor to Procter & Gamble Co.'s Puritan canola oil. Wesson is the largest brand in the $795.6 million market for cooking and salad oils, with a 23% share.

Orville Redenbacher's continued to lead the $428 million microwave popcorn market, which grew 5% last year. Helped by single-serve and Big Bag line extensions, Redenbacher's 40.7% share beat General Mills' Pop Secret's 29%.

Hunt-Wesson drew one-third of its sales from Hunt's tomato products. Although Hunt leads in tomato sauce, Hunt's ketchup trails Heinz 20% to 50%, and Hunt's spaghetti sauce has only 10% of the $1 billion market.

To get the best Yellow Pages buys, go by the book.

If you want to select the directories that will produce the highest returns on your clients' Yellow Pages investments, the new 1992 Target Your Market Atlas from GTE Marketing Information Services is required reading.

It's an invaluable tool that helps make directory buys faster, more effective and easier to demonstrate to your clients. And now it includes more information than ever before.

Now updated to include 25 new MSA's and 600 additional directories.

The Atlas is a collection of statistical information and maps on the most competitive directory markets in the country—now 130 in all. It contains over 650 separate maps showing the coverage areas of more than 2,600 directories distributed in those markets. It also includes demographic data, business statistics and directory penetration figures to make it even more useful.

Using the Atlas is easy. Each MSA section contains full-color maps showing the geographic coverage of all directories in that market, including areas where multiple directories overlap. And tables have been added to provide a handy cross-reference between directory coverage areas and television markets (ADI's).

To show you how simple the Atlas is to use, call us at (214) 714-4325 and we'll send you a free MSA section.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Adolph Coors Co., the nation's No. 3 brewer, saw its 9.2% volume gain top the industry in 1990, though such growth has caused capacity problems in its brewing operations. Total volume hit 19.2 million barrels.

Coors Light, which gained 12.4% in volume to nearly 6% of national volume, is now the country's No. 3 beer and may have passed rival Bud Light, with which it was tied for third.

Coors entered the popular-price segment, introducing Keystone, Keystone Light and Keystone Dry with amazing success. But the flagship Coors brand was off 16.5%; Coors Extra Gold also slid.

A new non-alcohol product called Cutter will be rolled out nationally late this month.

Perhaps Coors' biggest advertising move with its existing brands was to cut in half support for Extra Gold (from $22 million) and concentrate its support of the brand in high-volume regions. At the same time, Coors raised support for Coors Light 30% to $68 million in measured media.

Coors made two ad campaign changes as a result of complaints. Coors agreed to stop using the phrase, "It won't slow you down," in Coors Light ads after the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms got a complaint from a doctor suggesting the line implied beer had no effect on reflexes. The brand switches to "The right beer now" Oct. 1.

Coors also modified its "Brewed from Rocky Mountain spring waters" claim after Anheuser-Busch complained that water from other areas was added in the manufacturing process.

Coors won one battle on the ad front last May, when a judge turned down Eveready Battery Co.'s request that Coors Light's parody of its Energizer bunny campaign be halted.

CORPORATE PROFILE

CPC International endured the recession, aggressive government regulators and the death of a top executive in 1990 to come out with a 14% gro in profits worldwide, although U.S. s grew a more narrow 2%.

In the U.S., "1991 will not be a bed of ses for [CPC's] Best Foods [Division]. e U.S. recession has severely impacted volumes," said Chairman-CEO Charles Shoemate.

The company dominates the $867 million U.S. mayonnaise and sandwich ads market, with a total 35.9% share, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service.

The company has promised to build ola's position as the leading "health Mazola is the No. 3 brand in the $795.6 million cooking and salad oil category, IRI says. It has 2.5% of the $1.4 billion margarine and table spreads category.

But the "health" positioning proved to be an increasingly troublesome one. The FDA pressed for labeling changes for t Foods Cholesterol Free Reduced orie mayonnaise, and also homed in on "light" and cholesterol-reduced claims for margarines and corn oils. Earlier, under pressure fro the FTC and state attorneys general, C C discontinued claims that Mazola helped reduce sterol levels.

CPC became a hero of the food industry when it stood up to a false-advertising lawsuit aimed at Mazola ads and their cholesterol claims. The suit was tied to the Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act. A federal judge refused to grant the suit class-action status, and the move helped shatter the RICO threat for national advertisers.

In bread spreads, an improved, creamier Skippy peanut butter was launched in 1990, as well as Roasted Honey Nut Skippy. Skippy is No. 2 in the $848 million peanut butter market, IRI says.

In some cases, brakes were applied to advertising in 1990, and the "health" brands weren't always spared. Mazola corn oil and margarine garnered only $70,000 in measured media, plummeting from nearly $ million in 1989, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Hellmann's Light, with $8 million in 1989, wasn't advertised in 1990, but Hellmann's Cholesterol Free mayonnaise was up 5.5% to $4.9 million, as the main Hellmann's brand more than doubled to $9 million.

On Sept. 11, 1990, CPC Chairman James R. Eiszner lost his battle with cancer. The 63-year-old executive had been with CPC for 27 years.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Performance, and particularly safety features, continued to gain emphasis over style and image as the main themes in Daimler-Benz's marketing efforts supporting Mercedes.

That tack allows Mercedes to stress its "heritage" (of safety engineering) to combat the vigorous competition emerging from the Japanese.

Daimler, which increased its U.S. ad spending by 7.9%, was successful in reversing a four-year decline in Mercedes unit sales in 1990.

Unit sales in the U.S., Mercedes' largest export market, were up 3.5% to 78,375, as market share remained 0.8%.

However, midyear 1991 sales, show considerable erosion, to 33,177, down 22.1% from a year earlier.

The recession is hurting the company's efforts to regain ground, as is a new luxury tax that adds significantly to the price tags of its upper-bracket models.

Mercedes is pinning some of its hopes for a turnaround on a redesigned S Class car, set for introduction to the U.S. next month. In 1990, unit sales for the $50,000-and-up models were 25,627.

Mercedes-Benz of North America underwent a restructuring in 1990, consolidating its seven market zones into four.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Dayton Hudson Corp.'s discount- and moderate-price department store business propped up the retailer's financial returns in 1990.

Discount retailers Target and Mervyn's each recorded 4% growth in comparable-store sales, down slightly from the rates a year earlier.

Overall revenue growth of 8% was masked by the partial-year inclusion of Marshall Field's stores, purchased in April 1990. Comparable store revenues actually rose only 3% for all Dayton Hudson stores.

Within the department store division, Field's pushed up sales 41%; same-store sales were flat.

The company's strongest performer remains Target, with 420 discount stores. Target is Dayton Hudson's largest advertiser at $57 million, up 18.7%.

In 1990, Target diverted from its chainwide promotions to concentrate on region-by-region advertising. It launched in Minneapolis last year Target Greatland superstore. The launch was followed by an aggressive media campaign with the theme "Sometimes you need a bigger target."

Mervyn's, a moderate-price department store chain of 420 stores, recently started upgrading its private label stock, which accounts for 50% of sales.

Each Dayton Hudson store division handles production and placement of advertising through its own in-house agency.

Hudson's outspent Dayton's with $21.8 million in media, same as in 1989, to Dayton's $12.7 million, up 21%. Field's pared its advertising 14.7% to $27.9 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Delta Air Lines, poised to become a major international carrier after its acquisition of Pan American Airways' international routes, is priming to take over the market share lead in the volatile airline business.

The purchase includes Pan Am's North Atlantic routes, Frankfurt hub and Pan Am Shuttle. Department of Transportation approval is expected this fall. The carrier is planning hefty ad spending to achieve a global positioning.

Among the nation's top 13 carriers, Delta has shown the greatest share growth for the first seven months of 1991—even without the benefit of the Pan Am deal, according to figures from PaineWebber. Delta had a 15.2% share this year through July, compared with 13.2% in the same period last year.

In March, Delta began a Business Saver fare program that offered 20% discounts for flights booked three days in advance. By fall, however, Delta and other carriers had returned to the seven-day advance purchase requirement.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Walt Disney Co.'s self-proclaimed "Disney Decade" is getting off to a rocky start, with earnings for the first three quarters of fiscal 1991 down 22% due to the recession's effect on theme park attendance and several box-office flops. Fiscal '91 ends Sept. 30.

Operating income for Disney's theme parks and resorts declined 31% during the period, despite the opening of a new attraction, Disney-MGM Studios' "Kermit the Frog Presents: Muppetvision 3-D."

After winning the box-office market share derby in 1990, Disney dropped to third place through Labor Day 1991, with a string of flops that included "One Good Cop," "Run," "The Marrying Man," and "V.I. Warshawski."

Walt Disney Studios Chairman Jeffrey Katzenberg in January sent a 28-page internal memo to Disney executives, which was widely circulated in Hollywood, eschewing high-price blockbusters and calling for low-key, well-thought-out marketing plans.

His resolve was surely strengthened by the box-office failure of Disney's "The Rocketeer." The film cost $35 million to produce and $15 million to market but made only $45 million at theaters.

Disney grabbed its 16% market share in 1990 by increasing media spending 53.2% to $130 million.

Disney hopes to ensure exposure for its fall 1991 films with an unusual "Ticket to Entertainment" promotion linking four of its films to Coca-Cola Co.'s soft drinks.

Burger King Corp. replaced McDonald's Corp. as a fast-food promotional partner this year on promotions tied to its holiday film, "Beauty and the Beast," and the 20th anniversary of Walt Disney World.

Home video has been a bright spot for Disney, with the videocassette release of "The Little Mermaid" selling more than 8 million copies. Media spending behind the company's Buena Vista Home Video rose 54.5% to $20.2 million and will increase more than fivefold this year.

Disney, under its consumer products division, established a general-interest book publishing unit. This summer Disney acquired Discover magazine from Family Media.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Dow Chemical Co. kept expanding into consumer markets in 1990, evidenced by the growth in its consumer specialties division. The operations of Dow's two joint ventures formed in 1989—pharmaceutical arm Marion Merrell Dow and agrichemical unit DowElanco—are almost completely consolidated with the consumer division.

The remaining expanded consumer specialties division—agricultural products, pharmaceuticals and DowBrands consumer products—jumped 50% in sales. The division is largely the reason Dow Chemical turned in a 12% growth in sales.

Dow had forecast a decline in profits for 1990 from the all-time record highs of 1988 and 1989 but hadn't expected the magnitude of the downturn, according to President Frank P. Popoff.

Dow expects growth in the specialized products to offset the continued decline in other areas of its business, largely basic chemicals.

Saddled with heavy debt and big capital expenditure plans in 1990, Dow Chemical cut its advertising media expenditures 15.6%.

The biggest budget cuts took place at DowBrands, the consumer product segment of the consumer specialties division, where sales dropped 3.3% to $934 million. Ad spending for Spiffits cleaning towels, launched in 1989, was cut by 50.6%.

Some of the money may have gone to Fantastik's multipurpose towel rolled out in with $4.9 million in support.

Media advertising declined 17% for Ziploc food storage bags.

From the newly merged pharmaceutical side, brand advertising of Seldane non-sedating allergy medication first appeared in consumer media in 1990.

Nicorette nicotine gum, another prescription drug, drew $9.5 million in media advertising in 1990, compared with virtually no advertising by name the previous year.

In July 1991, DowBrands dropped Della Femina, McNamee and consolidated accounts for both foodcare and cleaning products at Campbell-Mithun-Esty.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Eastman Kodak Co. continues to make major cuts in its work force as it streamlines operations.

The latest round of cuts, a reported 3,000 this August, follows cuts of 11,000 in 1983, 13,000 in 1986 and 5,000 in 1989— and will take place companywide.

Tighter cost controls helped increase net income 32.9%, despite a charge of $888 million—the amount of a court settlement awarded Polaroid Corp. after winning an instant photography patent infringement suit against Kodak.

As expected, Kodak's 1990 marketing budget proved vulnerable to the changes. Kodak carved 7.5% from ad spending.

Batteries took a big hit, dropping to $2 million in media from $15 million.

Ad spending was slashed 31% on Bayer aspirin, matching similar spending cuts by most aspirin marketers. Bayer Plus was introduced with $4.7 million in media.

Spending on Kodak's biggest ad-supported categories—film and film processing—remained steady with some $60 million in combined measured media.

The launch of Photo CD last fall and its pending global introduction in mid-1992 is considered a crucial move for Kodak, which has been criticized for its lack of new photographic technology.

Photo CD is a film/electronic imaging photographic system that allows TV viewing of still photos through the transfer of 35mm negatives onto compact discs.

Sterling Drug in [illegible]91 formed a joint venture with French [illegible] maker Sanofi to share research and marketing resources for pharmaceutical and consumer healthcare products.

In an agency realignment, Kodak and Sterling consolidated this June more than $100 million in TV media buying assignments at Lintas:USA. The account involves TV buying for all major brands. The move stripped J. Walter Thompson USA of about $50 million; Lintas already had the rest.

Ironically, Lintas:New York in April resigned the Bayer account citing "strategic differences." Sources said it opposed Sterling's intent to extend the Bayer name into ibuprofen or acetaminophen-based products. Bayer, with about $200 million in sales in 1990, is fourth at about a 6% share of the $2.7 billion analgesic market.

Bayer, along with Panadol, was reassigned to N W Ayer in July. Lintas won Midol, which was at Warwick Baker & Fiore, and Vanquish, which had been unassigned.

CORPORATE PROFILE

The debt-ridden U.S. divisions of Campeau Corp., Allied Stores Corp. and Federated Department Stores, mired in bankruptcy proceedings for more than a year, proposed a recovery plan in October 1990 to get out from under Campeau's crushing $8.2 billion debt load.

The plan, to combine Federated and Allied into a new company called Federated Department Stores, would provide creditors stock in lieu of cash and reduce Campeau's debt burden to $2.8 billion by February 1992.

However, continued wrangling with creditors is prompting amendments to the plan.

If approved, Campeau would emerge with virtually no stake in any of the store chains.

Financial burdens and a weak 1990 holiday retailing season drove ad spending down 7.2% to $155.9 million.

Most of the decline came in newspapers, down 6.6% to $134.5 million. The medium represents 86% of media advertising.

Advertising by Federated/Allied's flagship Bloomingdale's slipped 5.8% to $37.2 million. Ad slashing also occurred at Lazarus, down 11.5% to $8.5 million; Jordan Marsh, 11.8% to $17 million; Rich's, 10.6% to $22 million; and Sterns, 21.7% to $14.4 million. Abraham & Straus' outlays rose 8% to $35.2 million.

Further downsizing will include the unloading of 12 Jordan Marsh stores in Florida. Several suitors are in the wings: Mervyn's division of Dayton Hudson Corp., J.C. Penney Co., Montgomery Ward & Co. and Dillard Department Stores.

Allied/Federated's "spending doesn't completely hinge on the outcome of the bankruptcy proceeding," said Kurt Barnard of the Barnard Retail Marketing Report. He said strong management now in place will assure higher spending to boost sales, particularly as the crucial holiday selling season approaches.

CORPORATE PROFILE

While Ford Motor Co. has proved to be extremely vulnerable to the weak U.S. economy, some say the carmaker set itself up for its bumpy ride by bringing too few exciting entries to the market.

To counter mounting problems—a 3.9% slump in U.S. sales and 61.4% drop in U.S. net income last year—Chairman Harold Poling in February 1991 announced plans to cut the salaried work force, saving $3 billion by yearend.

The setbacks followed several years in which Ford got high marks for profitability and for bringing to market popular products. But by 1991, some analysts said Ford slipped fighting the onslaught of Japanese competitors and a revived General Motors Corp.

The No. 2 auto marketer's share of the U.S. car category was 20.9% in 1990, down 1.4 percentage points from 1989. Ford Division also lost the lead in overall car sales to GM's Chevrolet. The slippage primarily reflected lower shares of the small-car segment, the result of slow initial sales of the redesigned Ford Escort and Mercury Tracer, both introduced in spring 1990.

The new subcompacts received the biggest ad backing of any Ford products during 1990. Ford Division spent $72.8 million in measured media for the Escort in 1990, and Lincoln-Mercury supported the Tracer with $32.4 million. Escort sales dropped 13.4% during the year to 288,727, and Tracer fell 40.5% to 34,494.

On the truck side, Ford scored a major hit with the Explorer, its new compact sport-utility vehicle that replaced the Bronco II in April 1990. Ford sold 181,748 of the Bronco II and Explorer vehicles in 1990, giving it leadership in the segment.

Altogether, Ford boosted its truck share in 1990 to 29.9%, up from 29.3%. The company's share of the combined car and truck market was 23.9%, down from 24.6%.

Ford tried to break away from the consumer incentive game in December 1990, dropping most rebates in favor of providing promotional money to dealers. But Ford reneged in the spring, saying it was too hard to make the strategy work in a down market with competitors stepping up their consumer lures.

The company introduced new full-size cars in 1991, the Ford Crown Victoria bowing in March and the Mercury Grand Marquis bowing a month later.

CORPORATE PROFILE

General Electric Co. proved military weapons, toaster ovens and light bulbs are better businesses than media to be in during a weak economy.

Double-digit sales gains from the company's aircraft engines, major appliances, power systems and financial services units more than offset a 4.6% decline at its NBC broadcasting division, which had a 20.9% decrease in operating profit.

GE in the process pared 7.6% from 1990 U.S. media spending supporting its product lines—largely NBC, appliances and light bulbs—emphasizing print media and national broadcast at the expense of spot TV (down 38.3%) and spot radio (down 21%).

GE increased media spending on NBC by 15.7%; consumer magazines remained the primary outlet.

NBC ratings and revenue share dropped significantly in 1990. The network's waning performance and a relatively uncompetitive environment due to tight regulation of the Big 3 networks have fueled speculation GE might soon divest NBC.

NBC Entertainment President Warren Littlefield maintains the network has a winning strategy for this fall's prime-time schedule, even though agency media executives predict it will be virtually a three-way tie.

John Miller, exec VP-advertising, promotion and daytime and children's programs, devised a fall advertising and promotion strategy that breaks from tradition.

Mr. Miller said NBC will put its advertising and promotional weight behind specific series vs. a schedule-wide effort. Like movie ads, Mr. Miller said, ads for new NBC series will be placed in movie buff magazines and similar media.

CORPORATE PROFILE

And now, for General Mills' next trick: topping the stellar results it posted in the past year while both its segments—package foods and restaurants—seek to buck declines surfacing industrywide.

General Mills' U.S. consumer foods unit volume grew 7.9% for its fiscal year ended May 26, as the company's food sales rose 9%; restaurant sales rose 15%.

Paralleling those sales and unit volume increases was a whopping 15.3% increase in companywide U.S. measured media spending for calendar 1990. Compare that to Kellogg Co., whose media spending fell 5.5% in 1990, and Quaker Oats Co., whose spending fell 8%.

Ready-to-eat cereals alone account for nearly 30% of General Mills' sales. Constrained by production capacity, it couldn't introduce a host of new cereals in 1990 but instead dramatically boosted spending on established brands.

The net result: General Mills' pound share of the $7.2 billion cold-cereal business increased to 24.3% in calendar 1990 from 23.4%, bringing it closer to market leader Kellogg's 37.5% than ever before.

But having built its share through older brands and with line extensions to the Cheerios and Total franchises, General Mills is now trying to prove it can also build new brands: In February 1991, it launched Triples, a Rice Krispies competitor, and Basic 4, a premium-price value-added cereal. This fall, it will try its first Wheaties extension, a presweetened version called Wheaties Honey Gold, hitting Eastern markets this month.

The General Mills/Nestle joint venture, Cereal Partners Worldwide, launched its first two cereals in Europe, Golden Grahams and Honey Nut Cheerios, in a push to build a $1 billion non-U.S. cereal business by 2000.

General Mills confirmed months of industry rumors when it announced in June 1991 it was withdrawing Total Oatmeal, Under Cover Bears and Oatmeal Swirlers from the hot-cereal market. But its three-season foray into Quaker's back yard was one of only a very few blotches on General Mills' 1990 record. General Mills also suffered share and unit volume declines with Gorton's seafood and Yoplait yogurt.

Led by Pop Secret and Hamburger Helper, the Betty Crocker division posted a unit volume increase of 13% in fiscal 1991. Pop Secret continued No. 2 in the $428 million microwave popcorn market to ConAgra's Orville Redenbacher's brand (29% to 40.7%), but Pop Secret posted a 36% sales increase in calendar 1990. A colored popcorn aimed at kids, Pop Qwiz, will make its debut this fall.

Betty Crocker continued to pace the $1 billion baking mix category with a 40% share to Procter & Gamble Co.'s 27% and Pillsbury Co.'s 22%. Betty Crocker added a line of SuperMoist Light cake and brownie mixes and ready-to-spread frostings with reduced fat and calorie levels, and MicroRave Singles, single-serving cake and brownie mixes.

General Mills' restaurant division, the nation's eighth-largest restaurant operator, had sales of $2.2 billion in fiscal 1991, up 15%, primarily reflecting aggressive expansion of the Olive Garden and Red Lobster chains. Average unit sales for both chains were relatively flat.

CORPORATE PROFILE

On Aug. 1, 1990, Robert Stempel enjoyed a full day in his new job as chairman of General Motors Corp. before his first crisis. Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait the next day, triggering oil fears and plunging the automotive industry into a deep sales downturn.

The recession helped produce an overall earnings loss at GM in 1990, even though the company was the only domestic auto marketer to gain market share. GM took a $2.1 billion write-off in the third quarter, reflecting the cost of closing four previously idled U.S. assembly plants. Excluding the special charge, GM earned $102 million in 1990.

GM whacked away at budgets, including advertising. Sources indicated GM's total ad spending for 1991 would come in about $200 million less than in 1990.

After seeing its U.S. market share erode steadily during the '80s, GM captured 35.5% of the combined car and light-truck market in 1990, compared with to 35.1% the year before. Its 1990 car share was 35.6%, up from 35.2%; its light-truck share was 35.4%, up from 34.9%; its overall new-vehicle share rose to 35.5% from 35.1%, according to Automotive News.

The earnings downturn continued in the first half of 1991, when GM lost $1.2 billion. GM's overall market share was 35.5%, down from 35.9% in the first half of 1990.

GM's Saturn project got off the ground, beginning a regional rollout of its first two models in October 1990. Saturn sold 1,881 cars in 1990, less than 0.1% of the car market. Production and sales slowly accelerated during the first half of 1991, as Saturn sold 25,320 cars during that period.

Chevrolet division, boosted by strong Geo sales, increased its share of the U.S. car market to 14.7% in 1990, up from 13.8% driving past Ford as the leader in car sales. Chevrolet officials credited the "Get to know Geo" ad campaign with boosting awareness. Chevrolet's truck share dropped to 27.1% from 27.4%.

Buick was GM's biggest success story, taking 5.8% of the car market in 1990, up from 5.6%, and climbing to 6.6% in the first half of 1991. A sustained, cohesive approach to developing product and image around the "premium American motorcar" theme, and measurably improved quality, triggered the upsurge.

Pontiac struggled from the lack of new product, its car market share dropping to 6.8% from 6.9%, and to 6.4% in the first half of 1991. Sales of the Trans Sport minivan introduced in 1989 gave Pontiac 0.7% of the 1990 truck market, compared with 0.1% the year before.

Cadillac inched up from 2.7% of the car market in 1989 to 2.8% in 1990, but fell to 2.5% in the first half of 1991 as the luxury car segment took a tumble. Cadillac launched two critical products in September 1991, a redesigned Seville and Eldorado aimed at import-lovers.

Oldsmobile continued slumping, falling to 5.5% from 6.1%, and 5.1% in the first half of 1991. The division took 0.6% of the truck market in 1990, up from less than 0.1%, the result of rolling out a minivan in late 1989 and a sport-utility vehicle in late 1990. In July 1991, the division switched to a product-oriented ad approach, "The power of intelligent engineering."

GMC's share of the light-truck market dropped to 7.1% from 7.4% and to 6.9% in the first six months of 1991.

GM continued to be a major player on the media front. The company inked an estimated $80 million cross-media deal with Time Warner; committed to being a broadcast sponsor on NBC's coverage of the 1992 Summer Olympics; signed an estimated $400 million, seven-year deal with CBS for coverage of regular season and Final Four NCAA basketball telecasts; signed on as a charter sponsor of Turner Broadcasting System's "Airport Channel"; and became the first title sponsor of the U.S. Armed Forces Sports Championships.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Gillette Co. cut U.S. media spending in 1990 because its new Sensor shaving system had a more successful launch than anticipated, catching Gillette short on supply, company executives said.

After a sluggish first quarter 1991, Gillette was off and running again with Sensor, backed by $59.2 million in media and $5.7 million in sampling and couponing. Gillette supported Sensor in May and June with an $8 million direct-marketing campaign, its largest ever for a shaving product. The U.S. campaign included couponing and FSIs.

Early-year shipments of Sensor to the trade and initial consumer sales were weak in 1991, partly because of the economy and tighter retail inventories, said Prudential Securities VP Andrew Shore. Sensor sales have improved since April, however, and should reach $365 million by yearend, he said.

By the end of 1990, Sensor had a 9.3% share of the $840 million-plus U.S. wet-razor category. Gillette's total share for 1990 was 62.7%, up from 61%, followed by Warner-Lambert Co.'s Schick at 14.9%, down from 16.8%; Bic Corp.'s brands, 10.3%, up from 9.8%; American Safety Razor Co.'s brands, 2.4%, down from 2.7%; and Wilkinson Sword's brands, 1.4%, down from 1.6%.

U.S. sales of deodorants/antiperspirants decreased slightly, mainly from weaker sales of Dry Idea, offset by increases in the Right Guard Sport line extension. While Right Guard ad spending increased 7.8% to $8.7 million, spending for Dry Idea dropped from $3.5 million to $932,000.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., the top tire marketer in North America, is a battered giant in a beleaguered industry. The No. 2 player in the $50 billion worldwide tire market last year posted its first annual loss since 1932.

Fortunes continued to slip in first quarter 1991 when it lost $90.1 million. By the second quarter, earnings had regained steam, rising to $22.5 million, giving Goodyear reason to project a profit for the full year.

Several problems plague Goodyear. The car industry is in a slump. That's led to an oversupply of tires. Competition is fierce, with price-cutting paring profit margins. Goodyear is shackled by $3.8 billion in debt incurred in the mid-'80s when it fended off a takeover attempt.

Enter Stanley C. Gault. Just retired from Rubbermaid, Mr. Gault was hired by Goodyear last June as chairman-ceo, the first time since 1926 that Goodyear had brought in an outsider to run the company.

He is selling assets and holding the line on capital expenditures and on ad spending. There have been no new ads for tires this year until the fourth quarter, as Goodyear recycled tire ads created in 1990. Goodyear service centers have received a new campaign. Service store advertising in 1990 declined 39.3% to $11.1 million.

During 1990, Goodyear provided strong support for Goodyear branded car tires, spending $38.2 million, up 25%. This claimed a little more than half of Goodyear's total spending in media.

Goodyear planned to introduce four new products by yearend. Set for an introduction this month is a "green" tire, the Invicta GFE, which can cut fuel consumption by 4%. Other new products included a high-traction tire, a high-performance tire for Corvettes and a new light-truck tire. Goodyear is "considering" selling tires through discounters, a first for the marketer.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Grand Metropolitan in 1990 unleashed a flurry of new products, especially from its Pillsbury division, and moved this year to gain clout in network TV by consolidating network media buying.

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles landed a plum this April when Grand Met consolidated $200 million in network TV buying at the agency. D'Arcy already handled Burger King Corp.'s buying; various shops had handled Pillsbury Co., Haagen-Dazs Co., Alpo Petfoods, Pearle Vision Centers and Heublein. Network TV accounted for about 46% of total media spending in 1990.

Franchisee disenchantment at Burger King led to the end of the "Break the rules" ad theme in April and resignation of Gary Langstaff, exec VP-brand strategy, this past February. The "Rules" theme was replaced with "Your way, right away," a variation on the 1970s' "Have it your way."

Burger King added Newman's Own salad dressings in 1990 and continued in 1991 with Kool-Aid Kool Pops and Snickers ice cream bars. Burger King units also began trading Domino's pizza and Weight Watchers low-cal products.

Burger King ranked second to McDonald's in the hamburger/sandwich market with a 16.9% share vs. 17.2% in 1989, according to Nation's Restaurant News.

Pillsbury introduced 50 new products, doubling the amount introduced in 1989. Ad spending on Pillsbury brand products grew 40% to $47 million.

The company remained third in the $1 billion baking mix category with a 22% share, behind General Mills' Betty Crocker line and Procter & Gamble Co.'s Duncan Hines brand.

Spending for Pillsbury's Green Giant Co. rose 44.9% to $14 million, with most of the increase coming in network and spot TV support for the vegetables lines.

Green Giant was second with a 12.6% share (up from 11.2%) in the $2 billion canned vegetable market in 1990, behind Del Monte's leading 15%, Information Resources Inc. reported. In the $1.8 billion frozen vegetable category, Green Giant's share rose 1.6 points to 15.3%, making the marketer a close second to the 16% held by Birds Eye, a Kraft General Foods brand. Haagen-Dazs in April got its first TV support ever as part of a $13 million campaign.

Heublein in 1990 became the leader of the 84.7 billion-case liquor market, unseating Jos. E. Seagram & Sons, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat, First Securities. Heublein gained 3.5% in volume to reach 14.3% of market; Seagram remained relatively flat at 13.8%. The new leader was aided by the 1989 acquisition of Christian Brothers and by the Jose Cuervo, Finlandia and Black Velvet brands.

Smirnoff vodka remained the industry's No. 2 spirit brand behind Bacardi Imports' Bacardi, with a 4.9% share, while Popov advanced one rung to third at 2.7%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Hallmark Cards is dealing itself into more ventures as it continues to grow beyond the mature greeting card market.

Although it remains the No. 1 card marketer in the $5.6 billion greeting card industry with a 45% market share, that business is relatively stable.

To compensate, Hallmark continues to build through acquisition. This year, the company bought a Dutch greeting card company and acquired more U.S. TV and radio interests.

The Shoebox Card line got its second short promotion in as many years this August. Hallmark brought out a version of its Just How I Feel card line to welcome back military personnel from the Persian Gulf War.

This holiday season Hallmark also is expanding substantially its line of holiday home decorating supplies, including more ribbons, bows and ornaments.

Mixed results came from several tests of new in-store products in 1990.

Hallmark last month ended a test of selling fresh flowers in a limited number of its 200 company-owned stores. Hallmark said it's now considering offering fresh flowers only in certain stores for holiday sales in 1992.

Its test of the Personalize It! in-store computerized greeting card service was successful, and Hallmark is rolling out the service in 11 Western states this month.

Hallmark this year discontinued the Gift of Choice customized gift catalog program it had been testing in 1990, citing unsuccessful results.

Last March, the privately held company acquired a 98% interest in Crown Media, a new subsidiary it will use to acquire and operate communications properties including cable TV systems, broadcast TV and radio stations, and niche publishing companies.

In August, Crown made its first acquisition, buying several cable TV systems in Wisconsin.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Hasbro is indisputably the biggest kid on the block in the $13.5 billion toy industry, following its May 1991 acquisition of troubled Tonka Corp.

The buyout provides Hasbro with an entire shelf of new toys that should improve its bottom line considerably.'

The $486 million deal brought together all of Tonka, Parker Bros. and Kenner Products' toys and games with the toy marketer's existing Hasbro, Playskool and Milton Bradley brands.

Tonka lost $44 million in 1990, compared with a gain of $5.7 million the previous year. Sales were $788.5 million, down 9.4%.

Tonka's media advertising dropped 31.3% to $50.8 million in 1990, compared with an 11.4% decline to $105.2 million at Hasbro. Spending in both 1989 and 1990 by the two companies has been consolidated in this report. The buyout by Hasbro brings its annual sales to more than $2 billion, a 14.8% share of the toy industry. It puts significant distance between Hasbro and archrival Mattel.

In August, the $6 million to $8 million broadcast TV account for Tonka's trucks and WWF Wrestling Buddies toys was consolidated at Griffin Bacal, the main agency for Hasbro brands. Grey Advertising, New York, previously handled Tonka. More agency consolidation is likely.

Hasbro's well-received Baby Uh-Oh from 1990 is being followed by Baby Oh-No and Baby Wanna Walk, two new special-feature dolls.

The Cabbage Patch Kids line has been broadened to include a battery-operated talking version; the special occasion Birthday Kids dolls include Preschool Kids, Kissin' Kids and Babyland Bunny.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Competition in key categories, particularly weight loss and pet food, consumed H.J. Heinz Co.'s energies in its latest fiscal year.

Total marketing dollars weighed in at $816.1 million worldwide, up 6.3%, for the fiscal year ended May 1. Media spending in the U.S., down 10% to $134.2 million, covers calendar 1990.

This June, Heinz consolidated its Weight Watchers retail foods businesses into Weight Watchers Foods Co. Weight Watchers' weight-loss business remains part of Weight Watchers International.

Weight Watchers products, which received nearly $56 million in measured media support in 1990, down 9.7%, found intense competition in many categories.

In the hotly contested $3.4 billion total frozen-entree/dinner market, Weight Watchers stepped up media support for frozen entrees to $18 million. However, that 30% increase couldn't stem a 5-point slide to 6% in the fourth calendar quarter from 11% in the first, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan figures. For all of '90, Weight Watchers had an 8.2% share.

Weight Watchers responded to a push by ConAgra's Healthy Choice by reformulating its products to include lower cholesterol, salt and fat levels, and then refocusing marketing. Advertising shifted from the medicinal "We should have called them health watchers" TV campaign to focus on taste and variety.

Weight Watchers reformulated its entire ice milk line to be fat-free.

Weight Watchers International, with $1 billion in sales, [illegible] the $8.2 billion overall weight-l[illegible] business in the U.S. (including hospital programs) with a 12.2% share, according to Find/SVP.

The unit in July moved its $30 million account to Earle Palmer Brown Cos. from DDB Needham. A new campaign for the diet system will start this fall.

Heinz USA spent $13 million in a summerlong ad and promotion campaign for its flagship ketchup in 1991. The company hiked marketing support 25% from last summer's spending on ketchup, part of a $100 million increase (up 25%) in tis worldwide marketing budget.

Heinz's Ore-Ida Foods last year introduced two new varieties to its fried potato line: Golden Twirls and Zesties french fries. Ore-Ida potatoes now command a 47% share of the retail package-potato market.

Heinz Pet Products Co. dropped to No. 4 from No. 3 last year in the total $7 billion pet food category, behind Ralston Purina Co., Nestle's Carnation and Mars' Kal Kan lines. While Heinz's share slipped to 11.2%, Kal Kan rose to 12.4% on the strength of its new Pedigree dog food. Heinz made its first entry into the $300 million superpremium canned dog food segment last October with the rollout of Reward.

CORPORATE PROFILE

The recession hasn't hurt Helene Curtis' sales growth, thanks to the successful launch of Degree antiperspirant and growth of its budget-price Suave personal-care line.

The estimated $50 million ad budget of Degree helped the heat-activated antiperspirant grab a 5.5% share of the $1.1 billion category within a year of its November 1989 launch, according to Kidder, Peabody & Co. figures.

Degree's launch follows Curtis' establishment of Suave antiperspirant, with a 3% share.

The company declared this July "Suave Month" and launched a $12.9 million marketing campaign for the personal-care line. The $5.1 million ad budget covers a heavier than usual TV and print schedule.

Two FSIs, a brochure with tips for living on a budget and extensive in-store merchandising were included.

Suave increased its share of the U.S. shampoo market to 8% by the fall of 1990 up from 7.5% at the beginning of the year, according to Kidder, Peabody. Curtis' other two big shampoos, Finesse and Salon Selectives, claim 4.5% and 4% shares, respectively.

To cash in on the shampoo-and-conditioner craze created by the success of Procter & Gamble's Pert Plus, Curtis launched Suave Shampoo Plus Conditioner in January.

The new products may have helped the company reach record sales of $867 million, but earnings suffered during 1990. The expense of introducing new products such as Degree in the U.S. and the sluggish economy hurt earnings as well as the shift in international sales, which increased the company's tax rate.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Hershey Foods Corp. has slowed its flow of major new national products in 1991 after generating record-setting sales and profits in 1990 that came amid reduced media spending.

This year Hershey has released its Desert Bar, a heat-resistant chocolate bar that was distributed to troops in the Persian Gulf. Plans for its future are under review.

Other new products headed for national introduction this year include new flavors for the Chocolate Bar Flavor Puddings and Chocolate Shoppe Toppings lines, and three new items for home bakers: Hershey's Butterscotch baking chips, Hershey's Holiday Vanilla Milk Chips in red, green and white, and Hershey's Sweetened Coconut Flakes.

Volume growth from Hershey Chocolate Bar Flavor Puddings, which completed their national rollout this year, and the Hershey Pasta Group more than made up for lower candy sales in 1991's first half, according to Hershey. Candy volume was hurt by a price hike in the chocolate bar price.

Hershey has been No. 1 among U.S. candy marketers since the Peter Paul/-Cadbury purchase in 1989. In 1990, retail sales of Hershey chocolate candy products through supermarkets were up 10%, according to Information Resources' InfoScan. Hershey was credited with a 42.8% share of the $1.35 billion market (in retail dollars) compared with Mars Inc.'s 34.5%.

The lead over Mars is smaller—39.7% to 38%—for chocolate products sold through candy and tobacco distributors, another important distribution channel, according to data for the year ended May 1991 from ICC Accutracks.

Recent additions include Hershey's Kisses with Almonds, introduced in August 1990, and Hershey's Chocolate Bar Flavor Puddings, now national following a late 1989 introduction. Hershey's chocolate drink in an aseptic package entered national distribution in January 1990.

In the $200 million retail refrigerated pudding category, Hershey's Chocolate Bar Flavor Puddings held a 12% share in 1990 before the brand was fully national, according to InfoScan. By the close of the first quarter of 1991, its share had expanded to 16%, it reported.

Caramello, a regional candy bar acquired in the Peter Paul/Cadbury purchase, was taken national in early 1990.

Hershey's purchase of the Ronzoni pasta business from Kraft General Foods moved Hershey Pasta Group in 1990 to a 25% share of the $1.01 billion retail pasta category, according to InfoScan. That was only three share points behind category leader Borden. Separately, Perfection pasta, a microwave pasta product, was withdrawn in 1990.

In the $160 million retail chocolate syrup/-toppings category, Hershey's genuine chocolate flavor syrup held a 43% share in 1990 and the new Chocolate Shoppe line a 3% share, according to InfoScan. In the $376 million baking chocolate, chip and cocoa category, Hershey held an 18% share, ahead of No. 3 Baker's (12.7%) but well behind Nestle/Toll House (51%).

CORPORATE PROFILE

After a decline in worldwide sales in 1990, Honda Motor Co. pledged it would go "back to the basics" in auto marketing. That means beefing up its limited product line while streamlining its operating divisions.

American Honda Motor Co., its U.S. subsidiary, posted record 1990 sales despite weakening in the compact segment.

U.S. unit sales of Honda in 1990 were 854,879 cars, including 138,384 of the luxury Acura models and 464,118 U.S.-built Accord and Civic cars, up 9.2%. This represented a 6.2% share of the total U.S. car/truck market, up from 5.4%, according to Automotive News.

Honda sold more than 950,000 [illegible]ars in North America, or more than two cars for every one sold in Japan. It's aiming for 1 million units in 1991.

Honda's Accord accounted for total sales of 417,179 imported and U.S.-built cars, up 15%. For the second straight year, Accord was the best-selling car in the U.S.

The Honda lineup for 1991 included the Accord station wagon introduced in December. Honda expects to sell about 30,000 of the U.S.-built wagons in this country this year.

Going into the 1992 model year, Honda promised to re-establish momentum in the marketplace with a variety of all-new models. A new CRX sports model will bow next spring, but the big news was a new "breakthrough" car engine to be offered in the 1992 Civic models. The engine is EPA-rated at 48 mpg in the city and 55 mpg highway.

Measured media figures for 1990 show the Honda Accord with the biggest share of the corporate ad dollar, with an expenditure of $41 million, down 8.9%. Civic models accounted for an estimated $33 million, up 26%, and the CRX was pegged at $10 million, up 104%.

The Acura line of luxury autos claimed total media expenditures of $100 million, up 14%. LNA/Arbitron numbers for specific Acura products show the top-of-the-line Legend accounting for about $47 million in spending, up 17.5%, followed by the Integra at $29 million, down 22.5%, and the specialty NSX sports model around $12 million.

The April debut of the 1992 Acura Vigor, priced between $22,000 and $27,000, is expected to give the line additional momentum. Vigor will go head-to-head with the entry-level ES 250 Lexus, Mercedes-Benz 190E, BMW 325i and Mitsubishi Diamante, among others.

For 1991, Acura advertising focused on the line's performance, elegance and reputation for customer satisfaction. For the the J.D. Power & Associates Customer Satisfaction Index.

Honda continued to maintain a small lead in the shrinking motorcycle market, finishing 1990 with a 29.4% share, up slightly from 29.3%. Nippon Gakki Co.'s Yamaha brand holds second place at 23.2%, followed by Harley-Davidson at 17.4%, Kawasaki Heavy Industries at 15.9% and Suzuki Motor Co. at 14.3%.

Honda motorcycles accounted for an estimated $6.6 million in media expenditures in 1990, up 10%. Honda scooters and ATVs (all-terrain vehicles) combined for another $4 million outlay.

Last month, Soichiro Honda, founder of Honda Motor Co., died at age 84.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Despite U.S. unit sales declines of more than 25% in the last two years, Hyundai Motor America continues to expand its limited product lineup while rebuilding a struggling dealer organization.

Hyundai Motor, the U.S. sales arm and largest subsidiary of South Korea's Hyundai Group, expects to add 75 dealers by yearend to boost its U.S. tally to 550.

Next month Hyundai will start selling its third nameplate, the Elantra, a European-style subcompact.

Priced below $10,000, the front-wheel-drive, four-door Elantra falls between Hyundai's low-end Excel, base-priced at $6,375, and Sonata, at $10,900. Hyundai's other car is the Scoupe sport coupe, introduced last fall.

Hyundai's U.S. car sales totaled 137,448 units for 1990, down 25%, led by sales of 100,590 Excel models. The upscale Sonata accounted for 29,840, followed by Scoupe at 7,018, from four months. Total sales gave Hyundai a 1% share of the U.S. car/truck market, down from 1.3%, according to Automotive News.

Hyundai spent $96.7 million on media advertising in 1990, down 2.7% from 1989. The biggest share was claimed by the upscale Sonata at $31.3 million, down 36.1% from 1989, its first full year on the market. Excel got $30 million, down 17.8%, and Scoupe, $26.1 million.

With advertising designed to redefine Hyundai as a multiproduct car marketer moving upscale, the Scoupe became the centerpiece of the repositioning program. Ads spoke of its dependability, durability, performance, styling and value.

TV advertising again accounted for the biggest share of media expenditures in 1990, reaching $73 million, including an estimated $9.5 million on syndicated and cable TV. Magazines accounted for $18 million, the largest print expenditure in company history.

Media estimates from LNA/Arbitron exclude $9.5 million spending by local dealers, mostly in newspapers, spot TV and outdoor.

CORPORATE PROFILE

IBM Corp. Chairman John F. Akers wrote in the company's annual report last January that 1990 "was a good year for IBM," with "encouraging" results boosted by "the strongest lineup of products and services in our history."

Then in March, the company stunned Wall Street by announcing its first-quarter earnings would be about half that anticipated by company followers. In June, IBM said its second-quarter earnings would be worse than even pessimistic company followers had thought.

In between came Mr. Akers' now-celebrated spleen-venting to company managers, leaked to the media, in which he lamented: "The fact that we're losing share makes me goddamn mad."

The world's biggest computer maker is struggling as never before. IBM has blamed the recession and the disruption of the Persian Gulf War for its woes, but industry followers—and Mr. Akers' tongue-lashing—suggest the company itself deserves a large part of the blame.

Among other things, IBM has taken longer than anticipated to introduce a new generation of mainframe computers.

The company has fared relatively well in midrange computers and its RS/6000 line of workstations has been growing rapidly. But in personal computers, the fastest-growing market segment, leaner and nimbler rivals have been cutting prices aggressively, effectively reducing the market to a commodity-like business.

For 1991, "we see essentially a drop off the cliff" for IBM's worldwide market share, said Randy Brophy, product manager for Yardstick, a Gartner Group market-share analysis publication.

Gartner forecasts a 21.9% worldwide hardware market share for IBM in 1991. That would be down from 23.5% last year and the lowest market share in IBM history, Mr. Brophy said.

In the cutthroat PC business, Gartner projects a 22.4% IBM market share this year, down from 23.5% in 1990.

IBM reduced ad spending last year, particularly in corporate advertising, where media outlays dropped 43% to $18.2 million. Spending on large computer systems also fell sharply, by 36% to $6.4 million.

Spending on PCs jumped, however, largely because of a $10.4 million media push for the PS/1, IBM's first computer designed for the home market since its ill-fated PC Jr.

IBM continues to move aggressively in the $25.7 billion PC market. In March, it used a heavy ad blitz to launch a notebook version of its successful PS/2, and in June it introduced a number of new PS/2 desktop models, including one based on Intel Corp.'s newest microprocessor, the 486SX.

In addition, the company is expected to promote vigorously the newest version of its operating software, OS/2, when it's introduced in the fourth quarter. Sales of the existing version have been hurt by the Microsoft Windows 3.0 software of Microsoft Corp., formerly IBM's partner in developing OS/2.

In perhaps its most significant recent move, IBM announced in July an agreement with rival Apple Computer to develop jointly a new PC standard to succeed the now incompatible IBM PC and Apple Macintosh. That arrangement isn't expected to bear fruit until late in the decade, however.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Sheraton Hotels may be in the right place at the right time. The ITT Corp. subsidiary, in a joint venture with other U.S. and Soviet interests, is to begin operating two hotels in Moscow by 1993, with further expansion planned for the Republic of Estonia.

The international chain, which attracted 47% of ITT's U.S. media advertising last year, is betting on such expansion and an improved world economy to rebuild operating profit, which fell 67% to $39 million in 1990.

Sheraton properties for the most part are owned independently of ITT and are operated by Sheraton under lease or management agreements. ITT's 1990 revenue from Sheraton was $832 million, up 6.4%. Under its lease/management agreements, Sheraton's revenues represented only 17.3% of $4.8 billion in sales generated by all hotels under its jurisdiction.

Although ITT's media expenditures rose 25.4% last year, the company spends about three times that budget in unmeasured areas, such as business-to-business advertising and direct mail.

In March, Sheraton introduced its "Sheraton Endless Weekend" program with reduced rates and other amenities for families. Last year it advertised "Sheraton Fundays" and "Summer Fundays" value-added promotions for mini-vacations. The company continued Sheraton Club International, its frequent traveler program. Much of this activity is outside media advertising.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Johnson & Johnson has shown with Tylenol how one can cut the cake many ways.

The multipurpose brand now represents a leading 30% of the $2.7 billion analgesic market and 40% of sales at Johnson & Johnson's huge U.S. consumer products segment. It spawned Tylenol Cold & Flu version last October, followed this April by Tylenol P.M., a sleep aid.

Added to late 1989 or early 1990 entries—Tylenol Cold, Tylenol Cold Night Time and Tylenol Allergy Sinus Medication—the Tylenol extensions helped push overall spending on the brand to $134.3 million, up 38%. The added-value entries have virtually rendered obsolete Tylenol "regular" strength, the old standby that received less than $100 in first-quarter 1991 ad support.

Media spending for the new Tylenol lines is expected to nearly double in 1991. An estimated $23 million in advertising will be spent on new Tylenol P.M. alone this year.

The Merck-Johnson & Johnson Consumer Pharmaceuticals Co. joint venture produced its first splash in 1990 with Mylanta antacid products. Mylanta drew $25.9 million in media spending, up 173%. The product held 11.7% of the $970 million antacid market in supermarkets and drugstores in April 1990.

Johnson & Johnson's position as leader in the $400 million baby toiletries market weakened as new competitors entered the field and No. 2 Mennen Co. and No. 3 S.C. Johnson & Son made aggressive pushes.

Johnson & Johnson over time has lost its lead in the baby bath segment, holding a 24% share to Mennen's 63%. And Mennen is creeping up on Johnson & Johnson's hold of the baby lotion segment, with a 40% share to Johnson & Johnson's 43%. Johnson & Johnson holds more than 50% of the $89 million baby shampoo market.

Johnson & Johnson's share of the general shampoo market slipped to 3.3% from 4.3% in 1989; ad spending fell 15.4% to $10 million.

The company leads the $88 million baby powder segment with a 63% share, and the $70 million baby oil segment with a 42% share.

Johnson & Johnson this April introduced Johnson's Baby Sunblock with a "No more tears" formula and an estimated $1 million in ad support. Spending for Sundown Sunblock plunged 93% to $216,000.

In 1990, Johnson & Johnson spent $24.6 million in measured media for its baby toiletries, up 17%. The company in 1990 ran spots using the tune "Take Good Care of My Baby" and positioning products for adult, child and infant use.

Johnson & Johnson jumped on the green bandwagon with advertising for o.b. non-applicator tampons. A $2 million effort helped boost Johnson & Johnson's unit share to 8.6% at the end of 1990, up 0.6 percentage points from the year before, even though ad spending was down 41.5%.

The Advanced Care Products division in March 1991 introduced Monistat 7 as an OTC yeast infection remedy, spending $15 million in its first three months.

Johnson & Johnson's McNeil Specialty Products Co. is waiting for FDA approval of its first product: sucralose, a non-caloric sweetener.

CORPORATE PROFILE

S.C. Johnson & Son is seeking a buyer for its personal-care lines, allowing the company to concentrate on items such as insect repellents and air fresheners.

The con , any reportedly almost eliminated its print ad spending for such products as Halsa and Agree shampoos, Edge shaving cream and Curel skin lotion in first quarter 1991.

Nevertheless, Johnson's Edge maintained its No. 1 spot in the $200 million shaving cream market, increasing its share to 32% in fall 1990 from 25.5% a year earlier, according to a Kidder, Peabody report. The growth came at the expense of Pfizer's Barbasol, with its share falling to 19.5% from 21.5%.

An early, wet spring and much flooding in early 1991 pushed up sales of insect repellents. In June, Johnson launched Off! Skintastic, which moisturizes skin with aloe while repelling bugs. A $2 million TV campaign, plus a sampling effort aiming to distribute 10 million packets, supported.

Also, Johnson anticipated higher sales for Ticks Off! for 1991. Distribution of the tick repellent, launched in 1990 on a limited basis, was stepped up where concern about Lyme disease is high. Johnson has a 50%-plus share of the $85 million insect repellent market, followed by Cutter, holding about 30%.

Other line extensions introduced since late 1990 include Raid Multi-Bug Trigger, Roach & Ant Trigger, Roach Baits and MAX Roach Baits; Off! Bug Barriers; Glade Potpourri Pump, Country Pottery, Plug-Ins; Pledge Dusters and Household Cleaners; Curel Sun Block SPF 8; Soft Sense Shave Gel Ultra Protection Formula and Skin Essentials; Fisher-Price Anitbacterial Liquid Soap, Wet 'n Dry Detangler and Baby Bath with Aloe; and Edge Aftershave.

In air fresheners, the company remained atop the $250 million category in 1990, on the basis of its 31% share from Glade Spray and 0.1% share for Glade II, according to Kidder, Peabody & Co. figures in late 1990. Its share has been sliding from 34% in fall 1989, as Renuzit from Bristol-Myers Squibb has advanced from 16% to 20%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Kellogg Co. devoted 1990 to getting its once-proud marketing machine back on track—and in early 1991, was rewarded with some early signs of success.

In deference to its sagging earnings and depressed market share, Kellogg cut media spending 5.5% in 1990 after beefing up ad spending by 42% over the previous five-year span.

Although 1990 dollar sales rose 11.4% to $5.2 billion, total U.S. cereal volume declined. Kellogg cut new-product activity, headquarters staff and expansion plans to compensate for the surprise drop.

Kellogg last year did the unusual. It began running ads comparing its cereals to competing brands. It test-marketed a product. And it focused anew on children's cereals.

The marketer took on comparative advertising for its Just Right cereal, hiking spending 59.9% to $19.9 million to position it against General Mills' Total.

While Chairman-CEO William LaMothe told Wall Street not to expect too much from the company in the near term, Kellogg went back to basics. Its new cereals, Bigg Mixx and Cinnamon Mini Buns, were aimed at children. Ad campaigns, like the $21.4 million spent for the first full year of Kenmei rice bran, focused again on good taste and basic nutrition, eschewing health claims.

Conscious that consumers were turned off by oat bran's health claims, Kellogg returned to promoting cereal as a good-tasting breakfast. It maintained spending for the good-taste advertising of Cracklin' Oat Bran but not for the "serious" Common Sense oat bran, whose spending fell 86% to $3.7 million. Frosted Mini Wheats' spending rose 28.2%, while its unsweetened cousin, Shredded Wheat Squares, watched its budget fall to $3.2 million from $15.8 million.

The company also acknowledged the FDA's stricter stance toward product claims and changed the controversial psyllium-based Heartwise cereal to Fiberwise. Kellogg has battled with the state of Texas, which claims Heartwise isn't a food but an unapproved drug, and is still awaiting the FDA's blessing on the safe use of psyllium in cereal.

At the same time, Kellogg was taking a page out of General Mills' book. Kellogg's most recent new item, Double Dip Crunch, enters the all-family, taste-oriented cereal market General Mills carved out in the 1980s. Double Dip Crunch, a honey-and-nut sweetened version of Crispix, began reaching supermarkets in August.

Kellogg's moves seemed to help stem its share losses. The company's leading share of the $7.2 billion ready-to-eat cereal market fell from 41.4% of pound volume in 1988 to 39.7% in 1989 and 37.5% last year. But in the first quarter of 1991, Kellogg's share swung back to 38.8%.

The company's most serious threat last year was the booming market for private-label cereals, most produced by Ralston Purina Co. Private label expanded its pound share of the category to 6.5% in 1990, up from 3.6% three years earlier.

Private-label products, marketed under a supermarket's own brand name, are largely aimed at Kellogg staples Raisin Bran, Corn Flakes and Sugar Frosted Flakes. Reflecting that, Kellogg boosted spending behind its core brands: Media spending for Corn Flakes was up 15.9% to $27.7 million, Sugar Frosted Flakes up 6.1% to $32.5 million and Rice Krispies up 4.9% to $19.3 million.

Kellogg dished out big spending increases for its non-cereal products. Spending behind the Pop-Tarts line rose 114% to $28.2 million. Pop-Tarts has 72% of the toaster-pastry market. Clearly, Kellogg continues to have growth expectations for portable breakfasts as a cereal-and-milk alternative; it also rolled national Nutri-Grain Cereal Bars.

Similarly, spending for the Eggo frozen waffle line rose 35% to $15.8 million. Eggo, which has boosted its share of market to 56.7% last year from 43.7% in 1987, added two new products: Eggo Mini's and Special K frozen waffles.

In December, Kellogg named 34-year company veteran Arnold Langbo president-chief operating officer, finally filling the vacancy created when the company ousted Horst Schroeder 15 months earlier. Mr. Langbo was president of Kellogg's international division and is expected to take over from Mr. LaMothe when he retires the end of this year.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Wal-Mart Stores may have passed Kmart Corp. last year, but to Kmart the retail war is just beginning.

Store modernization, specifically directed at the encroachment of customer-friendly Wal-Mart into its markets, is one of Kmart's key strategies.

It's part of a "renewal" program at Kmart that includes acquisition and growth in the specialty retail area, investment in retail automation, and focused advertising and promotions.

The nation's No. 2 retailer increased measured media spending by nearly $44 million in 1990, including a 56% increase in magazine spending. Last March, the retailer signed a multimillion-dollar magazine ad deal with Newsweek and nine Meredith Corp. titles.

Price cuts have slowed profits for two years, but the cuts are paying off in increased sales volume. Kmart eked out a 1.5% gain in profits in 1990, when a one-time restructuring charge of $422 million is folded into 1989 results.

Aided by the ongoing $2.3 billion interior image overhaul, Kmart plans to have 2,500 new-look stores by 1995.

Earlier this year, Kmart announced it will be expanding its project with Little Caesars Enterprises. By May 1992, 400 Little Caesars restaurants will be open within newly refurbished Kmart stores.

In early 1991, Kmart embarked on a multifaceted environmental campaign that includes tagging and promoting environmentally compatible products, educating employees and customers about products Kmart sells and their environmental impact.

In July, the company opened a Kmart Super Center in Medina, Ohio. The 150,000-square-foot store features general merchandise combined with a full-line supermarket, deli service counter and produce section. Kmart had earlier experimented with food sales in joint ventures but this store is the first entirely owned and operated by Kmart. Two more are planned.

Kmart's specialty retail sales were up 40% largely because of full-year results from PACE Membership Warehouse. Same-store sales were up 5.2% vs. 1.8% in 1989. PACE contributed $2.3 billion, up from only $383 million; Builders Square added $1.89 billion, up 5.6%; Pay Less drugstores, $1.64 billion, up 10.8%, and Waldenbooks, $1.1 billion, up 7.3%.

Kmart cut media spending 83.1% on Waldenbooks, boosted media 69.6% on Builders Square, and backed its new Sports Authority, with $3.2 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

As part of its far-ranging restructuring program, Kroger Co. decentralized its ad department this year to better tool advertising to regional food preferences.

The food chain, which incurred heavy debt in fending off two takeover attempts in 1988, has been streamlining operations and selling off non-core properties.

Decentralizing its marketing has allowed each of the 11 marketing regions to pick its own agency, primarily for TV advertising. The marketing areas already controlled newspaper advertising—an estimated 80% of stores' overall ad spending.

Success in retaining the account has been spotty for Campbell-Mithun-Esty, which has kept only the Nashville, Tenn., mid-Atlantic and Indianapolis regions. Cincinnati, Dallas, Houston, Atlanta and Columbus, Ohio, have moved their accounts.

The other regions have yet to review the account. Ad budgets now are based on regional sales.

Broadcast advertising, virtually all in spot TV, has been in transition. It slumped from 62% of total Kroger Food Store brand spending in 1989 to 44% last year, or $21.7 million, according to LNA/-Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

At the close of 1990, the company owned 1,255 supermarkets, up 1.7% from 1989. Last year, it purchased 29 Great Scott! supermarkets in Michigan.

Kroger was ranked No. 2 in sales nationally for 1990 by Supermarket News, behind American Stores Co., which had $22 billion in sales.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Levi Strauss & Co. is trying to offset faded denim sales by strengthening marketing efforts to develop, or revive, brand loyalty among men over 25, women, Hispanics and kids—groups outside its core customer base of young men.

The company attributed its record sales in fiscal 1990 to its international business and to the success of its Dockers brand, a $600 million non-jeans line of pants and other casual apparel that appeals to aging baby boomers.

While ad spending for Levi's flagship 501 jeans has remained constant around $20 million a year since 1985, the company has hiked spending for Dockers and for jeans outside the young men's market.

Levi's spent close to $2 million to advertise Dockers on Super Bowl Sunday alone and is believed to be spending a total of $15 million to $20 million on advertising for Dockers this year.

Dockers will get strong competition this fall from rival VF Corp., which is launching a similar line of Timber Creek men's casualwear under the Wrangler brand umbrella and sold in discount stores. The Dockers line is sold primarily in department stores.

Dockers led the 91 million-unit men's casual pants market with an 11.2% share, up from 8.3% in 1989.

While Dockers gained share, Levi's has lost share in the overall jeans market, where it was still the brand leader in 1990 with a 19% unit market share, down from 21%.

To stop that market share slide, Levi's in 1991 broke its first campaign in two years for women's denim, and its first national Spanish-language jeans campaign, in addition to its advertising for 501s. The 501s effort again centers on a TV campaign directed by Spike Lee that shows "real" people in their 501s, plus special spots on the East Coast.

Levi's hasn't had much luck with its sporadic attempts at marketing to women, and the company has only a small share of the women's jeans category, dominated by Lee and Gitano Group.

Its new $12 million print and out-of-home campaign pairs the Levi's brand with Matisse-inspired renderings of the female form in blue jeans.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Loews Corp. worked over its cigarette lines in 1990, particularly its important Kent brand, and entered the industry's value-price market with Heritage. In the process, its media spending for cigarettes shot up 36.9% to $86 million.

Loews' Lorillard division remained the fourth-largest tobacco marketer in the U.S. Overall, Lorillard's market share dropped to 7.6% from 8% in 1989, returning it to its 1988 standing, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat, First Securities. Mr. Maxwell said the company's share was affected adversely by its decision to reduce incentives to the trade starting in late 1989.

Its full-price brands, which mimicked an industrywide category decline by dropping 4.4% in unit sales, accounted for 7.6% of overall market vs. 8% in 1989. Sales in the value-price brands dropped 3% as Lorillard's share dipped to 7.7% of the segment from 8%.

Eyeing the value-price segment, Lorillard introduced Heritage at midyear in Lights Filter King and Lights Filter 100s versions. Supported by $10.9 million in media spending and heavy couponing, Heritage achieved a 0.1% share of the overall market.

The company's two franchise brands—Newport and Kent—are in the declining full-price category. They accounted for 61% and 24%, respectively, of Lorillard sales in 1990.

Newport, the No. 5 cigarette among all categories and the third-place menthol, remained flat in 1990 at a 4.7% share despite a 7.4% growth in media advertising.

Advertising for Kent, which finished the year with a 1.8% share, down from 2.1% in 1989, got a 63.7% boost in media spending, a good part of that coming in the fourth quarter to combat a campaign from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., which positioned its value-price Sterling smoke against full-price Kent.

Kent got a new campaign, bearing the theme "Portraits of pleasure," and redesigned packaging. True is undergoing reevaluation, according to the company, which has been unable to stop market share erosion that slips about 0.1 percentage point per year. The brand finished 1990 at 0.8%, down from 0.9%.

The company this May introduced value-price Style into test in New Orleans and Hartford, Conn., via Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising.

CNA Insurance ranked the eighth-largest insurance organization in the U.S. in premium income, boosted media spending 13%.

Loews owns 97% of Bulova, which introduced two lines last year, the Token fashion watch and Sportstime, a line of sports watches licensed by the NFL.

A highly targeted print and cable TV campaign supporting Bulova watches drew spending of $876,000 in 1990, up 34.6%. The company has begun a trade campaign to relaunch its Accutron line, to be followed by consumer print advertising in fourth quarter 1991.

Loews Hotels spent $1.7 million in media to advertise its 14 hotels and resorts, up 77% from 1989.

CORPORATE PROFILE

R.H. Macy & Co. is trying to boost sales with a new TV ad campaign as it works to reduce debt.

The recession hurt sales and earnings. Macy's reported sales for its fiscal year, which ended Aug. 3, fell 7% to $6.76 billion.

After a string of big losses, Macy's took out an ad in Women's Wear Daily in December 1990 to respond to rumors about the company's financial position. The ad drew a contrast between Macy's and Campeau Corp., the retailer that filed for bankruptcy protection, claiming Macy's had ample cash to meet its obligations.

In May, Macy's reported a $100.9 million loss for its third quarter and attributed the drop to the sluggish economy, the cost of investing in new technology and increased marketing efforts.

Some improvement began in the following quarter as sales rose 0.2%, the retailer's first quarterly sales gain after seven consecutive declines.

Last February, Macy's hired its first outside agency, Lintas:New York, for a corporate TV campaign promoting Macy's as a brand name. Macy's broke the campaign in April in the New York metro area; theme is "The magic of Macy's."

Macy's plans to roll out the campaign to all its markets and expects to be spending at the annual rate of $150 million by next spring. Macy's spent only $13.4 million in calendar 1990 on TV.

The move to increase TV came because "we know people aren't reading newspapers like they used to. But our audience does watch television," said Macy's Chairman-CEO Edward Finkelstein.

CORPORATE PROFILE

For Marriott Corp., 1990 wasn't a very good year. Loaded down with $3.5 billion in debt, the fast-food and hotel operator initiated a construction moratorium on lodging for the elderly and hotels, and moved ahead on its plan to get out of restaurants.

The reason for the reversal of fortune at Marriott and its rapid scrambling is debt. Despite 1986 changes in federal tax laws that reduced the appeal of limited partnerships, Marriott continued to build hotels until 1989, when both the real estate and credit markets crashed.

While the company continues to sell off hotels and restaurants, continuing operations pulled strong ad support of $51.1 million, up 20%. That spending doesn't include media support for Roy Rogers Restaurants, sold in January 1990 to Hardee's Food Systems.

At yearend, the company had 223 Marriott hotels, resorts and suite-hotels in 17 countries. Its moderate-price hotel chain, Courtyard by Marriott, included 178 hotels at yearend. There were 163 Residence Inns and 75 budget-price Fairfield Inns.

Sales of such restaurant properties as Bickford's Family Restaurants and Howard Johnson's continued during the year, but Marriott ended 1990 with more than 400 still under its wing.

Despite the company's growing financial pressures, it upped ad spending for its Marriott Hotels and Residence Inns. Spending for the Marriott brand jumped 38.3% to $27.6 million, while ad spending for Residence Inns jumped 51%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Mars has aggressively built share in its candy/snack and pet food markets even as it cut media spending for the third consecutive year.

Measured media support was up last year at the M&M/Mars candy and snack division, but off at the Kal Kan Foods pet food, Uncle Ben's rice and Dove International frozen novelties units.

Mars is a major sponsor of the 1992 Olympics, and spending on event-related promotions and sponsorships is likely to shift spending from media in '92.

M&M/Mars, No. 2 to Hershey Foods Corp. in the $8.7 billion (wholesale) U.S. confectionary business, has closed the gap in sales through candy and tobacco wholesalers, though it still trails Hershey in sales through supermarkets.

For the year ended May 1991, Mars is credited with a 38% share of chocolate product sales through candy and tobacco wholesalers, a 2.5 share point gain over the same period a year earlier, according to ICC Accutracks. Hershey held a 39.6% share.

In supermarkets during calendar 1990, M&M/Mars, with a 34.5% share of retail chocolate product sales, trailed Hershey by 8 share points, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan service.

Though M&M/Mars spent heavily in 1990 on PB Max, a new peanut butter-based product, two of its biggest hits were line extensions, Peanut Butter Snickers and Milky Way Dark, which ranked 16th and 17th in wholesale sales, according to Accutracks.

Dove chocolate bars were launched this year in selected markets as a premium entry in the $1.2 billion solid chocolate bar market. Dove International has introduced Snickers, Three Musketeers and Milky Way ice cream bars. The Snickers ice cream bar quickly became a top 10 seller in the crowded frozen novelties market, according to Nielsen Marketing Research.

Kal Kan boosted its retail share for the third consecutive year in 1990, to 12.5%, according to Wheat, First Securities. Sales gains elevated Kal Kan Foods into third place among pet food marketers—behind Ralston Purina Co. and Nestle—regaining a position it lost in 1987, reported Wheat First.

In a major broadening of the Pedigree and Whiskas lines, Kal Kan in 1991 is spending $50 million to establish a new superpremium-price line extension, Pedigree Expert Diet dog food and Whiskas Expert Diet cat food.

Mars' Uncle Ben's unit saw retail sales of its dry rice and rice mixes slip 2% in 1990, while its leading share of the dry rice/rice mix category was 24%, according to InfoScan data. Category sales were up 4.5% in 1990 to $863.9 million.

Uncle Ben's this year is trying to take its high-quality image into other supermarket sections. It's testing in Denver a line of add-meat chunky vegetable sauces that can be poured over pasta or rice.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., which is looking at Universal Pictures to provide the software for its growing consumer electronics products, has found the studio's fortunes in a slide.

A sharp drop in profits has been the immediate effect of its $6.13 billion purchase of MCA Inc. last December. In fiscal 1991 first quarter ended June 30, net earnings fell 34% on sales growth of 12.3%. The previous-year period did not include MCA.

Universal Pictures, a former MCA unit, ended 1990 ranked third in film rentals with a 14% share, down from No. 2 at 17% in 1989. Through July 1991 it slipped to fifth at 11.8% for its 14 first-run releases, according to Variety. "Back to the Future III" drew the most ad support last year with $9.5 million.

Local attendance was boosted this spring at Universal Studios Hollywood from a price cut allowed California residents, although overall attendance is down as it is at Universal Studios Florida, open since May 1990.

Matsushita's U.S. operation, Matsushita Electric Co. of America, spent $22 million in media on its Panasonic brand, up 32%. The brand's new wet/dry shaver attracted $3.8 million of that.

CORPORATE PROFILE

May Department Stores Co. in 1990 found a way to generate steady sales growth—leave discounting and specialty operations to others and concentrate on the higher-growth, higher-return department store business.

May, reduced to a middle-market department store operation, so far has weathered the recession better than the retail industry. During the fourth quarter of 1990, May's sales improved 7.8%. It finished the year up 7.5%.

However, the chain's returns softened in fiscal first quarter 1991, ended in May, as earnings dipped 5% on a 5.8% growth in revenues. Same-store sales were off 2.5% for department stores and up 1.8% at Payless ShoeSource outlets.

The chain has enhanced growth by divesting Loehmann's specialty stores and Caldor discount chain. Venture Stores was spun off to stockholders last November. The three units had collective sales declines of 0.7% and 19.9% in 1988 and 1989, respectively. Venture returns are not in May's yearend returns.

Continuing to build its department store base, the company bought Thalhimer Bros. for $317 million from Carter Hawley Hale Stores in November 1990. The 26-unit chain gives May its first entry in Virginia and the Carolinas. May sold five Lord & Taylor stores in Florida to Dayton Hudson Corp.'s Mervyn's unit.

The company continued to build Payless ShoeSource, formerly named Volume Shoe Corp. As of June 1991, May operated 3,041 Payless stores in 47 states, an 8.6% increase since 1989.

Spending in May's primary ad medium, newspapers, rose 5.4% in 1990 for continuing operations. Print is handled in-house at each of the chains. Outside agencies work on broadcast, with two units, Famous-Barr and Payless, having agencies of record for broadcast only. Payless is the company's biggest user of network and spot TV, virtually its only media. Payless reshuffled allocations for the two media, with spot declining 16.4% to $9.2 million, while network increased 32.7% to $6.9 million.

Media rose 30% at L&T to $39 million and 35% at Filene's to $27 million, but dipped 8.8% to $31 million at Hecht's.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Mazda Motor Corp. last month unveiled its luxury car division, Amati, that will put the carmaker in league with the pricey Acura, Lexus and Infiniti lines of its Japanese competitors and the high-end European imports.

Amati, to be sold from a separate dealer network from Mazda, will offer two sedans priced in the $25,000 to $45,000 range beginning in 1994. A five-agency short list will compete for the reported $50 million account.

Mazda Motors of America, the U.S. subsidiary, gained share points in the U.S. in 1990 by selling 349,677 cars and trucks, including 72,657 of the U.S.-built 626 and MX-6 models, up 2.3%. This resulted in a 2.5% share of the U.S. car/-truck market, up from 2.3%. Among Japanese importers, Mazda ranked fourth behind Toyota's leading 7.2% share, Honda at 6.2% and Nissan at 4.3%.

Mazda actually sold 455 fewer cars in 1990 than in 1989, as sales of light pickup trucks came to 123,965 units, up 7.1%.

Expansion-minded Mazda called off long-term negotiations for a joint venture in Europe with Ford Motor Co., which owns 23.4% of Mazda. The Ford Probe is produced at the Mazda manufacturing plant in Flat Rock, Mich.

Mazda's intermediate 626 (both domestic and imported models) was the company's best seller, with sales of 64,242 units, up 21.7%. The 626 accounted for $22.5 million in media, a 61% boost over 1989, with about $17 million in network and spot TV and the rest magazines.

The MX-5 Miata convertible continued its sales success and accounted for 35,944 units, up 56% from 1989, its first year. The Miata got $23 million in media.

Mazda launched the Navajo sport-utility vehicle in a multimedia campaign that included $18.4 million in media, mostly TV and magazines. In its first year, 3,409 units were sold.

The Mazda Protege subcompact got $8 million in media backing, same as in 1989; the 323 subcompact, $13.5 million, down 13.5%; and the top-of-the-line 929, $7.8 million, down 38%.

Mazda in the next nine months is expected to introduce the new MX-3 coupe and replacements for the RX-7, 626, MX-6 and 929.

Mazda advertising for the 1991 models, themed, "Mazda. It just feels right," dropped the "Kansei engineering" subtheme that underscored the company's vehicle design philosophy in 1990.

Mazda increased its commitment to sports event marketing, including sponsorship of marathons and a car racing team at LeMans. This month it also inked a three-year $96 million cross-media package with Time Warner.

Newly installed Chief Operating Officer Clark Vitulli, an executive recruited from Chrysler, took charge of the two just-merged units, MMA (East) and MMA (Central).

He also reorganized the new company into three main groups: sales, marketing and product planning, and merged service and parts into a single unit reporting directly to him.

CORPORATE PROFILE

McDonald's Corp. adopted a new ad theme—"Food, folks and fun"—in May 1990, but within a year it was gone, replaced by the more sober "McDonald's today."

Along with the theme, much of the fun has gone out of the U.S. business for McDonald's, the result of changing eating habits and of a recession that put the squeeze on the whole fast-food industry.

In the U.S., sales of its 8,576 restaurants rose 2%, but that was lower than its rate of expansion, since its number of domestic units increased 3.7% during the year. Average sales for each domestic unit rose only 1.7% to $1.65 million, less than the hike in menu prices, analysts said.

In short, McDonald's sales went backwards, as did its market share, slipping to 34.4% of the hamburger/sandwich market in 1990 from 36.2%, according to Nation's Restaurant News.

McDonald's has jettisoned its traditional conservatism toward change to take on a broad range of competitors—from the mom-and-pops to the microwave.

In test are large pizzas for dinner and single-serve pizzas for lunch, pasta dishes, a line of turkey, ham and cold cut subs, skinless roasted chicken, a grilled chicken breast sandwich, barbecued chicken wings and a concept called McExtras, in which staples such as milk, butter and eggs are offered in restaurants.

Nationally, a Grilled Steak sandwich has been offered as a limited-time addition, and new menu staples include Breakfast Burrito, cold cereals (from General Mills) and Chicken Fajitas.

Perhaps McDonald's most important menu addition was the national introduction this April of the McLean Deluxe, a 91% fat-free hamburger meant to improve the chain's nutritional profile.

The company is rethinking operations, leading it a year ago to open the Golden Arch Cafe in Hartsville, Tenn. The cafe is very un-McDonald's: it offers meat loaf and country-fried steak. The idea—to find a restaurant concept for markets too small to support a regular McDonald's—has not produced the results expected. It's begun building double drive-through restaurants that offer a limited menu and no interior seating.

To counter the recession, McDonald's instituted several Value Menus with permanent price reductions. Ads have emphasized price reductions and menu additions rather than image, as the ad budget has become more localized; network TV spending declined 8.4%, while spot TV spending rose 3.3%, syndicated programming buys jumped 60.9% and cable TV spending rose 21.8%.

McDonald's has cut back on promotional marketing. A major game promotion tied to the movie "Dick Tracy" and another, "McMillions," a joint promotion with NBC in September 1990, failed to revive sales. There were no major national promotions through the first half of 1991.

Changes even were made in its ad agency lineup. DDB Needham Worldwide was given responsibility for advertising to teenagers in November 1990. That represents a $55 million chunk of the $300 million national account. Needham had been McDonald's sole national agency until it was dropped and replaced in 1981 by Leo Burnett USA, which continues to handle the rest.

The most controversial change was its decision to phase out use of polystyrene plastic-foam packaging in favor of coated paper. The company is switching to paper because it said discussions with the Environmental Defense Fund had convinced it paper takes less space in overcrowded landfills.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Many advertisers fled the airwaves in January when the bombs began raining on Baghdad, but Mobil Corp. and the rest of the oil industry were especially hasty in beating a retreat.

Mobil's first-quarter 1991 media spending was down 54% from one year earlier; it's believed spending resumed usual patterns at the approach of summer.

Following the lead of Chevron and Texaco's Central region, last April Mobil instituted same-price cash or credit policies for retail gasoline purchases.

It has expaned a motor oil recycling program to include 550 Mobil stations that accept used oil and more than 1,800 others that have joined an educational effort urging do-it-yourselfers to dispose of motor oil responsibly.

Mobil is upgrading its stations to its Pegasus 21 prototype that features self-service pumps, electronic payment systems and a minimart. It's also experimenting with 12 Express Lube outlets.

In 1990, Mobil, with 9,000 stations, was the fourth-largest gasoline marketer with a 6.61% share of the 114.6 billion gallons purchased, according to the Lundberg Survey, which ranked Shell Oil Co. No. 1 with a 7.92% share, followed by Amoco Corp., 7.48%, and Exxon Corp., 6.85%.

While gasoline marketers in general are jumping on the green bandwagon, Mobil Chemical Co., marketer of Hefty trash bags, has jumped off. It's now gun-shy about making environmental claims after raising the ire of the FTC and seven state attorneys general over degradability claims. Mobil settled the fraud and deceptive-advertising suits with the states and paid a $250,000 fine but admitted no wrongdoing.

Mobil says it won't make green claims until national standards are set. Mobil was true to its word when in April it introduced Hefty Steel-Sak trash and tall kitchen garbage bags, using 30% less material. Mobil backed its Hefty line with $14.4 million in advertising, down 10.6%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

With patent protection for aspartame ending in the U.S. in December 1992, Monsanto Co. has begun an extensive campaign to build consumer loyalty for its NutraSweet brand.

The product's eponymous subsidiary, NutraSweet Co., also is spending heavily to introduce a second potentially big product line, the fat substitute Simplesse. Just as Equal tabletop sugar substitute was the consumer "taste" test for NutraSweet when it entered the market 10 years ago, a frozen dairy dessert line called Simple Pleasures is Simplesse's taste vehicle.

Backing for both substitutes claimed 62%, or $44.6 million, of Monsanto's total media spending in 1990, up from 58%. The subsidiary accounted for 10% of Monsanto sales and 20% of operating income in 1990.

bicides, pesticides and fertilizers, and advertises the products mostly in farm journals—part of unmeasured media in Ad Age's ad totals for Monsanto. Its carpets and fibers received sizable consumer ad support, last year reaching $13.4 million in media, up 21.8%.

G.D. Searle & Co., its pharmaceutical company, developed aspartame and laxative Metamucil, among others. Searle retained foreign marketing rights to the top-selling laxative when it sold the product to Procter & Gamble Co. in 1985. The foreign rights were turned over to P&G in January 1991.

NutraSweet enters its critical new age with a new agency, Chiat/Day/Mojo, winner of the $35 million U.S. sweetener account in December 1990 from Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago. O&M kept the $15 million overseas NutraSweet business and the estimated $10 million Equal tabletop sweetener account. Several months later, O&M, which also had retained the Simplesse business, lost it to FCB/Leber Katz Partners. Chiat's first big effort was a $25 million marketing campaign that broke this May.

Monsanto needs to get the consumer to insist on NutraSweet. But Coca-Cola Co. and PepsiCo, which are 80% of the market for NutraSweet, can produce their own when the patent expires. Even if they don't, they are likely to get a better price from Monsanto or another producer.

NutraSweet sells for about $90 a pound in the U.S. It is about $25 a pound in countries without patent protection. Prices dropped 6% worldwide in 1990.

The company is broadening its use of NutraSweet with two products in test: Desserve, a line of reduced-sugar, lower-calorie desserts, salads and sandwiches marketed through Mrs. Fields Inc. outlets, and tabletop Sugar Delight, a blend of 1% NutraSweet sweetener and 99% sugar. The plain sugar sweetener market is much larger than the market for substitute sweeteners.

Simplesse currently faces competition from Pfizer's Litesse. Both P&G's olestra and Kraft General Foods' Trailblazer await FDA approval, and A.E. Staley Co.'s Stellar, remains under development.

This August the FDA extended the use of Simplesse from frozen goods to a wide range of products, including mayonnaise and baked goods.

Simple Pleasures Light frozen dessert, introduced this spring, became the first product made with both Simplesse and NutraSweet. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co. also launched a Simplesse-based frozen dessert into its dipping stores nationwide.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Montgomery Ward & Co., the ninth-largest U.S. retailer, has stuck to its game plan of opening 15 to 20 new stores per year, while adding more national brand names to its merchandise mix and aggressively promoting its separate specialty store formats.

Ward's, unlike many retailers in today's market, isn't under a cloud of heavy debt. Though it became highly leveraged in a 1988 buyout led by managers including Chairman-CEO Bernard Brennan, that debt has been reduced to $600 million from more than $2 billion.

Since early 1990, Ward's has added 30 new full-line stores, divided into its four major specialty formats of Electric Avenue, Home Ideas, the Apparel Store and Auto Express.

Subspecialties have been added to the major specialty formats, including the Kids Store within most of its Apparel Store locations and Gold 'N Gems jewelry shops attached to about half the Apparel Store outlets.

A new subspecialty window furnishings store called Window Ideas is being tested within some of Ward's Home Ideas shops.

The bulk of Ward's advertising is in newspapers, which got a 22.2% increase, with most spent on midweek and Sunday newspaper inserts, handled in-house. Newspaper growth was a media reapportionment, primarily from spot TV allocations, which dropped 26%.

In late 1990, Ward's indicated it would increase its spot TV by reviewing its broadcast account, which had been at Saffer Advertising for two years. After a protracted review, the $25 million account went to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles.

This June, Ward's surprised many saying it planned to re-enter the catalog business. In 1985, the company had closed the money-losing operation that generated $1.5 billion in revenue.

This time, Ward's won't have its own catalog but will work closely with about 20 existing specialty catalog marketers in a joint marketing venture.

Former general catalog President Richard Bergel was named to head the new operations; most recently, he was president of store operations.

In May, Ward's announced a new national marketing partnership with Thrifty Rent-A-Car System, primarily aimed at building the retailer's credit card usage. Thrifty will add outlets in most Ward's Auto Express stores. Ward's promoted the Thrifty connection in newspaper ads and direct mail.

In its stores, Ward's continues to add national brands, including licensing Maytag Corp.'s Admiral name for a line of private-label appliances, and Bell & Howell's name for a line of private-label camcorders and consumer electronics.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Nestle SA, the world's largest food company, in January 1991 folded its scattered U.S. food business into a holding company, Nestle USA, run by President-CEO Timm Crull, who came from the same post at Nestle's Carnation Co. It projected 1991 sales would rise above $7 billion.

Nestle USA this March sifted 15 companies into six units: Nestle Beverage Co. includes coffee, tea, juice and Coffee-mate; Nestle Food Co. oversees the food business; Nestle Frozen/Refrigerated Food Co. manages Stouffer frozen entrees, the Contadina refrigerated line and ice cream; and Nestle Brands, The Foodservice Co., runs Nestle USA's institutional food sales. Stouffer Hotels, Resorts and Restaurants and Wine World Estates, a California wine marketer, remain basically unchanged.

Nestle USA in April 1991 consolidated all media buying at McCann-Erickson Worldwide after soliciting media proposals from all its agencies. McCann set up a unit, Comcord Group, to service the account. McCann three years ago had only about $5 million in Nestle business.

Nestle USA was comparatively quiet on the new-product front. Nestle Beverage in April 1991 introduced Hills Bros. Perfect Balance, the first half-regular, half-decaffeinated coffee available nationally. Nestle Food this month introduced nationally Libby's Diner, a shelf-stable microwave line closely resembling Dial Corp.'s Lunch Bucket.

Nestle Frozen/Refrigerated Food in May 1991 voluntarily dropped "fresh" from the label of Contadina Fresh refrigerated pasta sauces after meeting with the FDA.

It boosted chocolate and confection media spending in 1990 by 39.2% to $38.4 million, largely reflecting the purchase of Butterfinger from RJR Nabisco.

The company cut spending on pet foods by 17.2% to $28 million. Nestle's Carnation, ranked No. 2 in the $5.7 billion supermarket pet food market, rose from a 13.9% share to 14.4% in 1990, compared with leader Ralston's 26.4%, according to John C. Maxwell Jr. of Wheat, First Securities.

Nestle inched up media spending by 1.9% to $38 million for Stouffer frozen foods, which have been under assault from ConAgra's Healthy Choice and other brands that hype nutrition.

Nestle coffee brands received $31 million in media in 1990, down 10.2%. That reduction is the result of Nestle slashing spending by 92.5% to $651,300 on Nescafe; Nestle restaged the brand in early 1991 as Nescafe Coffee Crystals, borrowing an idea from Procter & Gamble Co.'s Folgers. Nestle holds 33.3% of the instant market, second to Kraft General Foods' 36.3%.

Nestle Beverage is testing ground coffee versions of Nescafe and Taster's Choice and Nescafe Mocca Cooler iced coffee. The latter might get subsumed by a joint venture between Nestle USA's parent and Coca-Cola Co. to market ready-to-drink iced coffee and tea worldwide.

Cosmair, the U.S. marketing arm of France's L'Oreal that is majority-owned by Nestle, increased media spending in 1990 by 17.4% to $118.1 million.

The mainstay L'Oreal line received $73.1 million in media spending, up 19.2%, much of that increase from the $9.1 million spent supporting new L'Oreal shampoo. Cosmair's other major product line, Lancome, increased spending 11.5% to $23.6 million.

Cosmair's chairman, Jacques Correze, 79, died in June 1991 shortly after he resigned following disclosure that the U.S. Justice Department was reviewing his pro-Nazi activities during World War II. Lindsay Owen-Jones, L'Oreal's chairman-ceo, added the title of Cosmair chairman.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Project Dolphin, the code name for a restructuring of News Corp.'s massive $7.6 billion debt load initiated last fall, may have prevented the collapse of Rupert Murdoch's global media empire.

Recessions in the company's three primary markets—the U.S., U.K. and Australia—added to Mr. Murdoch's headaches in the past year.

The company that built a mountain of debt throughout the 1980s by paying top dollar to acquire such media properties as TV Guide and 20th Century Fox Film Corp., is now focusing on lowering its debt and operating its core businesses.

That strategy was underscored by the sale in June of eight consumer magazines and the Daily Racing Form to K-III Holdings for $650 million. The sale reduced News Corp.'s U.S. magazine holdings to TV Guide, which it refused to sell, and the money-losing Mirabella, which K-III refused to buy.

Soon after announcing the K-III sale, News Corp. ceased publication of the U.K. edition of Mirabella and said it was open to discussing the sale of other U.K. titles. In August, it sold New Woman, Car and Supercar & Classics to U.K. publisher EMAP for $17 million. Mr. Murdoch continues to publish the U.K edition of TV Guide and Sky Magazine, jointly owned by News Corp. and Hachette S.A.

The U.S. TV Guide has been battered by a prolonged ad page and circulation slide. In July, it lowered its rate base 3.8% to 15.2 million, citing slumping single-copy sales. One reason for the decline at newsstand could be the lack of ad spending: Media support totaled just $4.2 million for the magazine, down from $18.7 million and a shadow of 1988's $36.5 million. The drop was a result of the magazine ending a long-running barter arrangement with local TV stations.

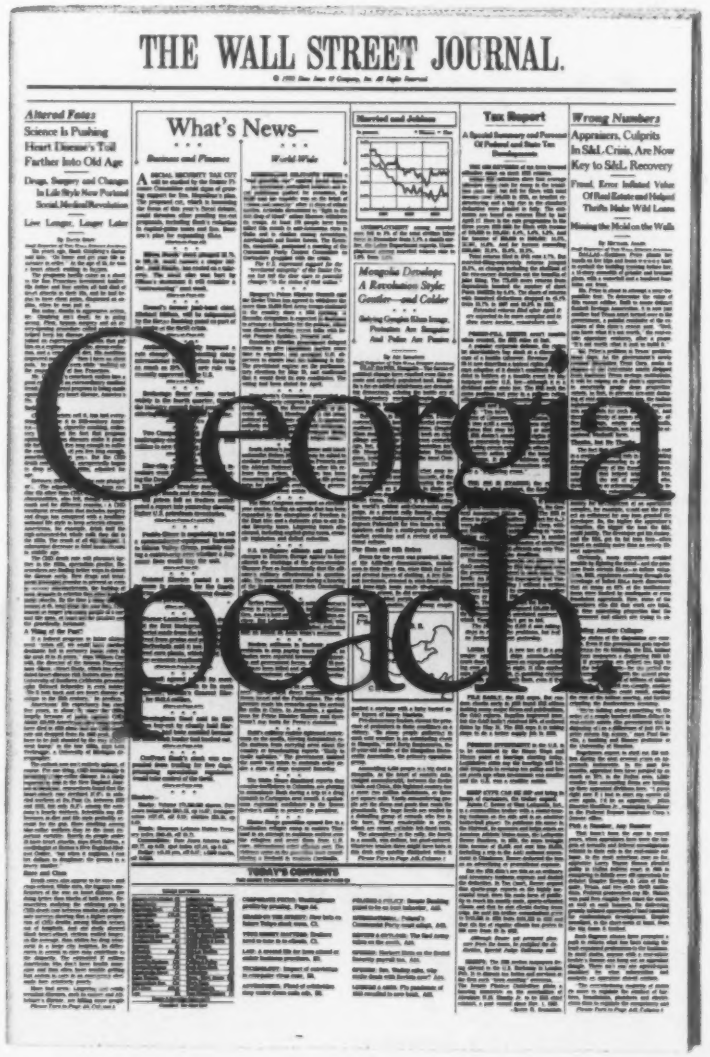
TV Guide recently asked Chiat/Day/Mojo and BBDO Worldwide to compete for a new $20 million to $25 million consumer account aimed at steadying circulation declines.

Movie studio 20th Century Fox finished the year ranked third, with a 14% box office share in North America, up from 6% and sixth-place finish, according to Variety. "Home Alone" has taken in about $281 million to date, making it the No. 3 movie of all time. Fox also got strong performances from "Die Hard 2" and "Sleeping With the Enemy."

In December, the studio hired Joel Hochberg, former president of DDB Needham Worldwide's Chicago office, as president of domestic marketing, with the goal of adding more sophistication to its movie marketing efforts.

The studio increased media spending last year 48.0% to $78.4 million, distributed primarily between newspapers and network and spot TV. "Home Alone" and "Die Hard 2" got the most media support —$11.6 million and $11.1 million, respectively.

The Fox TV network appeared to lose momentum in the past year. Its average household Nielsen rating fell 2% to 6.4 for the 1990-91 season and it wrote just $400 million in upfront business, down 20%. The network has a lock on younger demographics with a median age of 28 (CBS's is 44). Fox introduces new shows throughout the year instead of just during the fall season, and spreads promotion dollars accordingly.



The South Atlantic advertising region of The Wall Street Journal delivers subscribers with an average household income of $124,200. 79% with HHI $50,000 or more. 85% in top or middle management positions. At rates competitive with the Atlanta Constitution or the Charlotte Observer. For details, call your Journal representative.

CORPORATE PROFILE

After widening its market share lead over Reebok International to 7.7 percentage points in 1990, Nike this year began looking overseas for growth.

Nike, the leading U.S. athletic shoe brand, in February began a $20 million, 60-day global introduction of the Air 180 running shoe. The Air 180 was Nike's first global product launch and believed to be the first in the athletic shoe industry.

The U.S. athletic shoe market grew 20% to 25% annually in the mid-1980s, but growth is expected to slow to 6% to 7% this year.

Domestically, Nike sprinted past arch-rival Reebok International in 1990, increasing its share of the $5.5 billion U.S. athletic shoe market to 28.4%, while Reebok's share fell to 20.7%.

Driving its increased sales was a whopping 70.9% increase in media spending to $87.7 million. Spending for Nike brand footwear and apparel mirrored that, rising 71.6% to $78.3 million.

Still, the battle between Nike and Reebok is expected to tighten this year, due to strong sales for Reebok's Pump and the recession, which has softened the $60-to-$90 segment of the market where Nike does most of its business.

Nike last year boosted its spending for Nike brand women's shoes and apparel 78.6%, to $7.2 million. To further appeal to fashion-conscious young women, Nike this spring relaunched its Side 1 brand of shoes and apparel. Side 1 was originally introduced in 1989 as a fitness-inspired casual line but was reworked as an athletic shoe line designed to appeal to teens and less serious sports participants.

Nike also turned the injury to spokesman Bo Jackson into an advantage. Nike garnered millions of dollars in free media attention by teaming Mr. Jackson with another athlete who made an incredible comeback, boxer George Foreman, in a splashy 60-second "Bo Knows" commercial called the "Bo Show."

CORPORATE PROFILE

Despite intense competition and a stale lineup lacking new models, Nissan Motor Corp. USA maintained its share of the U.S. car/truck market during 1990 while localizing its national marketing plan.

Financial returns were less accommodating corporatewide. Profits at parent Nissan Motor Co., Tokyo, plummeted far below the "slight" decline expected as losses from the bankruptcy of a 43%-owned supplier affiliate, Ikeda Bussan Co., were a major culprit. Earnings aren't expected to rebound until 1993 when new models go to market.

Nissan division's 1990 U.S. car/truck unit sales (imported and domestic production) slipped 9.7% to 597,643 for a 4.3% share of the car/truck market, down from 4.5%. The Infiniti division accounted for 23,960 units and a 0.2% share of the total car/truck market.

Emphasizing that it has quit chasing Honda and Toyota for volume sales, the Nissan division focused on adding new regional marketing managers and giving them vastly increased marketing budgets. Each region is responsible for development and implementation of its own marketing plan to run with the national plan from agency Chiat/Day/Mojo.

Nissan division plans to sell 700,000 vehicles annually in the U.S. by 1993, and maybe 1 million annually by 1995, after new capacity comes on line at its plant in Smyrna, Tenn.

The $40,000 Q45 was Infiniti's best-seller at 13,911 units, followed by the $24,500 M30 model at 6,603 units and the newest addition introduced last September, the $17,750 G20 midsize luxury sedan, accounting for 3,446 units. A convertible M30 model debuted this February.

Sales of Nissan's best-selling Sentra, an entry-level subcompact, accounted for 159,054 units. A rise in Sentra sales had the support of an estimated $45 million in measured media for 1990, up about 200%.

Media spending by Nissan generally was up across the board for all nameplates, totaling $323.4 million, up 39.3%. These expenditures don't include spending by dealer associations or dealer leasing programs, which totalled $80 million. Nissan's contribution to that spending is folded into its unmeasured ad total.

The top-of-the-line Maxima was backed by $14.5 million in media advertising, down from $35 million.

After relating the upscale Infiniti to abstract images of rocks, trees and solitary shorelines, agency Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos took a more product-specific approach. New TV spots mixed art and technology to position the car as a blend of luxury and performance. Media spending reached $40.2 million, up 22.6%.

To support the national launch of Sentra, largest in Nissan history, the company continued its "Fantasy" campaign into its second year.

The dreamlike scenarios, featuring various Nissan models, have proved effective in forming positive perceptions of the brand. Sentra drew $48 million in media spending, up from $18.5 million spent during the initial introductory period in 1989.

Into the 1991 model year, Nissan sought to spark slumping sales by cutting into budgets to find an extra $50 million to put into a three-month incentive program.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Nynex Corp. late this year has been examining its media buying practices with possible intent to consolidate more than $63.1 million in buying. Media is now purchased by seven agencies.

The move follows the assignment of the $20 million corporate account to Ogilvy & Mather from Young & Rubicam. The same consultancy brought in to help Nynex in the agency review process is involved in the media evaluation.

Nynex, which underwent restructuring in 1990, now consists of two principal groups: Telecommunications, whose operating units include two telephone companies; and Worldwide Services, housing Nynex Mobile Communications, software and consulting businesses and Nynex Network Systems Co.

Apart from corporate advertising, Nynex spent the most on New York Telephone, $17.1 million, up 13.6%.

New England Telephone advertising dropped 16% to $12.8 million. This year it launched Signaling System 7 software into the network to expand the availability of new services such as Nynex Phonesmart services, including Caller ID service.

Information Resources Co. media spending dropped 14.6% to $8.7 million. The unit publishes more than 300 white pages and Yellow Pages directories a year.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Paramount Communications, which completed its first full fiscal year as an entertainment/media company in 1990, finds itself a hit-driven business, with fewer hits than misses.

Its business segments now live or die by the fickle nature of public taste. The company posted back-to-back losses for the first two quarters of this fiscal year, ending Oct. 31, 1991, and, as such, its efforts to expand have been constrained.

Escalating costs associated with movie production and marketing helped depress results from Paramount Pictures.

The film business' biggest success, "Ghost," took the company by surprise. While expected to do well, "Ghost" was never targeted as the $200 million-plus blockbuster it became. Because of the film's longevity as a first-run feature (more than six months), ad spending hit $14.7 million, well above the $9.2 million used to hype "Days of Thunder," the film with the second-highest ad budget.

Produced for an estimated $50 million, "Days of Thunder" failed to break the all-important $100 million mark at the box office for a "blockbuster," though filled with product placement and teamed with promotional partners.

Paramount this year began a generic campaign for all its summer releases. The studio teamed with Kmart Corp. and other marketers for a summer program called "Passport to Summer Entertainment." Participating theater chains planned to distribute 20 million game cards, which could be redeemed for discounts on Paramount Home Video products at more than 2,000 Kmart stores and free prizes from Hardee's Food Systems, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Chrysler Corp., and Costa Cruises.

With 17 films released in calendar 1990, Paramount Pictures ranked second in its share of the U.S. and Canadian box office at 15%. In the previous year, the company released 14 features and ended the year with a 14% share, placing it fourth, according to Variety.

However, its share of the domestic box office dropped to 8.3% with seven films during the first half of this calendar year. To help the studio regain its position, Paramount Pictures hired NBC-TV wunderkind Brandon Tartikoff as chairman in July.

Media spending for the publishing operations increased 74.6% to $5.6 million in 1990, with the majority allocated to the Simon & Schuster imprint.

CORPORATE PROFILE

J.C. Penney Co. is rethinking its strategy for transforming itself into a fashion department store.

The nation's fourth-largest retailer has been hit hard by the recession: Same-store sales were down 0.3% and catalog dropped 0.5% for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1991. The drop has been more precipitous the first six months of this fiscal year, with same-store sales off 4.2% and catalog sales off 8.1%.

The marketer in June '91 fired N W Ayer, its agency for eight years, and moved its estimated $45 million to $60 million account to Bozell without a review. Bozell had been agency of record for the J.C. Penney Shopping Channel, sold in 1991.

Penney's is expected to introduce a new campaign and theme line in early 1992, replacing Ayer's "Fashion comes to life," introduced in 1990. The company will likely push quality and value in its merchandising and future campaigns.

Analysts point to Penney's deal with Revlon to establish 420 in-store Beauty Stop boutiques as an example of where the retailer will be headed in the '90s.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Price wars, competitive encroachment and an ailing economy have triggered marketing moves at PepsiCo ranging from massive layoffs at its big profit generator, Frito-Lay, to a wave of new "health" products in all its segments.

PepsiCo took draconian measures to prop up Frito-Lay this month by laying off 7% of its workforce. The move will allow Frito-Lay, locked in a price-cutting war raging throughout the snack-food industry, to keep its prices low against further encroachment from Borden Inc. and Anheuser-Busch Cos.

Frito-Lay is critical to PepsiCo. The subsidiary, which holds 50% of the $9.7 billion snack-chips segment, accounted for 42% of PepsiCo's operating profits in 1990. F-L's U.S. profits dropped 9% in the second quarter '91 with no improvement expected the rest of the year.

PepsiCo's restaurant unit has led the new-product surge, although not without a hitch. Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp., now known by its initials KFC, has found the national rollout of SkinFree Crispy chicken meeting with limited success. The product's poor performance led PepsiCo to take a third-quarter '91 charge against earnings. KFC also is selling Honey BBQ Wings in some markets.

KFC, which commands about half the $6.4 billion U.S. quick-service chicken restaurant business, had 5% growth in same-store sales last year. That compared with a 13% boost in same-store sales at Taco Bell and 7% at Pizza Hut.

KFC's ad budget remained flat. But big gains in ad spending at Taco Bell (up 24%) and Pizza Hut (up 12.4%) boosted PepsiCo's overall media buying for its restaurant chains by 10% to $307 million.

In April, Taco Bell, which holds 70% of the Mexican-style restaurant market, introduced nationally four low-price, low-calorie chicken products, further extending the company's value menu. Then in June, came the 39¢ Fiesta Menu "snack size" fare supported by $12 million in spot and cable TV.

Pepsi-Cola Co. expanded in non-soft-drink beverage categories introducing into test All Sport, an isotonic; H2Oh!, a sparkling water; and Wild Bunch, a line of naturally flavored colas.

The growing diet segment posted case sales increases of 8.9% and a growth of 1.5 share points to 29.4% of the total soft-drink market, according to John C. Maxwell Jr. of Wheat, First Securities. No. 2 Diet Pepsi advanced 0.4 points to a 21% share, he said, while its case sales advanced 11.4%.

Meanwhile, No. 1 Diet Coke dropped 0.5 points to 31% of the diet segment as its case sales grew 7.5%. In the overall soft-drink market, Diet Coke was No. 3 at a 9.1% share and Diet Pepsi No. 4 at 6.2%. Diet Pepsi got a 29.7% boost in media spending to $76.5 million.

An upbeat TV campaign for Diet Pepsi featuring Ray Charles singing the new tagline, "You got the right one baby, uh-huh," broke in January.

The regular Pepsi brand didn't fare as well. It dropped 0.5 share points to 17.3% to rank No. 2 in the overall market, compared with nemesis Coca-Cola Classic, which slid only 0.1 points and still holding a leading 19.4% share.

Frito-Lay in 1990 went national with a "light" line of low-oil snacks, under the Doritos, Chee-tos and Ruffles names, supported with nearly $13 million in media. This February Frito's corn chip got a network TV campaign targeting younger consumers. F-L plans to double Frito spending to about $8 million in '91. Spending on its snack foods rose 23.5% in 1990 to $60 million.

We were advising small business when GE was a lightweight.

It was a hot item in 1912: A how-to magazine for small businesses. A brilliant idea? Or a flash in the pan? Today, Nation's Business has more subscribers than any other small business magazine. Nine of ten authorize company purchases averaging more than $267,000. Call Bob Gotshall, 313-354-1180, and advertise in Nation's Business. For 850,000 subscribers, it works.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Pfizer launched its first consumer educational campaign touting the cardiovascular drug Procardia XL, a new version of its Procardia.

Procardia and its XL line extension claimed 22.5% of Pfizer Inc.'s pharmaceutical sales of $3.2 billion. XL, in its first full year on the market, generated $404 million in U.S. sales.

The $2.9 million campaign ran in magazines, newspapers and Sunday magazines. Procardia is the most widely prescribed cardiovascular drug in the U.S., according to the company.

With Procardia coming off patent the end of this year and Pfizer facing generic competition, the campaign seeks to educate both doctors and patients to the advantages of XL over its predecessor. XL is the only once-daily calcium channel blocker approved in the U.S. for angina and hypertension.

Pfizer has six new ethical drugs under regulatory review and expects to introduce them during the next 24 months.

Consumer products, accounting for 10.4% of Pfizer worldwide sales in 1990, were paced in ad spending by Plax prebrushing dental rinse. Plax received $21 million in media, up 7.3%.

Pfizer aggressively pushed Plax into worldwide distribution in 1990. The expenses associated with that expansion highly influenced the consumer segment's 34% decline in operating profit. Plax contributed $178.7 million in sales, up 34%. During the year, Pfizer expanded Plax's presence from 17 to 39 countries.

Visine eye drop brand got a Visine L.R. line extension (for long-acting relief). Pfizer spent $1.6 million to introduce the line, virtually all in network TV.

Ben-Gay arthritic ointment showed a 73.2% increase in media spending to $7.5 million for the year, although the company says Ben-Gay didn't meet sales expectations. This summer the line got an Ultra Strength Ben-Gay version.

The Coty division turned in a 10% growth in sales despite increased competition and a weak retail sector. The increase was due partly to the introduction of Preferred Stock fragrance for men and a women's fragrance, L'Effleur. As in the past, the Coty division funneled most of its ad dollars into network TV. The four most popular scents, Lady Stetson, exclamation!, Iron and Stetson for men, plus the newcomer, Preferred Stock, had combined media support of $32.7 million, of which 73% was in network TV and the rest divided between spot and syndicated TV.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Philip Morris Cos. set a course for international expansion with the appointment of Michael Miles, 51, to succeed Hamish Maxwell as chairman-ceo.

The promotion signals Philip Morris' intent to build its international base through acquisition of food companies. Mr. Miles was chairman-ceo of Kraft General Foods before he took the helm this September.

Philip Morris already is the third-largest food marketer worldwide, with food sales of $26.1 billion, up 16.6%. It has repeatedly said its goal is to become a truly multinational marketer on the scale of Nestle and Unilever, a goal it stepped closer to with the acquisition of Jacobs Suchard in June 1990. Analysts have been closely watching Philip Morris, which will generate $18 billion in cash flow the next five years, for its next acquisition, and most are betting on a company with significant international scope.

Another sweeping change came in October 1990 when Kraft General Foods realigned its agencies, shifting $150 million in billings and eliminating McCann-Erickson Worldwide from its roster. The realignment was designed to fit a new category-based system of agency relationships.

Included in the shifts: The $80 million Maxwell House account returned to Ogilvy & Mather from D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; the $20 million Miracle Whip account, to J. Walter Thompson USA from Foote, Cone & Belding; the $10 million Kraft mayonnaise account, to Leo Burnett USA from Young & Rubicam; the combined $8 million Breakstone, Light n' Lively and Frusen Gladje accounts, to Y&R from McCann; Lender's Bagels to D'Arcy from McCann; and Birds Eye frozen vegetables to Y&R from Wergeles & Drazen. Media buying assignments didn't change.

At the same time, Kraft General Foods standardized its agency compensation system. Under the three-tier program, Kraft General Foods pays a 16% commission rate for superior work in meeting brand objectives; 14% for satisfactory work and 13% for unsatisfactory work.

Other longtime agency relationships were severed in 1991 when Philip Morris parted company with Wells Rich Greene BDDP, following yearlong rumors of trouble on the Benson & Hedges account. In April 1991, the $60 million account was moved to Burnett. The brand has been in a prolonged share descent, hitting 3.5% of the total cigarette market in 1990 (from 3.9% in '89) to rank eighth, according to Wheat, First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr.

Burnett also reaped rewards in March when Miller Brewing Co. gave it the ailing $80 million Miller Lite account from Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide. Burnett, which already handles the $25 million Miller High Life business, subsequently scrapped the brand's stale "Tastes great, less filling" theme in favor of "It's it. And that's that."

Miller also moved its media planning for Miller Lite, Miller High Life and test product Miller Lite Ultra to Burnett, effective in 1992, while keeping media buying at Backer.

Benson & Hedges notwithstanding, Philip Morris maintained its 41.9% U.S. market share for all cigarettes, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Marlboro was down slightly for the first time since the '70s, to 25.7% of the market from 27.9%. In 1991, Marlboro was the focus of one of Philip Morris' most surprising product initiatives. Philip Morris budgeted $60 million to roll out Marlboro Medium, a line extension slotted between Marlboro Lights and the flagship. Cork-tipped Marlboro Medium has 1 milligram more tar than white-tipped Marlboro Lights, a ploy to attract male low-tar smokers.

Medium is Philip Morris' second major cigarette launch since the October 1990 rollout of Bucks value-price brand, supported with a $19 million fourth-quarter '90 budget. Philip Morris holds a 24.8% share in the value-price category, second to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s 31.3%, Mr. Maxwell said.

In September 1990, Philip Morris promoted William Campbell to president-ceo of the domestic tobacco unit, Philip Morris USA, from senior VP-corporate planning. He succeeded Ehud Houminer, who became senior VP, Philip Morris Management Corp.

Miller's most significant new-product launch in 1991 was Lite Ultra, a 77-calorie beer testing in Arizona, Louisville, San Diego and Madison, Wis.

The Lite agency switch and line extension are aimed at hiking volume of Miller Lite, the No. 2 beer overall with a 10.6% share. Lite isn't growing as fast as rivals. It rose less than 2% in barrels in 1990, compared with 9.3% growth by Bud Light and 12.5% growth by Coors Light. Bud Light ranks fourth overall at 6% and Coors Light No. 3 at 6.1%, according to Beer Marketers Insights. Lite's 19.9 million bbls represented 46% of the company's total output.

Backer continues to handle Genuine Draft, ranked ninth with a 3% share. It is the country's fastest-growing beer with shipments up 25.5%.

Kraft General Foods' new product philosophy was best summed up as fat-free. Fat-free items in more than eight categories rang up $350 million in sales in 1990.

New offerings: Kraft Free Singles, Seven Seas Free salad dressing, Kraft Free mayonnaise and Miracle Whip Free spoonable dressing, the latter two the first fat-free products in their category. Philip Morris is No. 2 in the $878 million mayonnaise and spoonable dressing category, with a 46% share.

In June 1991, the company voluntarily removed percentage fat-free labels from its products in anticipation of industry-wide scrutiny by the FDA.

about for an appropriate umbrella brand name for its healthy food lines. In February 1991, the company began testing a six-item line of "foods for healthier eating" dubbed Kraft Alternatives, but may rename the line Eating Right. The new line, which has done well in test market, will face off against No. 2 ConAgra's highly successful Healthy Choice. Chris Evert is spokeswoman for Eating Right entrees, frozen dessert and pizza.

Under the Budget Gourmet name, Kraft General Foods began testing a 12-item frozen meal (with insulated lunch bag), called Hot Lunch. Kraft General Foods is said to be expanding its Budget Gourmet Light & Healthy with Hearty & Healthy, which promises 2 ounces more than the 10 delivered by Budget Gourmet.

General Foods USA's Post cereals, remained third in the category, but gained share for the first time in a decade from 10.5% to 11.3%, aided by heavier ad spending—$111 million, up 8.8%—and campaigns stressing added value for Grape-Nuts and Post Raisin Bran.

NV Philips financial woes—which led to a billion-dollar charge-off, major worldwide layoffs and eventually the parent's decision to sell off its mainframe computer business among others—have pushed the company more strongly into its consumer lines.

U.S. activities, operating under North American Philips Corp. and the 80%-owned Polygram, have been beneficiaries of the renewed attention. Philips last September sold Genie Manufacturing, maker of garage door openers and vacuums.

North American Philips now includes Philips Consumer Electronics, maker of Magnavox, Philco, Philips and Sylvania products; Norelco Consumer Electronics, maker of Norelco and Schick electric shavers, Clean Air Machines and irons; Philips Lighting; and Philips Interactive Media of America.

Philips Consumer Electronics is the largest advertiser of TVs in the U.S. Magnavox, which switched from the Smothers brothers as ad presenters to John Cleese this year, is the No. 3 TV brand with an 8% share. Its other lines bring Philips' share up to 11.9%, according to Television Digest.

Magnavox is No. 5 in VCRs with a 7% share (Sylvania has 1%), and No. 7 in camcorders with a 6.7% share. Philips provides no media support for VCRs and little for camcorders.

With heavy price discounting on TVs, Philips like other consumer electronics marketers has turned to more profitable, often upscale items.

The latest item for Philips, whose parent developed the compact disc, is the compact disc-interactive—a compact disc with video that offers viewer interaction. Philips launches its CD-I in October under the Philips name. A separate worldwide subsidiary—Philips Electronic Media (whose U.S. unit is Philips Interactive Media of America)—has been formed to market software for the compact disc-interactive unit.

The company is expected to spend heavily in the launch next year of a digital compact cassette format for audio. The product allows current audiocassettes to be played by machines that can also record digitally. Tandy Corp. is joining in the rollout.

The big event for the Norelco division was the introduction late last year of a new line of electric razors, which Norelco claims helped hike its share of the men's shaver market to 56%, up from 51%. The company backed all men's shavers with $46.9 million, up 56.3%.

Norelco has access to a long list of Philips European products and is believed to be considering introducing several new lines. Norelco also dropped out of the coffee maker field.

Philips Lighting, faced with continuing price erosion in the basic bulb business, moved last year to a new-product orientation. It has a declining 9% of the consumer bulb business dominated by GE Lighting's 44%.

Polygram's U.S. division integrated A&M Records and Island Records (which it bought earlier) into its distribution system. Polygram's share of records on Billboard's charts in 1990 rose to 6.8% from 6.5%.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Procter & Gamble Co. continues to expand its presence in the international marketplace while relying on new-product initiatives to boost its U.S. business.

Under the leadership of Chairman-CEO Edwin L. Artzt, P&G intends to become a significant competitor in the $16 billion worldwide cosmetics and fragrances market after spending $1.14 billion to acquire Max Factor and Betrix lines from Revlon in July '91.

Already P&G is the top mass-marketer of cosmetics in the U.S. thanks to its $1.3 billion purchase of Noxell Corp. in 1989.

In February, P&G agreed to sell its Santa Fe brand of men's fragrances and toiletries to DuCair Tsumura, the U.S. subsidiary of Tokyo-based Tsumura & Co. The company also sold Dramamine to Upjohn Co. and Icy Hot to Chattem for a combined $45 million.

Speculation that P&G would sell all or parts of its food and beverage division reached its highest level when Exec VP B. Jurgen Dintz resigned in June. The company realigned its U.S. business under Exec VP Durk Jager. The company denied plans to sell any of its $3.2 billion food and beverage business "now or in the foreseeable future."

P&G is moving ahead with new food and beverage products including the testing of a healthier version of Crisco Oil in the Midwest.

Last year, Crisco had a 19% share in the $795.6 million cooking and salad oil market, according to Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan. Analysts believe the brand has been hurt by consumers' concern about healthier alternatives.

P&G also is putting the Crisco logo on its Puritan Oil, a 100% canola oil product. That decision prompted the company to consolidate the Puritan ad account with Grey Advertising, Crisco's agency, from N W Ayer.

Duncan Hines' Cups Microwave cupcakes and brownies were expanded to most of the U.S. in 1990; and going into test were Folgers Singles, a coffee bag for single servings, and Speas Farm Parents Choice calcium-fortified apple juice.

P&G is reaping the gains of its expansion of superconcentrated detergents—sold in about 70% of the U.S. The company offers "Ultra" versions for all of its laundry detergents—Tide, Gain, Oxydol, Bold and Cheer.

The overwhelming laundry detergent leader, P&G boosted its total share of the category to 54.5% in the summer of 1991 from a 53.5% share in the prior summer, according to Kidder, Peabody & Co. Other household product roll-outs include the national expansion of Liquid Tide with Bleach Alternative; Cinch, a combination glass/all-purpose cleaner; and Cascade LiquiGel automatic dishwashing detergent.

To further invigorate its household products business, P&G is testing the restaging of Ivory Liquid. Ultra Downy fabric softener also is in test.

P&G is readying a major advertising campaign for the fall national launch of Pampers Phases and Luvs Phases in the $4 billion disposable diaper category. Each brand will feature seven phases with different design and size features keyed to a baby's development.

P&G commands a leading 48.5% of the disposable diaper category from its two brands compared with Kimberly-Clark's 29.5% share, according to Kidder, Peabody.

Head & Shoulders 2-in-1 shampoo will begin national distribution in October without market testing. P&G remains the market leader in the $1.15 billion shampoo category with a combined 39.5% share for all brands in summer 1991 compared with 36.5% a year earlier.

The Crest brand name is being extended to its first toothbrush in the U.S. called Crest Complete. The product began tests in late summer. Crest Neat Squeeze began national roll-out in the spring. The product offers new packaging—a squeezable soft pump—for "less mess." Earlier in the year the FDA halted the rollout of Ultra Protection Crest because its anti-microbial cavity fighting ingredient, triclosan, had not undergone a new drug application process. The introduction could be delayed as much as three years.

P&G encountered more trouble with the FDA in the spring over the labeling of Citrus Hill Fresh Choice orange juice. The FDA contended the word "fresh" wasn't appropriate for a juice made from concentrate. After the FDA seized product from a Minneapolis warehouse, P&G agreed to change the label to just Citrus Hill.

Another FDA flap arose over "No cholesterol" labeling of cooking oils. Procter & Gamble agreed to voluntarily drop the claim from all of its products, including Crisco.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Quaker Oats Co. may never rename itself Gatorade Inc., but the sports drink has become the company's top priority and star performer worldwide.

Quaker piggybacked on strong Gatorade sales to report fiscal 1991 results substantially improved over its disastrous fiscal 1990. Quaker's companywide 9% sales increase was backed by a 5% increase in unit volumes —and that was driven largely by a 15% hike in Gatorade volume domestically and international expansion of the sports drink franchise. Fiscal 1991 ended June 30.

Gatorade is now a $600 million business in the U.S. and is expected to be $1 billion by the year 2000. Overseas sales are about $150 million and growing with more new market introductions in Europe, Latin America and Asia. Although Gatorade has more than 90% of the U.S. sports drink business, it's constantly challenged by regional competitors and soft-drink companies Coca-Cola Co., Pepsi Cola Co. and Dr Pepper Co., all of which are testing challengers.

Quaker has launched a host of flavor and packaging variations—gallon bottles, single-serve cans, a Gatorade Light, aseptic boxes—and has added availability through convenience stores and a Gatorade fountain system now in 10,000 U.S. locations.

To give the brand added punch, Quaker signed Chicago Bulls superstar Michael Jordan to a reported 10 year, $18 million contract. A U.S. campaign, themed "Be like Mike," broke last month. Mr. Jordan also will be used in international markets.

During calendar 1990 Quaker's measured media spending fell for the second consecutive year—down 8%—as the company continued to restrict ad spending to a few key products in most of its foods businesses.

In the $7.2 billion ready-to-eat cereal market, Quaker is focusing marketing attention on four "core" brands: Cap'n Crunch, Life, Quaker 100% Natural and Quaker Oat Squares. Spending on the four rose 6% to $35 million.

The company's pound share fell from 8.1% in 1988 to 7.4% in calendar 1990, placing it fourth in the category.

Similarly, Quaker has focused nearly all its marketing attention in the $7 billion pet food industry on two brands: Kibbles'n Bits'n Bits'n Bits dog food, which will get a "lean" extension later this year, and Cycle dog foods, relaunched this year backed by $37 million.

The "advanced formula" Cycle shares shelf space with Ralston Purina Co.'s expanded O.N.E. line and Kal Kan Foods' new Expert brand—all targeted at the growing pet food business outside supermarkets.

Once second to Purina, Quaker has dropped to fifth in the $5.7 billion supermarket pet food category, with a 10.1% share—though the company said pet food volumes increased 3% in fiscal 1991.

Bayer Bess Vanderwarker handled the Cycle relaunch, winning the account in a creative shoot-out with J. Walter Thompson USA. JWT found itself only a minor Quaker agency after also losing the nearly $5 million granola bar and rice cake account to Berry-Brown.

Although Quaker triumphed when General Mills withdrew from the hot-cereal market last June, leaving Quaker's 60% share intact, the category and the company's own oatmeal sales dropped for the second year in a row. Media spending fell 20% in calendar 1990 to $14.9 million.

Golden Grain posted a good year, leading the rice side-dish category with a 38% share and the noodle side-dish category with 29%. The company launched a microwaveable version of Rice-A-Roni and introduced a shelf-stable Lunch for One meal line.

Quaker last June completed the delayed spinoff of its Fisher-Price toys subsidiary as an independent operating company and so began fiscal 1992 as a food-only marketer.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Ralston Purina Co. counted on a strong cereal business and improved results for Eveready batteries to offset flat results in pet food, which had a bust year in fiscal 1990.

Sales rose just 0.9% as the Purina brands struggled to keep unit volumes up in the face of unremitting price and promotion wars in the $7 billion pet food industry. Purina accounted for 24% of sales but 40% of operating income.

Purina is seeking to capitalize on the trend toward superpremium, "lifestage" products led by Iams Co. and Colgate-Palmolive Co.'s Hill's Pet Products. Purina has developed brands for the growing number of pet owners who shop at non-supermarket outlets—a business now totaling $1 billion-plus in estimated sales.

In the past year, the company expanded the premium-price Purina O.N.E. line to include not only dog food but puppy, light and senior dog foods, as well as cat and kitten formulas. The expansion, supported by a $40 million to $50 million marketing campaign, came as key rivals Kal Kan Foods and Quaker Oats Co. introduced similar premium, lifestage products under the Expert and Cycle banners.

For its mainstream pet food brands, Purina launched an umbrella ad campaign with similar positioning: the four mainline Purina dog foods—Dog Chow, Puppy Chow, Fit & Trim and Hi Pro—meet dogs' differing nutritional needs. Similarly, Purina added to its Cat Chow line with Cat Chow Mature for older cats and Cat Chow Special Care.

Purina also launched Nature's Course, billed as the first dog food made with pesticide-free wheat, and packaged in recycled-paper boxes.

To Get To New Orleans

You Have To Pass Through Customs

New Orleans is a city steeped in tradition. And for over 150 years, people in New Orleans have customarily begun their mornings with a piping-hot cup of strong coffee and a copy of The Times-Picayune.

And because New Orleanians know that each day is meant to be savored, like a plate of their momma's red beans, this is one tradition not likely to be broken.

The Times-Picayune is as much a part of New Orleans as coffee and beignets. For information about the New Orleans market and The Times-Picayune, contact Robert O'Neill at (504) 826-3070.

Purina leads the $5.7 billion market for supermarket pet foods with an overall 26.4% share but has lost some ground in recent years to aggressive pricing by Kal Kan (now the country's No. 3 pet food marketer, with 12.4% of supermarket sales). No. 2 is Friskies PetCare (14.4%).

In the $7.2 billion ready-to-eat cereal category where Ralston is a small niche player, the company had a banner year, with a dollar sales increase of 22.7%. On top of the company's 1989-90 success in marketing licensed cereals for children—particularly Batman and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles—Ralston was the key beneficiary in 1990-91 as economy-minded consumers shifted to lower-price, private-label cereals. Private-label cereals, of which Ralston is the primary producer, increased their category pound share to 6.5%, up from 3.6% in 1987. Ralston's branded products had a 6.1% pound share of the market, up from 5.6% in 1989.

Ralston is being challenged to maintain that momentum; its Jetsons cereal was a flop, and the company has suffered from a dearth of big licensed properties.

Ralston's key non-food business, Eveready Battery Co., spent most of its $30 million in media support behind the bunny campaign. Now approaching its second anniversary, the campaign has helped stabilize Energizer's once-falling share of the $2 billion battery business. In fiscal 1990, Eveready's domestic unit sales total was up 4%, with Energizer posting double-digit gains. Energizer continues to trail Duracell about 36% to 44% in the alkaline segment of the battery business.

Ralston's newest division, Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp., shifted its $8 million baby food account to DDB Needham Worldwide from Sherwood & Schneider, one of Ralston's stable of regular ad agencies. Beech-Nut this past April launched a new ad campaign and began testing an "organic" baby food line, Special Harvest.

Continental Baking Co. struggled in a price war in the $1.1 billion market for package doughnuts, snack cakes and pies. The company's sales were flat, and its supermarket share totaled 26.6%, behind leader McKee Baking Co., marketer of Little Debbie treats. Continental's main product initiative has been launching reduced-fat and -calorie versions of its older products, including "light" Hostess Twinkies and Cupcakes.

CORPORATE PROFILE

After buying Revlon in 1985, Ronald O. Perelman, positioned himself as a marketer as fluent with advertising as the art of the deal. Six years later, the dealmaker still dominates.

Rumors were rife in late 1990 and early this year that Mr. Perelman was considering dismantling his cosmetics empire. By this April, Germaine Monteil and Lancaster had been sold to Joh. A. Benckiser of Germany. Later in the month came an even bigger deal: Procter & Gamble Co. paid $1.06 billion for Revlon's worldwide Max Factor and Betrix lines of cosmetics and fragrances with combined sales of $800 million, 80% of it overseas.

Following the announcement, Revlon President Sol Levine, 63, retired. He was replaced by Jerry Levin, 46, previously exec VP of parent company MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings and best known for his skills in mergers and acquisitions.

Besides reducing its international beauty presence, Revlon lost mass-market share points in the U.S. Its pre-sale level was about 20% of mass-market cosmetics, with 12% to 13% from the basic Revlon brand and 7% from Max Factor and Almay combined.

Revlon, set to launch a Darker Tones of Almay line for ethnic consumers in November, refused comment on rumors of an Almay sale. The company in the meantime announced the sale of another cosmetic line, Clean & Clear, to Johnson & Johnson Consumer Products.

While Mr. Perelman has been adept at raising money, Revlon hasn't won equally high marks in marketing.

Just after restaging Flex in late 1990, the company announced the brand would again be overhauled with a new ad campaign and returned to its basic package design. The turnabout followed declines in market share for shampoo, which at the end of 1990 stood at 2.6%, down from 8% five years earlier. To help boost Flex, Revlon also introduced Flex & Go, a two-in-one shampoo/conditoner. Flex's ad spending rose 1.6% to $6.3 million in 1990.

Revlon's fragrances also have had a bumpy ride, with one of the few exceptions being the Guess department store brand launched in 1990 and extended this year to the men's category.

Revlon also has announced the delay of two fall 1991 fragrance launches, the much heralded Ellen Tracy designer perfume and Fire & Ice. The company blamed technical problems for Tracy's delay and positioning difficulties for Fire & Ice.

Revlon will proceed, however, with the fall introduction of Downtown Girl, a mass-market fragrance. This summer it also introduced Charlie Express, yet another line extension of the aging brand now being squeezed by both Coty's exclamation! and Cover Girl's Navy. Charlie's ad spending fell to $869,000 in 1990 from $2.7 million in 1989.

In skincare, Revlon in 1991 introduced a line called New Age Naturals, but the jury's still out on its success.

CORPORATE PROFILE

RJR Nabisco, having shed much of its debt in 1990, began stepping up new-product introductions.

In a year in which Nabisco Biscuit increased its leading share of the $7 billion cookie/cracker market to 44% from 43% in 1989, the division built on the success of its line extension strategy, introducing Mini Chips Ahoy!, Sprinkled Chips Ahoy!, Fat Free Premium crackers and Ritz Bits in several flavors. In 1991, it added Mr. Phipps Pretzel Chips, My Goodness! low-fat cookies, Teddy Graham Bearwiches and Mini Oreos.

Nabisco's flagship Oreo, in danger of losing its No. 1 position to No. 2 Chips Ahoy!, got a boost from an "Oreo Twist" ad and promotion campaign. Nabisco put $13.8 million behind the promotion featuring singer Chubby Checker, upping the media ante by 36.6%. Oreo sales rose 8%.

The division's success during 1990 led the company to appoint VP-Marketing Bruce Wood, 40, to the presidency of RJR's ailing Planters LifeSavers division this April. Mr. Wood succeeds Dolph von Arx, 56, who retired.

At the same time, the company merged Planters with Nabisco into RJR Nabisco

RJR Nabisco's magazine spending, cut by 48.9%, was a casualty of the tobacco unit's increasing favoring of direct mail and outdoor.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s market share volume improved 1.2 percentage points to 29.7% in 1990 compared with Philip Morris Cos.' leading 41.9% share, flat with 1989, according to Wheat, First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr.

With the exception of Camel, RJR's growth was not in any of its full-margin brands, a lineup that includes Winston, Salem and Vantage. Camel rose to 4.4% of market from 3.9%, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Playing on Camel's momentum, the company this summer began testing Camel 99s, a 100-millimeter version of Camel packed in a hard box.

Salem barely held share in 1990, with 6.2%, flat with a year earlier, Mr. Maxwell said, while Vantage declined to 2.4% from 2.5%. Winston dropped to 8.8% from 9.1%.

RJR remained the leader in value-price cigarettes in 1990 with a 31.3% share compared with Philip Morris' 24.8%, but the lower margin lines gained enough steam to endanger RJR's full-price brand sales. As a solution, RJR in June 1991 unveiled "The Wrap," a new airtight packaging system for Winston designed to add value and justify its full pricing positioning. The "Wrap," was supported by a $22 million print, outdoor and direct mail campaign.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Hosiery and knitwear, rather than the traditional bakery unit, are cooking these days at Sara Lee Corp.

That trend will be even more pronounced with the addition of Playtex Apparel, including such brands as Playtex, Cross Your Heart and I Can't Believe It's a Girdle, to the company. The buyout was announced this August.

First Boston Corp. earlier this year estimated Sara Lee brands accounted for 11% of the bra market, followed by Playtex's 10.4%. Sara Lee's intimate apparel lines include Bali and Hanes Her Way.

L'eggs, the hosiery brand that helped give Sara Lee a national profile, switched its pantyhose packaging this year—a move widely reported.

The new carton, to reach national distribution by early 1992, still shows a silhouette of the signature egg and is made entirely from recycled paperboard.

L'eggs holds an estimated 55% of hosiery sales in food, drug and discount stores, which account for 60% of all hosiery sales in the $2.2 billion market.

Spending was to be up significantly this year; last year the brand received $25.5 million, down 9.8%.

The Liz Claiborne designer line of mid-price hosiery was introduced in late 1990. It attracted $2.4 million in media spending.

In September 1990, the company rolled out Sara Lee Free & Light, a seven-product line of frozen desserts, following rival Entenmann's successful introduction of fat-free, shelf-stable baked goods.

Similarly, Sara Lee's meat division offered new "light" products, including Ball Park Lite hot dogs, Jimmy Dean Light sausage, Mr. Turkey deli-style lunch meats and a full line of Bryan Light meats.

Bryan Foods named Ogilvy & Mather, Atlanta, to succeed Lintas:New York on its $5 million account this June. Sara Lee in 1990 had consolidated $100 million in advertising and promotion at Lintas.

One of the fruits of the consolidation was a cross-branded product line, Sara Lee deli meats, rolled out by Bil Mar Foods this summer.

The company's media spending for 1990 fell 19.8% largely due to a drop in the Hanes media budget—down 38% to $37.9 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Although Schering-Plough Corp. two years ago sold Maybelline Co. to concentrate on pharmaceuticals, its ethical drug business is discovering money is to be made in the consumer market.

Schering-Plough in late 1990 moved two ethical drugs into over-the-counter sales: Lotrimin, an athlete's foot treatment, and Gyne-Lotrimin, a preparation for vaginal yeast infections.

After receiving FDA approval last year to market Lotrimin as both an OTC and prescribed product, Schering-Flough spent almost $2 million to promote its consumer launch.

Schering-Plough doled out $6.8 million in the first quarter of 1991 to support Gyne-Lotrimin, the first OTC preparation for vaginal yeast infections.

Schering-Plough is working with Dow Chemical's Marion Merrell Dow to move Carafate, a prescription anti-ulcer product, to OTC for treatment of upset stomach, heartburn and acid indigestion.

Separately, Schering-Plough continued to provide strong media support for Dr. Scholl's footcare products which rose 11.7% to $14.4 million in 1990, and spending for Coppertone suntan products almost quadrupled to $2.3 million in 1990.

Coppertone maintained its position as the leader in suntan products; it marked a slight share increase, to almost 19%, while its nearest competitors were flat. Second-place Hawaiian Tropic, from Tanning Research Labs, was flat with an 11.3% share. This year, Schering-Plough released Coppertone Sport, a waterproof and sweat-resistant sunscreen designed for athletes.

Among its respiratory OTC lines, Afrin, heretofore a nasal spray, was introduced in tablet form and gained an Afrin Saline Mist line extension. Drixoral cold remedy line got a Drixoral Sinus spinoff, a product offering consumers 12-hour relief. Drixoral spending was down 28.1%. Afrin has only drawn minimal consumer ad support.

Wesley-Jessen, the vision care unit, in April 1990 released Complements, a new line of colored contact lenses. Media dollars were shifted from the DuraSoft line to Complements.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Seagram Co. was displaced by Grand Metropolitan's Heublein unit as the top seller of distilled spirits in the U.S. last year.

Seagram's share of the estimated $159.6 billion liquor market in 1990 rose to 13.8% from 13.5% as media spending was essentially flat. Heublein's share climbed to 14.3% from 13.3%, according to Wheat, First Securities.

The House of Seagram, Seagram's domestic distilled-spirits unit, moved cautiously in the new-product arena, with much of the activity focused on reduced-alcohol products.

In test markets, it added Coyote, a flavored 70-proof tequila, and continues to test Mount Royal Light, a reduced-alcohol whiskey. But it has pulled Takara Sochu, a Japanese spirit, from test.

In June 1990, Seagram rolled out Wyborowa Polish vodka, its first national product introduction in years. An ad campaign that began a year later whimsically poked fun at the difficulty in pronouncing the brand's name (Vee-ba-ROH-va) with the theme, "If you can't say it, you can't have it."

Among developments in the latest of several corporate reorganizations, Seagram created a Global Brands division to better handle worldwide marketing.

A consistent worldwide campaign for Martell cognac, for which it acquired U.S. distribution rights from Brown-Forman Corp., began last year. This June, Seagram began a similar effort, valued at $40 million, for Chivas Regal scotch whisky, themed "There will always be a Chivas Regal."

Mumm champagne also will get the global ad treatment.

Seagram Beverage Co. early this year entered test markets with Taos, a sparkling wine-based light cooler marketed as an aperitif, with less than 5% alcohol.

Tropicana Products, the leading orange-juice marketer, rolled out Pure Tropics, a line of exotic 100% juice blends, and ruby-red grapefruit juice.

After the successful introduction of Tropicana Twister, a bottled juice blend, the company brought to market Tropicana Sparkler.

All Tropicana lines were backed with $48.5 million in media spending, up 3.6%, as the company's share of the orange-juice market increased to 21.8%, up from 20.2%, according to ScanTrack figures, while Coca-Cola Foods' leading Minute Maid brand had a 22.9% share, down 0.4 points. Tropicana also got a new leader, Bill Weintraub, formerly exec VP-marketing and sales for Kellogg Co.'s U.S. food products division, who replaced Robert Urbain, now general manager of Campbell Soup Co.'s Pepperidge Farm unit.

At the Seagram Chateau & Estate Wine Co., Frankfurt Gips Balkind was named to handle Perrier-Jouet champagne, and is scheduled to break a new campaign in October.

Seagram reported first-half 1990 net income fell 14%, to $337 million, on total revenues of nearly $2.8 billion, a 2.5% gain. The company attributed much of the income decline to reduced earnings at E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., in which Seagram holds a 24.5% stake. But Seagram's own operating income also fell 7.8% in the first half, to $285 million. Company President Edgar Bronfman Jr. said Seagram expects total 1991 operating income to exceed that of 1990.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Sears, Roebuck & Co. may owe its reputation to retailing, but financial services, insurance and real estate have become its lifeblood.

pany's scramble to turn its stores into a series of specialty departments in 1990.

Chairman Edward Brennan asked shareholders once again to be patient and await the long-promised turnaround, which he said will occur in 1992 and beyond.

Early this year, Sears put into effect a plan to cut by yearend 33,000 jobs, or 10% of the staff from its merchandise group and catalog operation. Mr. Brennan also said Sears is cutting $70 million in internal advertising costs, though media spending levels will remain unaffected.

Corporate heads have rolled, too, with the resignation in February of merchandise group President-Chief Operating Officer Michael Bozic, who was replaced by Alfred Goldstein, specialty merchandising manager.

In January, Sears closed its much-ballyhooed 47-store McKid children's apparel chain launched in 1988, citing unsatisfactory results. Its McKids private-label apparel will continue to be marketed in its department stores and its catalog.

Attention has also been refocused on Sears' unprofitable $4 billion catalog division. Robert M. Abramson was named senior VP-marketing and strategic planning for the catalog and the first-ever national ad campaign for the catalog was launched in February, stressing Sears' long heritage and reliability.

Measurable progress was made in transforming Sears' department stores into specialty stores as the company announced it had opened Tire & Auto Centers in all 850 of its stores. It was Sears' second completed rollout after Brand Central, the appliance and electronics format Sears launched in its stores in 1988.

This year Sears doubled its Homelife furniture formats to 70 and added 12 home-office equipment departments, called Office Center at Sears.

Sears returned to a platform of guaranteeing satisfaction and value from its flirtation with everyday low prices. In May, Mr. Brennan announced a new "Sears Best Buys" program in which certain items are featured at sale price each month, plus the "Five Star Value" program of selecting certain national brand-name items for periodic sales.

This July, Sears introduced the Kid-Vantage WearOut Warranty program, an industry first in which it promises to replace any children's apparel when it wears out, while the child still wears the same size. Sears also announced a frequent-buyer program for children's apparel, offering a 10% discount on every $50 purchase of children's apparel and 15% off purchases of $100 or more.

Spending for TV and print advertising for Sears' core household brands increased 22.7% in 1990 to $133 million; other categories of ad spending for the Sears Merchandise Group held steady. The merchandise group continues its steady relationship with Ogilvy & Mather, which in mid-1991 won back the $5 million jewelry assignment that was awarded to the Bloom Agency for a year beginning in 1990.

Dean Witter Financial Services Group continues to be Sears' strongest unit as its stock brokerage, investment and credit card services thrive. Discover credit cards numbered 37.8 million in 1990, an increase of 15.4% over the previous year. Merchant outlets accepting the card grew 15.2% to 1.24 million.

In March, 5-year-old Discover launched its first new TV campaign in three years under the theme "It pays to Discover." This March, Dean Witter tried to launch the new Prime Option Visa credit card, but Visa International's challenge of the card in federal court has suspended issuance of the card indefinitely.

Results from Allstate Insurance Cos. and Coldwell Banker Real Estate Group weren't as strong in 1990 due to higher-than-average insurance claims for catastrophes and a downturn in the residential real estate market.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Total ad spending at SmithKline Beecham remained flat in 1990 as the pharmaceutical giant continued to reduce debt following the 1989 merger of SmithKline Beckman and Beecham Group. More than $1.2 billion in assets have been sold since the merger.

Sales for SmithKline's leading brand, Aquafresh, rose 28% worldwide last year. The brand benefited from the company's largest media investment. Aquafresh is now moving beyond toothpaste, with a line of branded toothbrushes rolling nationally.

The Oxy line of acne medications gained 2 percentage points in the U.S. for a 26% market share.

Geritol brand tonic got the biggest percentage ad hike among the top brands, up 69.4% to $7.25 million.

The N'ice brand of sore-throat lozenges added a line of vitamin C lozenges. Massengill kept its position as the No. 1 feminine douche with a 52% share, said Julie Wolfe, analyst with Kline & Co. Media spending stayed steady at $10.9 million for douches and towelettes combined.

Tums sales rose 27.4%, giving it a 13%

IF YOU THOUGHT THE TRIBUNE WAS AHEAD OF THE TIMES IN TAMPA BAY . . .

You're 20 years behind.

In 1971, the Audit Bureau of Circulations reported that the St. Petersburg Times had squeaked by the Tampa Tribune for the first time to become the largest circulation newspaper in Tampa Bay.

We've never looked back. Since then, the Times has more than doubled its circulation — to 389,924 daily and 500,418 Sunday — while the Tribune has grown, but not as fast.

The numbers show that Tampa Bay keeps up with the Times. In fact, the St. Petersburg Times now leads the Tampa Tribune by more than 68,000 daily and nearly 92,000 on Sunday.*

share and the No. 2 spot in the $877 million antacids and anti-gas aids category, she said.

This fall SmithKline is extending the Contac brand with Contac Severe Cold & Flu Hot Medicine, positioned against Sandoz Pharmaceuticals Corp.'s Thera-Flu. The Contac brand claims 8% of the cold medications market, Ms. Wolfe said.

About $4 million in TV spending will support the new product, while new Contac Day & Night Cold & Flu caplets will get $5.3 million in support this fall.

The company maintained strong sales for pharmaceuticals in the U.S., with total prescriptions for SmithKline products rising 7% while the market grew just 1%, according to company estimates.

A big hit needs to follow Tagamet, the ethical drug for treating peptic ulcers that generated $1.2 billion in worldwide sales in 1990, half of that from the U.S. Tagamet's active ingredient, cimetidine has been coming off patent. Tagamet sales dropped 6% worldwide in 1990. In the U.S., where Tagamet loses patent protection in 1994, its share dropped 4 percentage points to 26% in 1990 as competition heated up, particularly from Glaxo Holdings' Zantac. An OTC version of Tagamet is under development.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Sony Corp. sees its new ownership of movie and recording interests as guaranteeing software for its future electronics innovations, and its broader base of operations as an opportunity for "interactive" marketing.

Sony, for example, signed Michael Jackson to a reported $100 million deal that will place him in films, recordings and perhaps games for Sony units. It is looking at building a Sonyland amusement park. A third move comes this winter when Sony's various units combine for the first time to promote products for the Steven Spielberg movie "Hook."

Sony has gone through some significant changes in the last year. Columbia House became a joint venture with Time Warner. Columbia House's $70 million ad spending figures are credited by AA solely to Sony's estimated ad total for 1990.

Sony this August also bought out General Electric Co.'s half interest in its home video venture and renamed the unit Columbia Tri-Star Home Video.

Sony Software became its media unit, including Sony Music Entertainment (formerly CBS Records), Sony Pictures Entertainment (formerly Columbia Pictures Entertainment) and Sony Electronic Publishing (a new unit that will produce games and software). Sony Electronics Group incorporates its hardware businesses.

At Sony Pictures Entertainment, Jon Peters quit in May as co-chairman to return to production for Sony's Columbia Pictures. Separately, Sony split marketing functions for its two major picture units—Columbia Pictures and Tri-Star Pictures.

Sony's big films in the last year included Tri-Star's "Terminator 2: Judgment Day" and Columbia's "City Slickers." Tri-Star's share of film rentals rose to 8% in 1990 from 7%; Columbia's dropped to 5% from 8%.

Through July of this year, Tri-Star ranked sixth in box office shares at 9.6% and Columbia, seventh at 8.8%.

Sony Corp. of America's Consumer Products Group brought out few major new products in the last year, though it expanded its Digital Audio Tape line and introduced a digital remote control that allows its components to talk to each other. In a significant pricing move and a response to competitive pressures, Sony lowered the premium for its Trinitron line.

Instead, Sony devoted more attention and ad spending to the U.S., raising spending as much as 50% for a variety of its mainline products, including camcorders and TVs.

Sony's Trinitron brand held a 6.85% share of U.S. TV sales (up from 6.5%) last year, placing it fourth, according to Television Digest. Sony is No. 1 in camcorder sales with an 18% share (up from 15% in 1989). Sony is No. 13 in VCR sales with 3.75% share, up from 2.3%.

Sony's future may hinge on the success of two new products. Late this year Sony will launch its Data Discman, which offers the advantages of computer storage and retrieval in a book-size device. Late next year Sony will launch its Mini Disc system that both plays and records digitally on small compact discs.

That launch will put Sony in a major battle with NV Philips' Philips Consumer Electronics division, which is unveiling competing digital compact cassette technology that plays current audio cassettes but records in a new digital format.

Sony moved advertising for its consumer products division to Leo Burnett USA and indicated it would be stepping up event-oriented promotional activity. Burnett advertising will carry a "Be Sony" theme.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Tandy Corp., faced with sluggish sales from its flagship Radio Shack chain, is adding name brands, upgrading its house brands and expanding into new retailing concepts.

Radio Shack, which saw same-store sales drop 2% for the fiscal year ended June 30, for the first time will sell non-Tandy-made products in its stores beginning this holiday season.

Last month, it began selling big-ticket name-brand audio and video equipment in 140 small-town stores.

Tandy is expanding outside its Radio Shack base, which accounts for about 70% of total revenues. The company in the fourth quarter of calendar 1991 will open six Computer City discount superstores, which will sell Tandy and other brands of personal computers. By 1995, Tandy expects to have 100 of the discount stores in operation and generating sales of $1 billion.

Major expansion is also under way for the nine-store Edge in Electronics chain, which carries Tandy and other name-brand personal electronic products, and the 400-unit chain of McDuff and Video-Concepts stores, that sells big-ticket electronics and appliances made by Tandy and others.

Tandy/Radio Shack, which has long suffered an image of being a purveyor of cheap electronics and gadgets for hobbyists, is also upgrading its house brands. It continues to expand its top-of-the-line Optimus brand for audio components.

Tandy's Memtek Products unit is capitalizing on its Memorex brand name and expanding it beyond audio and videotapes. Tandy will go head-to-head against Sony Corp. of America and Panasonic Co. as it introduces in the fourth quarter of 1991 a line of Memorex-brand TVs, stereos and VCRs in Tandy Corp. and other stores.

The company has high hopes for digital recording technology. It plans to introduce a digital compact cassette player in the first half of calendar 1992. It also continues to work on the development of an erasable/recordable compact disc.

In computers, Tandy has already established a leadership position in multimedia technology that combines text, graphics, sound and animation on a PC. It's GRiD Systems Corp. unit will also continue to push its dominant position in pen-based computer products, which can read handwriting.

Tandy in 1991 abandoned its 200 Radio Shack Computer Center retail stores, which sold to small-to-midsize businesses. Most of its small-business sales come from its outbound sales force anyway.

Last year, Tandy hired Lowell Duncan as its first corporate VP of marketing, and it's searching for a new advertising director. However, Tandy has no plans to move its ad business out of house.

CORPORATE PROFILE

One thing isn't wasting away in the weight-loss market: ad budgets. In 1990, media spending among players in the U.S. reducing aids category leaped 52.3% to $109.59 million, with products from privately held Thompson Medical Co. accounting for 89.3% of the total.

Slim-Fast and Ultra Slim-Fast products alone upped their media ante a collective 142.4% to $82.7 million in 1990.

Ultra has quickly come to dominate plain Slim-Fast. Ultra Slim-Fast is the "new and improved" version that's thicker, with more fiber, vitamins and minerals. It's the version spawning the line extensions and the reason the product is now thought of as a meal replacement rather than an appetite suppressant.

Until December 1990, Slim-Fast and Ultra Slim-Fast products were a division of privately held Thompson Medical. But they experienced such growth and attendant marketing support, with the lines accounting for 48.9% of Thompson's media spending in 1989 and 75.3% in 1990, that Chairman S. Daniel Abraham spun them into an independent though tightly held entity, Slim-Fast Food Co., in early 1991.

Slim-Fast Food's breakaway is going strong in 1991. Ultra Slim-Fast leads the meal replacement category with an estimated 80% of the market. Making Slim-Fast autonomous allowed Thompson to focus on other OTC product lines, its mainstay until a few years ago.

Dexatrim attracted $14.98 million in media in 1990, down 28.4%. It competes head-to-head with Ciba-Geigy Corp.'s Acutrim appetite suppressant.

The company's goal in 1991, says Debra Wolpov, manager-advertising, is to become "a nutrition company, not a diet company." In keeping with that, two new product lines were introduced in April: Ultra Slim-Fast Frozen Delight non-dairy desserts and Ultra Slim-Fast frozen entrees.

In 1990, the unit introduced Ultra Slim-Fast pudding mix and Ultra Slim-Fast Lite 'N Tasty popcorn and cheese curls.

CORPORATE PROFILE

More than two years after the merger of Time Inc. and Warner Communications, pundits are starting to question whether one plus one equals two after all.

Time Warner's search for strategic partners in overseas markets has been fruitless, and there's little evidence of the much-touted synergies. In July 1991, the company was pressured by shareholders to abandon a controversial rights offering in favor of a more traditional plan.

The failed rights offering turned a harsh spotlight on Time Warner and raised questions about its ability to pay down a crushing $8.9 billion in debt.

The synergies that spurred the creation of Time Warner have been most evident in the magazine publishing area, where Time Inc. Magazine Co. has been aggressively packaging its parent's diverse media resources to sell cross-media programs to marketers like Chrysler Corp., General Motors Corp. and more recently Mazda Motor of America.

The magazine group announced a restructuring of its sales force in June to strengthen its corporate ad sales efforts, putting in place four regional sales executives to whom all sales reps for individual titles now report.

Time Inc. Magazine Co. remained aggressive overall, despite a recession that has severely cut into ad pages at many of its titles. Time, People and Sports Illustrated watched pages fall 20.5%, 13.8% and 16.3%, respectively, the first seven months ended July 1991 compared with the year-earlier period.

The company continued to pour money into Entertainment Weekly, which appears to be gaining momentum, and gave a green light to the rollout of Martha Stewart Living and related media properties. A weekly version of monthly Life was published during the Persian Gulf War.

Sports Illustrated remained the biggest spender of the magazines, shelling out $26.6 million to woo subscribers, up 23.5% from 1989. Virtually all the money was split between cable and spot TV. People cut consumer spending 27.4% to $9.1 million.

After a blockbuster 1989 in which it led all studios, Warner Bros. dropped to a fifth-place ranking with a 13% share of the North American film market. It has rebounded somewhat this year on the strength of "Goodfellas," released in fall 1990, and "Robin Hood," the summer's second-biggest box-office hit.

"Presumed Innocent" received the most media support at $9.9 million. The studio also spent heavily to promote "Driving Miss Daisy" ($9.5 million) and "Gremlins 2" ($9.3 million).

Media spending by Time-Life Books rose a whopping 40.3% to $45.9 million, while spending on Book-of-the-Month Clubs dropped 18% to $5.8 million.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Toyota Motor Sales USA had a second million-plus sales year backed by advertising budget 39% higher than t[illegible] previous record high in 1989.

Toyota says it can meet its pre-Persian Gulf War goal of selling 1 million Toyota cars and trucks and 60,000 Lexus cars in 1991.

Toyota sold 994,471 cars and trucks in calendar 1990, plus 63,534 units from its Lexus luxury car division, giving it a total of 1,058,005 units or a 7.2% share of the total U.S. car/truck market, up 1.2 share points.

The popular Camry was the most heavily promoted, with $49 million in media spending, the same as in 1989. Pickup trucks drew $44 million, up 30%.

Media spending for the two Lexus models totaled $97.8 million, up 112.7%. The top-of-the-line LS 400 model got the bulk of spending, $52 million, up 79%.

Lexus in June added the new SC 400 luxury sports coupe, base-priced at $37,500. The launch included 24-page ad inserts in eight publications.

Lexus this fall introduces the ES 300, replacing the ES 250, which made its debut in 1989.

The restyled 1991 Tercel, base-priced at $6,488 for the two-door model, will be featured in several spots on Major League Baseball's World Series.

The Toyota Paseo, an entry-level sporty coupe priced in the $10,000 to $11,000 range, was introduced in mid-1991. TV spots that broke on NBC basketball were flippant and "wise-guy" in approach, a departure from the spots featuring jumping car owners.

Toyota shelved indefinitely its entry into the full-size pickup truck market, the domain of Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Buffeted by a soft economy, higher fuel costs and competitors' price cutting, UAL Corp. has seen profits disappear. But by other key measures—amount of service, share and long-term direction—the airline has emerged considerably better.

For the first time in four years, UAL officials' main concerns are marketing and route decisions, not selling the company.

Problems in the junk bond market and settlement of a pilot contract helped end drawn-out sale discussions. But also quieting the drive to sell was the airline's success at expanding service in Asia and also in Europe, where it bought some Pan Am routes last year.

As of August, a third of United's capacity was in international service. The Gulf war and the recession helped lower United's passenger-load factor, which measures the percentage of passenger seats in use, to 64.3% for the first half of 1991 compared with 65.5% a year earlier. In July, with Middle East tensions easing, the company reported a load of 72.7%, up from 71% a year ago.

United's share of domestic-revenue passenger miles through July rose to 18.3% (from 16.6% last year), enough to tie it for the top spot with American Airlines. Delta had 15.2% and will get some share growth from its acquisition of Pan Am (5% share), but so will United, which picked up Pan Am's European routes.

United has positioned itself as the business traveler's carrier, with an extensive Mileage Plus frequent-flier program aimed at wooing business travelers who pay higher fares.

United, like most other carriers, pulled back sharply on advertising during the war and, as a result, will spend less in 1991 than in 1990. However, the addition of services and a new European campaign are expected to sharply stimulate spending next year. Much of the ad focus this year has been new service, but is expected to become less image-oriented under new VP-Marketing Adam Aaron, a former Hyatt executive.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Strong performances by Lever Bros. and Van den Bergh Foods couldn't counter the surprising downturn at Thomas J. Lipton Inc. as Unilever's U.S. operations dropped 5.4% in operating profit in 1990 compared with the previous year.

Executives from Lipton, generally one of Unilever's strongest operations, blamed a weak economy, increased competition and static markets for the first profit drop in 38 years.

Unilever responded to the lack of growth at Lipton by eliminating 900 jobs, half related to two U.S. factory closings. By the middle of 1991, the company reported the cost-cutting moves had begun to pay off.

Lipton will spend more money introducing new products now that it has a lower cost base, the company said. Twenty-five new products are being prepared for rollout this year.

Lipton in 1990 supported its teas, soups and side dishes with $21.8 million in ad spending, a 41.6% increase. Lipton is the leading tea marketer globally with about a 30% share, and holds 47% in the U.S., according to Kidder, Peabody & Co. analyst Jay H. Freedman.

The company focused its promotional efforts on decaffeinated tea, sun tea, specialty and convenience teas. Lipton side dishes and Wish-Bone salad dressings added several new varieties, including olive-oil dressings to the Wish-Bone line.

four separate companies, began expanding beyond margarines into cheeses. Van den Bergh's branded margarine business, including Promise and I Can't Believe It's Not Butter, has grown from a 9% share in 1981 to a leading 36% share of the $1.4 billion category last year, Mr. Freedman said.

Van den Bergh is expected to roll out soon a Promise low-fat, low-cholesterol cheese to compete in the $200 million "light" cheese market.

Ragu Foods is attempting to leverage its strong brand name by introducing Chicken Tonight simmer sauces, the company's first effort beyond spaghetti and pizza sauces. The company holds more than a 50% share of the $1 billion-plus spaghetti sauce market, and last year boosted spending for sauces to $23.6 million, up 56.2%.

Lever Bros. continued to hold its own in household cleaning aids. Following a fall introduction, the company expanded Wisk Power Scoop into more markets this year. Lever is high on the new product. Its own estimates show a 5- to 6-point jump in the company's share of powder detergents following the introduction of Power Scoop last fall.

Lever is promising to invest $55 million in marketing behind Power Scoop to compete in the fast-growing superconcentrate segment of the $3.8 billion detergent category. It also appears to be taking ad dollars from other brands. Spending dropped virtually across the board on Wisk, Surf, Sunlight and All.

Lever in 1990 held 24% of the total detergent market, with Wisk as its biggest brand, with an 8% share. Wisk trailed Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide powder at 22.5% and Tide liquid at 9%. Surf also had an 8% share, with 5 percentage points for powder and 3 for liquid.

In other major categories, Lever is the No. 2 fabric softener marketer with a 25% share, 20% for Snuggle and 5% for Final Touch. The company spent $12.3 million to support Snuggle last year, down 31.2%.

Lever markets the leading bar soap, Dove, which holds 17.5% of the $1.5 billion category. The company's other brands, including Caress, Lux, Shield and new Lever 2000, bring its total share to more than 27%. The brands dropped a collective 11.7% in media spending to $26.5 million, which included sizable declines in Dove and Caress but a hefty $6.9 million push to introduce new soap, Lever 2000.

Chesebrough-Pond's USA unit added extensions in 1990 to its main brand lines: Close-Up anti-plaque toothpaste and rinse, Vaseline Intensive Care UV Daily Defense lotion, Vaseline Intensive Care sunless tanning lotion, Block Out moisturizing sunblock and Rave All In One haircare products.

No longer a major player in toothpastes, the company's biggest brand is Close-Up with a 7% share. Unilever also has had little impact on the shampoo market, although it markets several brands, and has made few inroads into the U.S. deodorant category despite its leading position worldwide.

In fragrances, Elizabeth Arden Inc. used Elizabeth Taylor this year in introductory advertising for the star's new White Diamonds, which joins Elizabeth Taylor's Passion, introduced in 1987. The company also is working on an Elizabeth Taylor color cosmetics line planned for a 1992 introduction, to be followed by a skincare line. Lagerfeld Photo for men made its debut last fall.

Unilever's Calvin Klein Cosmetics Co. also introduced a new scent this summer, Escape. Calvin Klein is the No. 2 fragrance marketer with about $140 million in U.S. sales, behind Estee Lauder Inc.'s $200 million.

Unilever's media spending for fragrances, including Passion, Calvin Klein's Eternity and Obsession and other Arden products was $36.6 million, down 5.9%.

This May, Lipton realigned its agency roster by assigning Wish-Bone and Lipton side dishes to Ogilvy & Mather from Young & Rubicam and Gold Bond ice creams to McCann-Erickson Worldwide from Grant/Jacoby.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Although United Telecommunications' US Sprint unit improved its share of the $56 billion long-distance market to about 10% from 8.3%, the year was characterized by an erosion in earnings.

AT&T Co. improved its share to 68% from 66.4% and MCI Communications Corp.'s share jumped to 15% from 12.5%.

Particularly hard hit in the second quarter and again in the third, United Telecom finished the year with net income down 14.9%.

The company blamed competitors' "accelerated sales and marketing efforts." It responded by reducing and realigning its marketing, sales and support functions to focus on residential, small and medium business, major accounts and international segments.

In early 1991, Tom Weigman, former senior partner of Marketing Corp. of America, was hired to the new position of chief marketing officer. Richard Smith, the former top sales and marketing executive, was moved to the new post of senior VP-quality development and PR.

The company's attempt to battle its competitors can't be slighted for a lack of ad spending United Telecom media spending in 1990 jumped 28.1% to $81.3 million, while spending on US Sprint related products surged 38.5% to $79.6 million.

Additional ad dollars have been directed to a series of spots featuring Candice Bergen, who first appeared last October as Sprint's spokeswoman. The initial campaign, which introduced the "Sprint has a better way" theme line, took pot shots at AT&T.

The Big 3 squared off in new product introductions with Sprint and MCI beating AT&T into the marketplace with an 800 number option for residential customers. The two also led the way in the greening of telecommunications, with Sprint launching a March promotion that donated up to 5% of customers' long-distance bills to 25 environmental organizations.

More often than not, Sprint found itself following its competitors in product introductions or in promoting products it already had unveiled. For example, late in 1990 the company created Sprint World, a package focusing on international calling features. But Sprint didn't promote the service until this July—in unique subtitled French-language spots featuring Ms. Bergen—following AT&T's support of its year-old Language Line services.

When MCI broke its Friends and Family 20% discount package last February, Sprint sat on the sidelines. In late May, however, after AT&T also introduced a discount program, Sprint unveiled its Priority frequency discount offer. The package reduced the monthly interstate calling volume needed to receive weekend and daytime discounts.

Sprint also is following its competitors into the market with a twist on their offering $20 cash certificates to customers who switched carriers. Sprint is developing a gift program to reward customer loyalty.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Upjohn Co.'s ad expenditures last year were fueled by the prescribed hair treatment, Rogaine, as well as over-the-counter drug Motrin.

Upjohn general promotion advertising, which includes TV spots that refer to reversing male pattern baldness but don't specifically mention Rogaine, increased 17.5% to $27.5 million in 1990. Spending in print, which mentions Rogaine by name, nearly doubled to $9.3 million.

This year, Upjohn appears to have increased its emphasis on broadcast advertising. First-quarter 1991 spending for Upjohn general promotion (largely TV commercials for male pattern baldness) totaled $9.7 million, up 29.3% from a year earlier. Rogaine print advertising fell 33% to $2.2 million.

In addition, FDA approved this August the use of Rogaine as a treatment for female pattern baldness. Promotion should start in early 1992. The company estimates that more than 20 million American women have hair loss vs. about 30 million men.

Motrin IB pain reliever, introduced in 1989, has grown from a 2% share of the ibuprofen segment to 11% last year, said Julie Wolfe of Kline & Co. Although the segment grew 4%, the two leading brands lost ground. Category leader Advil, marketed by American Home Products Corp., dropped to 49% from 53% while Bristol-Myers Squibb Co.'s Nuprin fell to 18% from 20%, Ms. Wolfe said.

Last year Upjohn sold the rights to 17 of its minor consumer brands, leaving Motrin IB, Kaopectate diarrhea medicine and Cortaid antibiotic as its main consumer products.

Ad support for the latter two products grew by double digits; Cortaid expenditures rose 11.9% to $4.8 million, and Kaopectate support increased 24% to $6.4 million.

As part of a management reorganization in late 1990, William U. Parfet was named president. Analysts said his promotion from exec VP reflects the company's desire to remain independent, amid speculation that Upjohn was a candidate for a takeover or merger. Mr. Parfet is the great-grandson of company founder W.E. Upjohn. The founding family controls 18% of Upjohn's stock. Outgoing President Theodore Cooper remains chairman-ceo. He was the first from outside the family to run the company.

Fueling this speculation is the trend toward consolidation in the pharmaceutical industry in recent years, and the predicted pressures on Upjohn's future profits.

Upjohn in 1993 will lose patent protection on two drugs—Xanax, a tranquilizer, and Halcion, a sleeping pill. Together, they bring in 30% of Upjohn's profits and about 15% of sales (nearly $500 million in revenue), according to analysts.

Accordingly, Upjohn's research has been on the pharmaceutical side where it has concentrated on cancer and infectious diseases, cardiovascular ailments, and disorders of the central nervous system.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Ad spending in 1990 by U.S. dairy marketing groups was mostly flat, with regional and national dairy groups, particularly milk marketers, trying to stretch funding to stop the decline in consumption levels.

The milk industry had hoped to get a $110 million ad boost this year as part of the federal farm bill, but those hopes are fading.

The bill, passed by Congress in fall 1990, would fund new milk advertising through a 20¢ fee per hunderweight paid by processors, who buy milk from dairy farmers and package it for sale. A new group, the National Processor Advertising & Promotions Board, would administer the funds.

But before the bill can become law, the processors must approve the measure in a referendum. At its October board meeting, the Milk Industry Foundation, representing 80% of processors, will decide if a referendum is to be held. The bill appears to lack the support needed to pass, according to a foundation poll. Half the processors must approve the assessment.

Under the 1983 Dairy & Tobacco Adjustment Act, the amount of money available for dairy advertising is determined by raw milk volume. Dairy farmers and co-ops pay a 15¢ per hundredweight of raw milk assessment.

The National Dairy Production & Research Board receives the largest portion. The board got $77.5 million in funding for 1990, up 2.9%, and spent $54.9 million in media, down 6.8%. The biggest campaign is cheese at $21 million, followed by milk at $16 million.

The economy isn't helping the dairy industry. The board expects flat dairy sales again in 1991, anticipating a weaker foodservice market.

Consumption in some areas seems to be gradually on the upswing. In the milk categories covered by the board, children ages 6 to 16, consumption rose 2% last year.

Dairy marketers are seeing continued success with low-fat products. They are trying to position products such as cheese as part of a quality diet. The NDPRB is conducting a study to match market segments with milk types.

The California Milk Advisory Board is having success with a new milk introduced last year, Extra Light 1%, which has only 1% butterfat but a high calcium level of 11%. It is gaining market share over other low-fat milks and has driven milk sales up 5%. The board's media spending was flat at $18.5 million.

The biggest of the sister bodies to the national dairy board, the American Dairy Association, kept spending flat at $48 million.

Other regional board spending was down or flat. The Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board cut spending from about $11 million to only $546,000 in 1990 as it funneled more monies into research. The Washington Dairy Products Commission spent $3.7 million, even with 1989, and Oregon Dairy Products Commission spending remained at $900,000.

CORPORATE PROFILE

The federal budget may be continuing to grow, but such is not the case with the amount of federal funds allocated to advertising. Whether military or civilian, virtually every account is looking at stiffer cuts, with some expected to decline sharply in fiscal 1991, ending Sept. 30.

The U.S. Navy recruiting account, for example, grew 29.4% from fiscal 1989 to fiscal 1990, to $25.1 million, but is expected to shrink 35.5%, to $16.2 million, in 1991.

Likewise for the U.S. Marine Corps account. After a slight decline from fiscal 1989 to 1990, $17.8 million to $17.1 million, the account that's been held by J. Walter Thompson USA since 1946 is slated to shrink to $10.1 million for fiscal 1991.

One caveat for the scheduled budget changes that could alter some of the expected numbers for fiscal 1991 is the Persian Gulf War.

The U.S. Postal Service, a quasi-government agency, also saw considerable decline in advertising. That's all the more noteworthy since the postal service is a major sponsor of the 1992 Olympics; the agency is just gearing up for its Olympics-related campaign, but nevertheless was coming off a budget cut of about 14% from fiscal 1989 to fiscal 1990's $31.6 million.

The joint military recruiting account, once targeted for considerable expansion at the expense of individual service accounts, is another shrinking account. Down 2.6% in 1989 to $26.3 million, the joint recruiting account fell to $11.7 in fiscal 1990.

The National Railroad Passenger Corp (Amtrak) spent $25.5 million in media, down 5.4% from the prior year.

CORPORATE PROFILE

U.S. Shoe initiated a restructuring plan in 1990 to streamline operations and increase productivity as it boosted ad spending across the board among its major units.

Restructuring included the sale of 21-store Cabaret accessories retail division, agreements to sell 134 Ups 'N Downs women's apparel stores, closing of two footwear manufacturing plants, termination of the Adrienne Vittadini footwear licensing agreement and merger of Amalfi and David Evins footwear divisions.

The restructuring affected operations accounting for about $330 million in sales, or 12% of total company revenues and $25 million in operating losses in fiscal 1990, which closed Feb. 2, 1991. U.S. Shoe's new president-ceo, Bannus B. Hudson, led the restructuring. He replaced Philip G. Barach, who retired in 1990.

U.S. Shoe's biggest unit, the women's apparel retailing group, recorded an operating loss of $4.9 million, down from a $53.2 million gain in 1989. The loss included a charge of $56 million related to the restructuring. Earnings were down at the group's largest unit, Casual Corner, and also at Ups 'N Downs, Caren Charles and T.H. Mandy.

The weak Christmas selling season affected returns. The company shouldered a decline in gross profits of 8.6% in the soft fourth quarter.

Other retail group units, Petite Sophisticate and August Max, had improved sales and earnings.

Media spending in support of the specialty retailers increased 31.4% though remained at a modest $2.05 million, with Casual Corner claiming $1.5 million of that. Casual Corner is refocusing its merchandise mix, adding more sportswear and casual items to its career line. The chain this month launched a new campaign with the tagline "Work hard, play hard, shop easy." Advertising to Women which won agency-of-record status this year, handles.

Strong first-half 1990 sales in the footwear group compensated for a second-half decrease as the full year achieved 2% growth, as the group reported an operating loss of $13.9 million (including a restructuring charge of $34 million) compared with a $30 million gain in 1989.

Media spending for the group was up 53.8% to $16 million. With hopes of improving product awareness, Easy Spirit shoes and sporting footwear boosted its ad spending to $12.4 million, up from $4.9 million.

An Easy Spirit men's line was launched regionally this year and will go national by the fall of 1992.

LensCrafters has cornered one-third of the eyewear superstore market, which makes up 10% of the $10 billion U.S. retail eyewear market.

A 9% sales increase by LensCrafters is attributed primarily to the opening of 92 new retail outlets; comparable-store sales declined 2%. Operating earnings fell 72% in 1990 to $13.3 million, primarily due to costs of opening 58 stores in the second half of the year. It accounted for two-thirds of U.S. Shoe's media dollars.

Television has Nielsen. Radio has Arbitron. Consumer magazines have Simmons and MRI. And now business publications have a reliable way to measure audience, too. AHF Marketing research has just completed a study of the Advertising Age audience and the findings are impressive.

The study shows that Advertising Age delivers a total audience of 316,024* with an average 3.7 readers per copy.

Advertising Age also delivers a large circulation—higher than any other marketing publication.

Even in these tough economic times, Ad Age subscriptions are 100% paid. That's because Advertising Age is full of news that's important to business—it's a source of marketing facts and information that are available nowhere else. That's why every week marketers and decision-makers around the world eagerly read Ad Age, and then pass it along.

To make sure your message "has legs"—and reaches your best business prospects—advertise in Ad Age. Call Ed Erhardt at 212-210-0153 or your local Ad Age representative today.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Volkswagen, with more consecutive yearly declines in U.S. sales than the number of syllables in Fahrvergnugen, is embarking on an eight-year, $38 billion worldwide spending program to firm up its shaky market position.

VW, which continues to build its U.S. advertising around the Fahrvergnugen ("joy of driving") theme, sold 157,454 VWs and upscale Audis in the U.S. in 1990, up 1.6%. It still posted a 3.8% decline in U.S. revenue in marks, largely due to dealer incentive programs and price cutting. VW has strung together six consecutive years of U.S. revenue declines: all in marks. (Each mark was worth 15.3% more dollars in 1990 than '89, delivering a growth in dollars.)

VW/Audi's total share of the U.S. car market rose slightly to 1.63% from 1.57%, while its share of the import market climbed to 5.3% from 4.8%.

VW has commited more than $20 billion in new investments, including the 1991 purchase of a majority share in Skoda, the Czechoslovak auto marketer.

VW plans to spend $1 billion expanding its Puebla, Mexico, plant to supply North America with Golfs and Jettas. VW reached an agreement with Toyota Motor Corp. in July 1991 that paved the way for Toyota dealerships in Japan to begin selling Volkswagens and Audis. The deal could push VW sales in Japan to 100,000 units annually by 1996, compared with 53,461 last year.

For the U.S. market, VW plans a spring 1992 launch of the front-wheel-drive Eurovan, successor to the Vanagon. New editions of Golf and Jetta also are planned. A two-seat speedster to compete with Mazda Motor of America's Miata is in development.

VW's key U.S. marketing strategy in 1990 continued to be forsaking customer rebates in favor of price cuts and dealer incentives. Instead of rebates to raise consumer awareness in 1990, VW banked on its Fahrvergnugen campaign.

The sporty new Passat drew the largest media expenditure for a nameplate with $38 million in media in its first year.

This May, VW introduced a credit card program, Club Fahrvergnugen, that had been running in Europe since late 1990. The Visa card program for VW/Audi owners offers cardholders discounts with Carnival Cruise Lines, Northwest Airlines, Holiday Inn and Sony Corp.

Audi saw its U.S. sales drop 0.8% to 21,106 units. A new 10% luxury tax on cars priced above $30,000 slowed sales in first-half 1991.

Audi plans to revamp virtually its entire U.S. line in the 1992 model year. The new models will occupy price gaps between Japanese luxury models and the pricier European luxury cars. Audi has been trying to reposition itself by instituting extensive warranties, advertising stressing driver control and safety, and innovative leasing programs.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Wal-Mart Stores snubbed its nose at a recession that caught most retailers in a vise and leapfrogged over Kmart Corp. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. in total sales to become the nation's biggest retailer.

Wal-Mart also spent considerably fewer ad dollars than its chief rivals in calender '90. Most of its advertising is vendor-funded through co-op deals, which holds down expenses.

The retailer isn't expected to slow its pace, either. It plans to be a $125 billion company by the year 2000. Wal-Mart has 1,600 Wal-Mart stores, 181 Sam's Clubs, and four Hypermart USA units in a 36-state trade area, and is aggressively moving into the Northeast and California. It's expanding in Mexico through a joint venture with Cifra to open about five Club Aurrera membership warehouse stores this year in Mexico City. Cifra is Mexico's largest retailer.

Wal-Mart is testing a close-out store concept with four Bud's Warehouse Outlets. And in a move to further expand its customer base, it broke its first TV advertising aimed at U.S. Hispanics last April, via GSD&M.

Despite the recession, Wal-Mart's same-store sales grew by 11% in the first six months of its current fiscal year. Overall sales, enhanced by new-store growth, have expanded 29%. In fiscal 1990, Wal-Mart posted a 26% increase in total sales, as same-store sales grew 10%.

Part of Wal-Mart's strength is its everyday low-price strategy adopted in the 1960s. GSD&M and Bernstein-Rein handle Wal-Mart's advertising that bears the theme: "Always the low price on the brands you trust—Always."

Wal-Mart's cause-related marketing efforts also score points with consumers. Wal-Mart uses green shelf tags in its stores to promote environmental improvements to products and packaging, and has set up recycling centers at its stores. TV advertising from GSD&M supports.

The retailer also remains committed to buying U.S.-made goods. Advertising supports from Bernstein-Rein.

Wal-Mart concentrated most of its measured spending on spot TV in 1990, which amounted to 64% of total media expenditures. Most of Wal-Mart's unmeasured spending is on monthly circulars prepared by its in-house ad department, which also handles newspaper run-of-press advertising.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Warner-Lambert Co. upped media spending 7.3% to $630.8 million in 1990, reflecting support for new brands like Medi-Flu and significant increases for Benadryl, Halls and Trident.

In addition, the company established a $30 million ad and promotion budget for the early 1991 launch of the Schick Tracer shaving system, that included $17 million in nonmedia support.

Tracer competes directly with Gillette Co.'s Sensor, launched in January 1990. As of April 1991 Tracer had a 1.4% share of the rapidly growing $935 million wet razor category, compared with Sensor's 12.4%, said Andrew Shore, first VP-senior analyst at Prudential Securities.

On the agency side, the company consolidated in April 1991 nearly $200 million in broadcast TV buying at J. Walter Thompson USA, which already handled the majority of that business.

Benadryl was the top-spending brand in 1990 with $34.7 million in media, up 6.4%. Backing for Benadryl Plus Nighttime Formula, launched in July 1989, continued to increase, up 119% to $3.8 million. Benadryl leads the $170 million allergy medicine category with a 40% share, according to Julie Wolfe, senior analyst at business consultancy Kline & Co.

In April 1991 the National Cancer Institute released a study linking cancer to mouthwashes with high alcohol content. The American Dental Association reviewed the study but allowed its seal of approval to remain on Listerine (26.9% alcohol). Listerine is the No. 1 mouthwash with a 30% share of the $800 million U.S. market.

Warner rolled out Extra Strength Rolaids in 1990, backed by $14.4 million in media. Regular Rolaids dropped 86% in spending to $2.1 million. Rolaids has a 30% share of the $750 million antacid category, Ms. Wolfe said.

The company in early 1991 rolled national with Halls Plus, a cough suppressant with a syrup center. Halls Plus received $3.3 million in media. Halls has about 50% of the $330 million U.S. cough drop market.

In August 1990 Warner-Lambert launched Medi-Flu, a tablet and liquid medicine that relieves severe flu symptoms.

American Chicle Corp. in 1990 began testing Cinn-A-Burst gum, which is expected to go national in fourth-quarter 1991. In November a new TV campaign broke for Trident themed "Walk and chew." Chicle trails Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co. in the $1.4 billion U.S. gum market, with a 24%-to-25% share to 48%-to-50% for Wrigley.

In August 1991, Joseph D. Williams stepped down as chairman-ceo. His position was assumed by Melvin R. Goodes, who had been president-chief operating officer.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Wendy's International is concentrating on streamlining operations and refocusing marketing programs.

In 1990, the company introduced a leaner regional operational structure and added training programs while reducing restaurant management levels, and instituted tighter food and labor controls. The payoff: Net income rose 28.2% to $39.3 million. Sales were harder to come by. Systemwide sales rose to $3.07 billion, up only 1.1%, compared with industry sales of 7%.

Average sales for domestic Wendy's restaurants rose 2.8% to $811,000, still short of the peak $871,000 reported in 1985 when the chain was riding the popularity of its "Where's the beef?" ad slogan.

Wendy's remained the nation's sixth-largest restaurant chain in 1990, and the No. 4 hamburger/sandwich chain with a 7.8% share of category vs. 8.5% in 1989, according to Nation's Restaurant News.

Wendy's has avoided joining the rush to price discounting. It also kept its coupon expense to 1% of sales, compared with 3.2% in 1989. That explains in part its 78.9% decline in newspaper spending.

While shunning coupons, Wendy's didn't totally eschew price reductions. One cornerstone of its marketing has been promotion of the Super Value Menu, which prices seven basic items such as the Junior Bacon Cheeseburger, garden salad, baked potato, large-size french fries and soft drinks at 99¢.

Another key has been Senior Chairman R. David Thomas, who's proved to be a popular spokesman for the chain he founded in 1969. Last May, Mr. Thomas appeared in a TV spot for the Super Value Menu with Susan Lucci, star of the daytime drama "All My Children." It was his 75th commercial in a campaign that began in April 1989 and will continue indefinitely, the company says.

Advertising has also focused on Wendy's sandwich menu, which it augmented with a series of limited-time hamburger and chicken offerings including Dave's Deluxe burger and the Chicken Club, Chicken Parmesan and Chicken Cordon Bleu sandwiches. A Grilled Chicken sandwich was added permanently in September 1990.

Named for Mr. Thomas' daughter, Wendy's hasn't forgotten that 33% of fast-food sales are to families with children. The chain increased its ad spending targeted to children. For example, it bought $8.3 million in syndicated TV programming, more than a year earlier. Some of that spending came from its network TV budget, down 15.9%. Last month, Wendy's launched a national promotion touting its kids meal, priced at a permanently lowered $1.99.

Wendy's continues its strategy of assessing 2% of systemwide sales for national advertising and an additional 2% minimum for local advertising and marketing.

Wendy's international presence remains limited: At yearend, it had 291 units outside the U.S., all franchised except for 88 company-operated stores in Canada. The chain intends to revive its international growth, starting with the addition of at least 60 units in 1991.

A series of top management promotions announced early in 1991 moved James Near from president to chairman, a post vacant since the 1989 retirement of Robert L. Barney. Succeeding Mr. Near as president was Gordon Teter, formerly an exec VP. John Casey, previously an exec VP, was named to the new post of vice chairman.

CORPORATE PROFILE

Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co. bolstered three of its four flagship brands with extra flavor, doubled ad spending and fresh positionings in 1990.

Wrigley protected its leading position with a 3.9% increase in media last year that paid off in an 11.9% increase in worldwide sales, to $1.1 billion. Wrigley's U.S. operations posted a 6% increase in sales, although analysts expect future growth to come from overseas.

In 1990, Wrigley began to actively market its products in eastern Europe, including Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Yugoslavia, and experienced volume growth in western Europe after political changes in Germany.

The company's No. 1 brand in dollar sales, sugar-free Extra, also was its most heavily advertised; spending was up nearly 15%, to $28.2 million. In 1991, the company added print ads to its "Lasts an Extra long time" campaign. Wrigley, which in 1989 added cinnamon and "winter fresh" flavors to the Extra line, this year is rolling out a new Classic Bubblegum flavor. Sugarless gums now account for nearly half of U.S. gum sales. By early 1990, Extra had moved past American Chicle Corp.'s Trident and RJR Nabisco's Care-Free to take over leadership in that market, with about a 45% share.

Wrigley took unusually aggressive marketing moves in 1990 for two of its other "classic" brands, Doublemint and Spearmint.

Doublemint's media budget doubled, to $27.5 million, as Wrigley and agency BBDO, Chicago, introduced a new campaign and tagline. Gone are the Doublemint twins and the "Double your pleasure, double your fun" jingle—although some elements of the gum's 30-year campaign remain. The new TV campaign uses a "No single gum" tagline and a host of double exposures—some sets of twins but other repeating images as well.

Beginning in November, Wrigley put all Spearmint media dollars behind its campaign positioning the gum as a smokers' alternative. TV and radio spots, print ads and billboards describe situations where smoking is banned or a problem—and offer Spearmint as an option. Wrigley spent $20.7 million spreading the Spearmint "Pure chewing satisfaction" message in 1990; Spearmint is the company's No. 2 brand in unit sales, behind Doublemint.

Wrigley has maintained a steady 48% to 50% share of the $1.4 billion U.S. gum business, followed by a 24%-25% share for American Chicle, a Warner-Lambert Co. unit, according to American Consulting Corp. Wrigley has six of the 10 biggest gum brands in the country, with Extra, Juicy Fruit, Doublemint, Spearmint, Freedent and Big Red.

Methodology to Top 100 ranking

Rankings

The 100 Leading National Advertisers are selected from the 200 largest advertisers based on measured U.S. ad spending (see below) in calendar 1990. Companies spending at least $31.3 million (up from $29.5 million in 1989) in measured media make up this group of 200. Those companies are ranked by the sum of their measured and unmeasured expenditures. This report profiles the top 100.

Measured media & monitoring services

In this report, media advertising refers to ad expenditures in national consumer media that are monitored by LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service.

The media breakouts labeled "U.S. ad spending" at the beginning of each company profile were provided by LNA/Arbitron. References within the corporate profile to media spending in virtually all cases refer to numbers from LNA/Arbitron.

Media totals also are for calendar years 1990 and 1989.

Ten measured media

Magazine: Publishers Information Bureau monitors 174 consumer magazines, four of which are national Sunday magazines. Newspaper: LNA/Media Records measures and projects newspaper data to 125 markets for all categories except financial and retail ad spending, which are not projected and represent 41 and 36 markets, respectively. Sunday magazine: PIB measures four Sunday magazines. Media Records measures 34 and projects spending based on one-time open inch rates to 125 markets. Outdoor: LNA Outdoor measures poster and paint boards in more than 200 plant operator markets. Network TV: Arbitron records every minute of ABC, CBS and NBC network TV and calculates ad spending by applying program rates to each spot. Spot TV: Arbitron monitors TV stations in 75 markets, 17 of which are monitored daily, and 58 once a week. Syndicated TV: Arbitron gathers rates from advertisers and agencies and applies the rates to national spots bought by advertisers. Cable TV networks: Arbitron monitors the Family Channel, Cable News Networks, ESPN, MTV:Music Television; USA Network and Superstation WTBS around the clock. Estimated rates are applied to advertisers. Network radio: Arbitron monitors 17 radio networks. Spot radio: LNA compiles data from national stations' representative organizations, yielding spending for nearly 2,500 stations in more than 200 markets.

Unmeasured spending

Unmeasured spending figures are Ad Age estimates and include direct mail, promotion, co-op, couponing, catalogs, business and farm magazines and special events, to name a few. Corporate annual reports, 10-K forms, corporate sources and Ad Age reporters help compute this number. Unmeasured advertising does not include corporate overhead, overseas ad spending or most local ad spending.

Brand spending

Ad spending by top brands presented in tabular form at the top of each profile includes LNA/Arbitron's 10 measured media only. Brands listed in the tables must have spending greater than $5 million and be among the company's top 10 brands—the maximum listed.

Brand expenditures represent total spending by an LNA designated "tradename" within a PIB subclass.

For example, in the Philip Morris Cos. profile, "Kraft cheeses" and "Kraft salad dressings & mayonnaise" are listed as top brands, even though they both carry the "Kraft" name. The two are in separate PIB subclasses and are considered separate tradenames by LNA.

Personnel, brands, agencies

Following each corporate profile is a listing of personnel involved with various aspects of the company. Only the very top corporate executives involved in the marketing sequence are listed. The agency listed on the account includes only the point person on that account.

Sales and earnings

Worldwide, U.S. and division sales and earnings are taken from public documents. Within the profile, references to sales and earnings are generally for calendar reporting periods, because most companies are on such a reporting schedule. However, if a company reports on a fiscal basis, its yearend closing is indicated in the corporate profile.

While ad figures represent U.S. spending only, worldwide headquarters are listed because some large corporate advertisers include divisions which are not related in the U.S. Spending by Philips NV, for example, includes North American Philips Corp. and Polygram Records Corp.

Corporate composition

Parent company totals for advertising spending are pro forma for 1990 and 1989—and include 100% of the ad spending of companies they either acquired or agreed to acquire as of Aug. 1, 1991. Similarly, companies or divisions divested before Aug. 1, 1991 have been excluded. This procedure eliminated Continental Airlines Holdings from the Top 100 this year. The airline holding company, ranked No. 94 in last year's report, sold off Eastern Airlines early this year. Without Eastern, Continental's ad spending fell below the cutoff.

Top spenders

fell to second in spot TV despite a 7.5% increase in that medium.

Food and beverage marketers especially felt the effects of a sagging economy that touched virtually all spending. Of the 24 major food advertisers among the Top 100, 16 cut ad spending in 1990 while aggregate ad spending remained flat at $11 billion.

"Less," whether in calories or cholesterol, also steered food and drink trends in 1990. Philip Morris' Kraft General Foods introduced fat-free products ranging from cheese to salad dressing to mayonnaise. No. 38 Sara Lee Corp. brought out light sausages and franks, and No. 31 Ralston Purina Co. lightened its Hostess Twinkies.

Making many of those entries possible were fat and sugar substitutes such as Simplesse and NutraSweet from No. 100 Monsanto Co., a new entry to the list. Thompson Medical Co./Slim-Fast Food Co. vaulted from No. 125 a year ago to No. 85 on the basis of heavy advertising for the Ultra Slim-Fast line—now billed as a meal replacement rather than an appetite suppressant.

With health benefits gaining such marketing cachet, companies were bound to run into regulatory woes. No. 14 Nestle SA, anticipating industrywide scrutiny from the FDA, took the "fresh" off its Contadina label. P&G eliminated "fresh" from Citrus Hill after a product seizure by the feds; P&G eliminated "no cholesterol" on the Crisco label; Philip Morris removed percentage fat-free labels.

Changing eating habits and the recession spurred the nation's fast-food chains to respond with a panoply of new treats, including the much ballyhooed McLean Deluxe burger at No. 8 McDonald's Corp.; value menus became common at most of the big chains.

The 12 retailers in the Top 100, struggling through the year, increased ad spending only 3.7% to $4.7 billion. Five spent fewer ad dollars in 1990 than in 1989. Wal-Mart Stores, No. 70, passed No. 9 Kmart Corp. and Sears in total sales even though Sears' Merchandising division outspent by almost nine times Wal-Mart's largely vendor-funded ad total.

Indications are that 100 Leaders' spending in 1991 will continue to be mixed. Even auto advertising slowed to a modest 6.6% growth in first quarter '91 among the 29 leading auto brands. The 10 auto companies among the Top 100 spent a relatively robust $4.6 billion in advertising in 1990, up 11.8%.

Amid the sluggish spending is speculation that Philip Morris, generating $18 billion in cash flow over the next five years, is primed to invest in a major international food company, perhaps making P&G's return to the top short-lived. □

Why are America's top companies participating in the American Park Network?

- Because visiting national and state parks is the #1 recreational activity in the country today. Over 83 million active, upscale adults and families make up America's largest, untapped captive audience.
- Because American Park Network magazines cover 22 of the country's most famous parks including Yellowstone, Yosemite, Grand Canyon, Great Smoky Mountains, and Everglades.
- And because the American Park Network creatively integrates advertising, promotion and merchandising in a way that is unmatched by conventional media... sponsors receive free park vacations, and passes for tours and activities – all ideal for promotional tie-ins, sweepstakes, or trade incentives.

It's no wonder that companies like AT&T, Chevrolet, Hershey, HFC, Kodak, Kraft General Foods, Nike, Pentax, and Prudential Insurance have participated in one of the most powerful marketing tools in America today. Some major product categories still available.

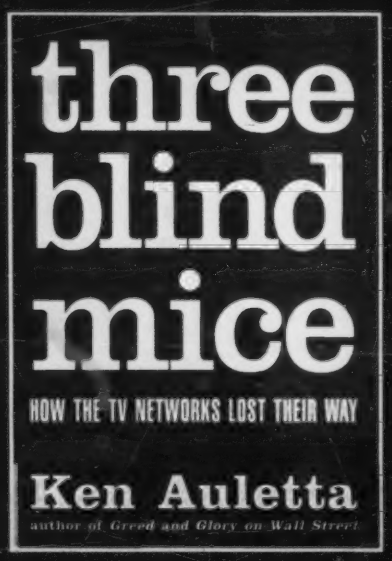
How network TV, advertisers and agencies played a high-stakes game



For network TV, 1987 was a pivotal year. Prices were rising at a double-digit pace, higher and faster than in any other advertising medium, yet network audiences were eroding. During the summer, when advance, upfront sales are made for the TV programming season starting in the fall, advertisers and their agency negotiators for the first time began to talk about a "market correction."

But a correction didn't occur until this year—four years late. And then it was recession-induced. Ken Auletta's hot new book, "Three Blind Mice," provides a front-row seat to what happened during that pivotal, high-powered summer of '87.

In 1980, $5.1 billion of the $81 billion spent on marketing products in the U.S. was spent on the three television networks. By 1987, the total monies available for marketing doubled, but so did the promotional budgets. And though network advertising rose to just under $9 billion, its relative share of the total was declining.

All of which lent a sense of urgency to the 1987 network upfront sales effort. By June 17, 1987, Jake Keever [sales VP at ABC-TV] was able to distill his meetings and consultations into a three-page, single-spaced strategy memorandum. . . . Central to ABC's strategy was its intentions

Sorrell's WPP empire under strain

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Maybe Martin Sorrell should have stuck to making wire shopping baskets.

Unlike his global communications empire, the small shopping basket company, acquired by Mr. Sorrell in 1986 as the foundation of his WPP Group, is doing just fine.

The same can't be said for WPP itself.

Last week, another key communications executive, Robert Dilenschneider, the president-ceo of WPP's Hill & Knowlton public relations unit, departed.

The 47-year-old Mr. Dilenschneider was replaced at New York-based Hill & Knowlton by Thomas Eidson, 47, its worldwide chief operating officer.

A source close to the situation said Mr. Dilenschneider this week will be negotiating with WPP over benefits and payments; the possibility exists that Mr. Dilenschneider could end up starting arbitration proceedings against the company.

"I didn't resign," Mr. Dilenschneider emphasized last week.

Four former Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide executives have claims pending against WPP, and a WPP executive in London who left in March has a hearing before a U.K. industrial tribunal scheduled for late October concerning his allegation of unfair dismissal.

"I'm just one in a line" who have been fired, Mr. Dilenschneider said.

Even before that event, the financial community here, and Mr. Sorrell's own operating companies, had been watching closely to see whether his $1 billion refinancing of WPP in April would be enough to ride

Detroit fights back to regain share

Ford, Chrysler plan big hikes in ad $

By Raymond Serafin

Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. plan to increase ad spending in 1992, trying to reclaim market share lost to Japanese rivals that spent aggressively in 1991 despite the economic downturn.

Ford's automotive division budgets could climb as much as 20%, though those figures haven't been firmed up, sources say. Ford is spending an estimated $340 million in 1991 and Lincoln-Mercury an estimated $115 million.

Alex Trotman, Ford exec VP-North American Automotive Operations, signaled the potential boosts in a recent interview when he acknowledged Japanese automakers had increased the marketing pressure.

"I think we probably right now are underspending," Mr. Trotman said. "I haven't made any decisions as to what we might do about that, but it's something that could change very rapidly. We might decide we'd better turn up the heat somewhat. . . . We watch the [competitive] data all the time, and we may well make a change over the next few months."

"Given the kind of year we've had and the pressure on the industry, everybody's got to make a strong business case to generate more dollars."

Chrysler has already added an estimated $40 million to $50 million to fourth-quarter ad spending (AA, Aug. 26). Sources peg Chrysler ad budget increases for 1992 at 20% over this year's $550 million level, largely to back the launch of the new Jeep Grand Cherokee during the Winter Olympics broadcasts on CBS-TV and next fall's launch of three key new midsize models under the company's so-called LH program.

"Chrysler has really made up its mind that it has to support its new products across the board," an agency source said.

Marketing executives at General Motors Corp. are still debating 1992 budgets, with a corporate decision on marketing plans not expected until later this year.

"Given the kind of year we've had and the pressure on the industry, everybody's got to make a strong business case to generate more dollars," said Jeff Hurlbert, general marketing manager at

Coke/CAA draws flak

Agent charges conflict of interest, unfair business

By Cleveland Horton

A lone voice in Hollywood is taking on the biggest and most influential talent agency in the nation.

The Charles H. Stern Agency, a talent shop specializing in placing celebrities in commercials, has begun a campaign to challenge Michael Ovitz's Creative Artists Agency and its recent alignment with Coca-Cola Co.

Charles Stern, president of the 30-year-old agency, has been visiting state and union officials to point out possible conflict of interest, unfair business practices and restraint of trade issues.

Further, Mr. Stern said his agency has retained a law firm to research the legal issues surrounding the Creative Artists/-Coca-Cola deal. He wouldn't identify the firm, however.

"How is it possible to represent talent, with his list of 650 clients, and represent the best interest of the employer?" Mr. Stern asked. 'How can he get both the best person and the best price?" Mr. Ovitz is chairman of Creative Artists.

Early this month, Coca-Cola named Creative Artists "worldwide media and communications consultant," charged with developing "global strategies for marketing, promotion, new technologies, sports, arts and entertainment."

Any charges of conflict of interest were dismissed without merit by a Creative Artists spokesman.

"The relationship (between Creative Artists and Coke) is not about talent and commercials," he said. "We've made it clear from the get-go that that's not what it's about. This is about global strategy. This has nothing to do with talent."

Mr. Stern met with California Acting Labor Commissioner

Baby Bells bill looms

WASHINGTON—U.S. Rep. Jim Cooper (D., Tenn.) is expected to introduce, perhaps as early as this week, legislation that would keep the Baby Bells out of the information services business until "effective competition" exists in the industry. The definition of effective competition was still being worked on, an aide said. The newspaper industry opposes the Bells' entry into information services. U.S. District Judge Harold Greene in July ruled the Bells, banned from information services following the 1984 breakup of AT&T, should be allowed to enter the business.

Steiger opposes FDA, ad link

WASHINGTON—Federal Trade Commission Chairman Janet Steiger said she opposes legislation that would extend the Food & Drug Administration's regulations over food labeling to food advertising. In a letter to U.S. Sen. Slade Gorton (R., Wash.), Ms. Steiger said regulation of advertising and labeling should be based on different standards because advertising is intended to attract consumer attention while labeling's purpose is to provide information.

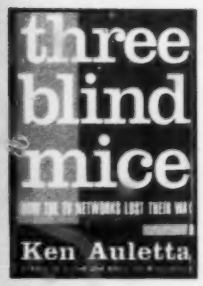
Cat and mouse: High-stakes game to follow the leader—NBC. Or, as NBC's own internal strategy memorandum—which called for a 6% unit price increase—correctly anticipated:

"The competition is facing the same pattern of program cost increases. If they are smart, they will hang back to see what NBC does, let NBC take the heat for price increases, then adopt the same strategy and tuck in behind us. . . . We believe this is a year to go for unit price increases rather than volume, although a minimum upfront sales volume of 50% is essential as a sales 'base.' "



Day after day went by in June 1987, with Keever and members of his sales force relaying rumors, meeting most mornings, passing on information about whether the ad agency or the advertiser insisted on guarantees, whether they would forego them for the right price, whether they wanted to be among the first to take the plunge or wait.

The advertisers' perspective was a little different. Some ad agencies looked at the networks and saw weakness. Irwin Gotlieb, senior VP at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, saw the networks in decline. All of Gotlieb's data—about how much each network sells each quarter and to whom, about how much is sold upfront, the average cost per thousand, the number of 15-, 30- and 60-second spots sold—are computerized by network. From the vast data at his fingertips he concluded that the network upfront was no longer crucial to advertisers.

"My office used to be called 'Network Programming.' It isn't anymore," he said. "It is now called 'National Broadcast.' So in some respects what we do with the networks is tactical, not strategic. . . ."

Despite the erosion of the network advertising dollar and audience share, the Big 3 still retained enormous clout. Pete Tyrrell of Johnson & Johnson, who spent $160 million in network television, making J&J one of the top 10 network advertisers, saw the Big 3 differently than Gotlieb did.

"One thing I know for sure, the networks always have more information than I have," he said on June 16, on the eve of the 1987 upfront. "That's the leverage—intelligence." The network sales team had access to 100 ad agencies. Unlike Irwin Gotlieb, Pete Tyrrell saw only network power. . . .

He was determined to cut the best deal he could, and toward this end he conducted eight strategy meetings with J&J's five ad agencies, including their principal agency for the networks, Young & Rubicam. Over lunch . . . Tyrrell outlined J&J's upfront strategy: "We'll go to NBC first with a big number"—$60 million. "We'll probably go to NBC early. We'll let them think they're getting J&J out of the way early. We're thinking that if we make an early deal we get the best inventory and we do it before they get too cocky." Tyrrell was prepared to throw them a bone. "NBC daytime sucks," he said. "Two years ago we closed them out of daytime. If we give them $10 million in daytime, that's a big favor. In return, they give us some benefits in prime time and in 'Nightly News.' "

Once he had locked up a deal with NBC, Tyrrell said, "we go to the other two networks and offer them all our remaining money, or part of it, and threaten them with a two-network buy." . . . That is precisely what Tyrrell did to No. 1 ABC in 1977—shut it out after ABC demanded prices he found unreasonable. . . .

The upfront market broke for ABC early in the week of July 6, only hours after NBC cut its initial deals. By the time Keever lunched on Tuesday with top executives of J. Walter Thompson, which ranked fourth in broadcast spending among all ad agencies, he was determined to impress on them that ABC had already sold $145 million in ads. . . . The next morning Keever met with the fifth largest ad agency, BBDO, to spread the same message. . . . "The more orders you write," observed Keever, "the more people feel comfortable with the marketplace."

All through that week on Keever's 36th floor, hollow-eyed account executives sat behind closed office doors, huddled with ad agency representatives or bent over phones negotiating deals or whispering of other deals already made, warning that the ABC rate card might rise. Bedlam ruled the corridors as nervous agency honchos waited outside the suite of offices shared by Keever and his deputy, John Tiedemann, and one by one were taken inside, like patients being wheeled into surgery.

It turned out to be a much stronger upfront than anticipated. The three networks wrote over $3 billion for prime-time ads in three to four working days, not the usual two weeks, a record. ABC had planned to sell only $850 million and wound up selling $985 million upfront. In all, ABC sold 90% of its entire year's prime-time inventory in the upfront market. . . .

Prime-time upfront sales at the other two networks were equally robust in 1987. CBS sold about $900 million and NBC $1.2 billion. And each network got price increases—5% per unit in ABC's case, even though ratings for the 1986-87 year had dropped 12% in prime time. By contrast, NBC's ad rate jumped by about 10% and CBS' by less than 5%.

But why should a network sell more ads even when its audience declines, as ABC's did? . . . The demand was greater for network time than the supply. But why would demand be up? One explanation is that advertisers still needed the networks' mass audiences for their new products, even if the audience had eroded. A second explanation is that the ad agencies were even more anxious than the networks about the new [Nielsen] people meters and sought the security of the minimum audience guarantees offered upfront rather than risk higher prices in the scatter market.

A third explanation is that since 1988 would be cluttered with ads for both the Olympic Games and a presidential contest, advertisers chose to beat the clutter by pouring more resources into 1987.

Another explanation is that since all three networks held out for price increases and none folded, advertisers could not play one off against the other, as Pete Tyrrell hoped to do for J&J. Finally, there was panic. As ABC's Ray Warren explained: "It's when Benton & Bowles hears that Y&R is doing business and everybody says, 'What did they think of that we did not think of?' "

Jake Keever chose not to gloat, but Pete Tyrrell was willing to complain. "It happened just as we said it would. . . . They got all the lemmings lined up and convinced them it was a good thing to cross the river. And all of them drowned." □

Dealing with panic

Helping to induce this panic [by advertisers during the upfront buying frenzy] was part of [ABC Sales VP] Ray Warren's job. The bearded Warren had played the game from both sides, having worked at Benton & Bowles. Although he was now the seller, he acted like a buyer. Late that night he telephoned one of his agency customers at home. The customer was willing to spend $12 million upfront, and since the client was a public utility it wanted its spots in a serious setting and chose "20/20." But the price was high.

"The price is $9.68 per thousand," Warren said into the speaker phone. "We did everything we could to get the number down to $9.50, but couldn't . . . Are you happy?"

"I'm getting happy," answered the account executive. "How can we move this a little bit more? The $9.68 is still a tad high."

"We'll split the difference—$9.59."

"How about $9.55?"

"I'm really not going to get below a 13% increase, which is $9.58," said Warren. "Maybe I can shave a nickel off by dropping ads from a better to a weaker show. What if we knock off a few 'Hoopermans' and 'Slap Maxwells' and move them to the Monday movie and 'Ohara'? "

Deal.

After the account executive hung up, Warren said his real bottom line was $9.22 per thousand.

'Beverly Hills' top of class

By Janice Kelly

Cover Story is a monthly ranking of celebrities' popularity as reflected by their appearance on the covers of more than 30 of the nation's leading publications.

MEDIA WORKS

September issues brought TV stars to the fore as the fall season began.

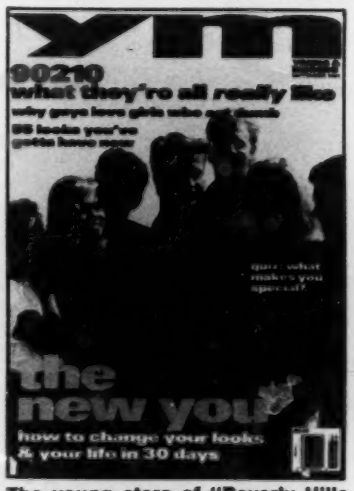
Topping the list was the cast of "Beverly Hills 90210," riding high on publicity from the hit Fox series.

The newest brat-pack—including actors Jason Priestley, Shannen Doherty and Luke Perry—earned 7.5 points from appearances on magazines including Entertainment Weekly, which called the show "TV's hottest number," and US, which touted "TV's hottest high school."

Seventeen said it was readers' favorite; YM profiled the actors to show "what they're all really like."

The show is so popular that Welsh Publishing Group next month plans to launch a quarterly magazine based on the series.

COVER STORY



The young stars of "Beverly Hills 90210" are the hottest ticket in town.

Cover Story assigns point values to cover appearances based on such factors as prominence of the photo and frequency of the publication.

Close behind in a second-place tie at 6 points were actress Demi Moore and Princess Diana. Ms. Moore won attention with the birth of her second child with husband Bruce Willis. Controversy surrounded Ms. Moore's appearance, pregnant and nude, on the August cover of Vanity Fair.

Stories about Princess Diana focused on a friend's death from AIDS.

Fourth place was a six-way tie at 5 points. Bruce Willis appeared on the cover of Spy in a parody of his wife's photo on Vanity Fair; Barbra Streisand and Nick Nolte teamed for the upcoming movie "Prince of Tides"; actress Ann Jillian announced she's pregnant; and talk show hosts Kathie Lee Gifford and Regis Philbin hosted the Miss America competition.

Tenth place went to Loni Anderson and Burt Reynolds, with stories on their marriage and family earning 4.5 points.

Among other celebrities on September's newsstands were Delta Burke, Kirstie Alley, Betty White, La Toya Jackson, Suzanne Somers, Patrick Duffy, James Garner, Redd Foxx, Mark Harmon and Robert Guillaume, each with 4 points. Several star in TV shows premiering this season. □

Nets show lowest clutter

NEW YORK—Network TV clutter is on the rise, but the Big 3 networks are still the least cluttered of all TV outlets, according to a new study by the Network Television Association.

The analysis of all non-programming time—including paid commercials, station and network promotions, billboards, public service announcements and station IDs—found the Big 3 averaged only 12 minutes and 35 seconds of non-programming time per prime-time hour. That compared with 14 minutes, 33 seconds for independent stations.

"In terms of paid commercialization, network programming only had 9 minutes of national and local commercials. All other venues studied were all around 11 minutes or above," said association President Peter Chrisanthopoulos.

The study is based on an analysis of data from Arbitron's Broadcast Advertisers Reports. □

GM divisions stake out territory for truck battle

By Raymond Serafin and John P. Cortez

General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet and GMC Truck divisions are positioning themselves to fight the expected Japanese entries into the full-size pickup truck market.

Both divisions have revamped advertising for their full-size pickup trucks for the 1992 model year, staking out positions for the looming battle. GM officials expect Toyota Motor Sales USA and possibly American Isuzu Motors, Nissan Motor Corp. USA and Mazda Motor of America will join the fray by 1993.

Full-size pickups are a $20 billion-a-year segment, according to Automotive News.

Chevrolet's new campaign uses the Bob Seger song "Like a Rock" and visuals of workers using their trucks to underscore the vehicles' dependability and durability.

GMC is introducing a new theme line, "The strength of experience," using its 89-year-old heritage as a way to similarly emphasize reliability and durability.

Research showed import truck owners list dependability as their No. 1 reason for purchase, said Jeff Hurlbert, Chevrolet general marketing manager.

"If you look at how you blunt a competitive move by the Japanese, you talk about quality—dependable, long-lasting products," he said.

The focus on the coming Japanese competition means a truce in the Chevy/Ford comparative ad wars, Mr. Hurlbert said. In 1990, Ford Motor Co.'s Ford Division led the full-size pickup segment with a 42% share, followed by Chevrolet at 39.2% and GMC at 11.4%.

The Seger music is used in at least nine TV spots for Chevrolet, including a 60-second commercial breaking Oct. 2 on the "Country Music Awards Show" on CBS.

"The lyrics really align themselves with the characteristics of the truck, as well as the people who own and use the trucks," said William Ludwig, exec VP in charge of Chevrolet creative at Lintas:Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich.

The new advertising is "the most researched truck advertising campaign in Chevrolet history," said J.C. "Jim" Perkins, Chevrolet general manager.

The 5-year-old "Heartbeat of America" theme appears only in a visual tag at the end of the spots, though it's retained in Chevrolet car advertising.

Voice-overs emphasize attributes such as the fact that 98% of Chevy trucks sold in the past 10 years are still on the road.

Each spot closes with the voice-over saying, "Chevrolet. The trucks you can depend on. The trucks that last."

Chevy's new spots use Bob Seger's "Like a Rock."

The commercials were directed by Jim Minera of Michael/Daniel Associates, Santa Monica, Calif.

Mr. Hurlbert said trucks and regional ad efforts would get proportionately more of the division's 1992 ad budget. It's estimated 1991 ad spending will be about $380 million, broken down as about $140 million for cars, $100 million for trucks, $75 million for regional efforts controlled by four area marketing managers and $65 million for Geo.

GMC Truck is doubling its 1992 ad spending to an estimated $70 million to support its five launches and the rest of its 1992 models.

Five TV :30s break Oct. 8, via McCann/SAS, Troy, Mich.

The spots reflect traditional American values, said Lewis B. Campbell, VP-general manager of GMC Truck. They show b&w stills of people using old GMC trucks, followed by a collage of shots featuring GMC trucks in dependable roles.

The spots will run on network cable, said Candace Robbins, McCann/SAS general manager.

A heavy print campaign will also tout specific products; about 30% of total spending will go to print.

This is the first major campaign since McCann/-SAS was formed a year ago when McCann-Erickson Worldwide, which handled GMC's image advertising, bought out Competitive Edge's Detroit and Boston offices, which handled GMC's regional and dealer support groups.

"We have our own captive ad agency that we intend to use in a broader sense than the traditional agency," Mr. Campbell said. "Whether it's teaching a salesman how to sell our products or designing show exhibits, there aren't many things that relate to our dealers, products or customers that [McCann/SAS] shouldn't be able to handle for us." □

Taxing ideas: One down and one to go

By Steven W. Colford

WASHINGTON—A congressional task force, after several months of deliberations, has decided not to propose a national tax on advertising as a way to pay for publicly financed elections.

The long odds of winning such a fight, coupled with the economic doldrums already besetting the industry, made it "very unlikely" coming legislation would include an ad tax, said Perry Pockros, the task force staff director.

The seven-member group, formed in February to develop sweeping legislation to change federal election practices, is expected to unveil proposals as early as this week or next.

"The ad tax will not be part of the bill, I can almost definitely say," Mr. Pockros said. "There is only an outside chance that it will get back in.

"There was general concern that an ad tax would not be the way to go on this, that it was too far afield to go and that it would involve too much criticism."

U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson (D., Conn.), the task force's chairman, in June told a congressional committee that a 0.25% tax on media advertising, to be collected by broadcasters and publishers, was under consideration.

There were a "handful" of meetings between Rep. Gejdenson and industry lobbyists, Mr. Pockros said.

"In general, we agreed that in a recessionary framework that this kind of a burden would be harmful for the economy, especially for a mechanism that is a spur to product development," he said.

Mr. Pockros said task force members are still interested in the concept of an ad tax. "Rep. Gejdenson was in favor of it," he said.

The ad industry also appears to have escaped a second tax threat, though that could change this week.

The House Ways & Means Committee slated an Oct. 2 hearing on legislation to require amortization of the value of intangible assets and good will purchased by businesses over 14 years.

Industry observers had feared the legislation would include advertising. But fortunately for the industry, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D., Ill.), the committee's chairman and the bill's sponsor, isn't in favor of changing advertising's current status as a fully deductible business expense.

However, it's expected there might be an attempt to include advertising.

"I think someone is bound to raise the issue of created intangibles, such as advertising," said Jim Davidson, a lobbyist for the advertising and media industries. "We know the chairman and staff are committed to not including it. . . . Our exposure will be if someone wants to change the bill."

That someone might be Rep. Richard Schulze (R., Pa.), a committee member and longtime advocate of changing advertising's fully deductible status.

A spokesman for Rep. Schulze said he's "sure" advertising's exclusion from the bill would be raised during the hearing.

"There is a natural link between an examination of intangibles and the writing off of them and the deductibility of advertising," the spokesman said.

Further pressure could come from the General Accounting Office, which recently issued a report on tax policy recommending intangibles such as advertising be amortized, Mr. Davidson said. □

Cars

GM's Chevrolet division.

Through September 1991, Detroit auto marketers had 70.2% of the combined car and light-truck market, down 1.6 points from the same period last year. On the other hand, Japanese brands increased their share by 2.1 points to 25.9%, according to Automotive News. Each automotive market share point represents about $2 billion in annual sales.

U.S. auto marketers, especially GM and Chrysler, reined in their ad spending during the first half of recession-plagued 1991, opening the door for their Japanese rivals to steal market share.

Toyota and Honda led the aggressive marketing push that capitalized on the opportunity.

Of all the auto companies, the only ones to boost TV ad spending in the first half of 1991 were Toyota, Honda and Isuzu, said Jim Joyella, president of the Television Bureau of Advertising, which just released its report on network and spot TV ad spending.

Although reports from other media aren't available yet, TV spending typically accounts for about half of a major auto marketer's total ad spending.

The correlation between ad spending and market share highlights an important difference in competitive approaches between U.S. and Japanese companies.

Domestic marketers, responding to pressures for quarterly earnings, have historically tended to trim spending in marketing and even product development in an effort to stay in the black. Japanese companies have traditionally taken a longer view of the competitive battle.

"We look further out," said Ren Rooney, Toyota's corporate marketing manager. "We had a strategy that we set out early, and we like to keep a course when we decide on it."

The Japanese-based auto marketers "see their share in a growing position; they have a lot of new products and they have the means to support it from a marketing standpoint," said Philip Guarascio, GM's executive-in-charge, corporate marketing and advertising. "They believe in advertising, and they certainly have a willingness to invest and spend against their products."

Industrywide TV ad spending fell 9% to $1.375 billion in the first half of 1991, TvB said. First-half TV spending numbers, compared with the same period a year ago, for U.S. and Japanese companies: GM, $407 million, down 6%; Ford, flat at $198 million; Toyota Motor Sales USA, up 11% to $180 million; Chrysler, down 16% to $158 million; Nissan Motor Corp. USA, off 15% to $107 million; and American Honda Motor Co., $100 million, up 8%.

The Japanese-based auto marketers "see their share in a growing position, they have a lot of new products and they have the means to support it from a marketing standpoint."

Also, Mazda Motor of America, down 12% to $61 million; Mitsubishi Motor Sales of America, down 18% to $34 million; American Isuzu Motors, up 3% to $25 million; and Subaru of America, off 38% to $20 million.

Mazda and Subaru each were holding back substantial funds for major second-half product launches.

Market shares for the first half were GM, 35.5%, down 0.4 points; Ford, 22.9%, down 1.1; Chrysler, flat at 12.4%; Toyota, 7.7%, up 0.6; Honda, 6.5%, up 0.5; Nissan, 4.4%, up 0.1; Mazda, 2.9%, up 0.4; Mitsubishi, flat at 1.6%; Subaru, 0.9%, up 0.2; and Isuzu, 0.9%, up 0.1.

Chrysler President Robert Lutz, interviewed last month, acknowledged Japanese marketers were "buying share."

"The incentive levels, dealer cash levels and per-unit advertising, I think, are all at record highs for Japanese brands," Mr. Lutz said.

But he said it's possible to win back share, pointing out that Ford dropped to 16% of the market during the recession of the early '80s but rebounded to more than 20%.

"In a downturn, you cannot permit all your share to erode, because you'll start losing dealers and you'll never get it back. On the other hand, you can't buy share at all costs," Mr. Lutz said. "You've got to find the right balance."

Plans to boost 1992 model-year spending as much as 20% from an estimated $50 million in 1991 at Nissan's Infiniti division illustrate how Japanese auto marketers map out their plans with long-term goals in mind.

"Our marketing spending is not tied into the economic recovery," said William Bruce, VP-general manager at Infiniti. "It's tied into our plan on volume and number of dealers and the number of markets we're going to be in."

Mr. Bruce said Infiniti's 1992 model-year ad spending will increase an undisclosed amount based on plans to add 20 to 25 new dealers to its roster of 106; launch a new model next spring; and boost sales some 21% to about 45,000 cars. □

A Few Words About This Special Issue

It is altogether fitting for Advertising Age to mark the 250th anniversary of magazine publishing with this special issue.

When you read through our pages, however, you will see that this is not a fuzzy-warm exercise in nostalgia. Anyone associated with publishing is far more interested in the next 250 years than in the last 250 years.

Joe Cappo

Our aim, therefore, was to concentrate on the present and the future, with a few selected stops recalling the glorious past of the industry.

These are crucial days for magazine publishing, as well as the whole media marketplace. And I'm not talking about the recession here. The business slowdown is only a minor irritant. If our government plays its cards right, it will be over in a year or so.

Something more profound is taking place, though. Over the past decade, media consumption patterns of Americans have shifted dramatically. This has occurred because Americans have changed dramatically. And it should not be startling news to publishers.

It certainly isn't to advertisers. These longtime supporters of publishing have tracked the changes in American consumers and have tried to respond by altering their own media-buying patterns. In this process, many magazines have been wounded, some mortally. But virtually all of them have gotten a little more sober about this business of publishing.

This is one of the benefits to come out of the restructuring of reader and advertiser habits. Publishers have been forced to pay closer attention to what they are doing. And they are rediscovering the necessity for marketing.

I don't mean marketing in the narrow sense of advertising and selling their products, but in the much broader sense of determining what the market wants, developing the appropriate product and finding the most effective way of delivering that product.

Yes, it's Marketing 101. But those who flunk the course can't expect to succeed in publishing, or any other business. And so, it is in that environment that we begin the next 250 years of magazine publishing.

It is important to note publishing faces old challenges as well as new. One of them is the nagging functional illiteracy of so many Americans, adults and children. As a result, Advertising Age has pledged to donate a percentage of the revenues of this issue to Project Literacy U.S. A check for $15,000 will be presented to the organization at the American Magazine Conference being held this week in Naples, Fla.

And if there is any lingering question as to why we have decided to concentrate on the future rather than the past, remember this: We can change the future.

STRONG ROOTS FOR CROSS-MEDIA

In an area that may grow from 5% to 20%, magazines often form the firm bond for ad-package buys that cross media lines

By Joe Mandese

Advertising agencies like to think they're always a step ahead of the client and 100 yards in front of the media. When it comes to cross-media deals, however, the media seem to be setting the pace.

With media companies—primarily print media operations—leading the way into multimagazine and cross-media strategies, agencies are starting to restructure media buying operations to accommodate the deals.

Cross-media packages, involving several different media opportunities from a single company or a partnership of various media providers, currently account for no more than 5% of all media buys. But that could rise to as much as 20% in the next few years, estimates Arnie Semsky, exec VP-worldwide media director at BBDO Worldwide, New York.

So far, the magazine industry is leading the way with opportunities. For all the talk of multiple mediums, agency executives say most cross-media deals done to date really evolve around a primary medium: print.

"A lot of these deals really aren't cross-media at all. They're concentrated in a single area, which is magazines," says Larry Cole, exec VP-media director of Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

Magazine publishers probably embraced the concept earlier than most media out of necessity, says Jack Irving, exec VP-director of media operations, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York.

"The magazine business over the past two years has been extremely soft, and a lot of publishers saw this as a new revenue opportunity. But up until this last upfront buying season, the network TV business had been relatively strong, and maybe they works into the binding process. A pharmaceutical client plans to use the process in a direct-mail effort this month.

CRACKING BARRIER

The motion notion

Mr. Rapp predicts an increased use of lenticular images, or color images printed on finely corrugated plastic that seem to move when tilted. Mr. Rapp says he's heard reports of new technology that has cut the cost of creating these images by 90%.

Taking a big byte

Creatives recognize the omnipresence of the computer in making print ads. But some say thanks to high-end art software, the computer will be used more frequently to compose illusionary images.

"More people are using computers to create the impossible looks or environments that are eye-catching," says Andy Montag, graphics director at Bazooka Graphics.

Show and smell

The advent of newer technologies hasn't changed opinions on two more common processes: holographic and scented ads.

Holographic ads call attention to themselves, says John Gruen, senior VP-creative director, Ogilvy & Mather, New York. "The reader's being asked to do something to the ad: turn it upside down or side to side," he says.

Holographic ads can work if they demonstrate some aspect of the product, says Steve Hayden, executive creative director at BBDO Worldwide, Los Angeles.

His most notable experience with the process was for an L.A. Gear ad showing a shoe's structure. "It did a great job of demonstrating the technology" in the shoe, he says.

The problem with scented ads is their intrusiveness, Mr. Hayden says. "Now magazines smell of 100 different things," he complains.

But others say the method is a perfect sampling tool.

"It's been a slam dunk for perfumes," Mr. Gruen says. "If the device calls attention to the product, then it's worth it. But if it's like whipping up a skirt just to get attention, it's not as effective."

Costs create concerns

The use of these techologies is still relatively scarce, especially considering production costs. Still, creatives are split over whether new technologies have lasting impact on consumers and, more important, their purchase habits.

"These technologies break through the clutter. When they're used in advertisements, they turn what was an ordinary ad into something that's spectacular and grabs consumers' attention," says Ernie Capria, VP-marketing services at Carillon Importers.

"Every time you hold that person another second or two or three, the impression that's being given—the Absolut name—is being driven into the person's memory bank and the recognition becomes stronger," Mr. Terriss says.

But other creatives disagree.

"The whole idea of an ad is not just to do a clever ad, but to remember who it was and didn't see as much of a need."

As a result, companies with strong publishing roots, such as Time Warner, Meredith Corp. and Hearst Corp., have led the charge into cross-media efforts, he says.

For the concept to grow, agencies have to shift resources in their media departments so traditional planning groups are better prepared to deal with the components of cross-media deals, says Mr. Semsky.

Because many cross-media buys are print-related, print buyers may act as the catalyst. But they are not necessarily the wisest choice to guide the deal.

Planners must be equipped to deal with non-traditional media, such as in-store, and other marketing communications not normally planned in agency media groups, including direct marketing, promotion and PR, says Mr. Semsky.

"We're talking about something that is not just a media concept. These are really marketing concepts," says Mike Drexler, exec VP-worldwide media director of Bozell, New York.

"We're really talking about the need for renaissance media planners," says David Verklin, senior VP-corporate media director of Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "You need a planner who can do everything from matchbook covers to direct mail to newspaper, TV and outdoor."

Nancy Smith, exec VP-director of print media relations of Young & Rubicam, New York, says most of Y&R's cross-media discussions take place with the agency's Print Services Group, because most of the cross-media deals being pitched by the media emanate from the publishing side.

"But it could come from any group," she adds. "It goes through Print Services Group if it is print-based. If it is something that comes from a network, it would go through our network group."

One reason for the magazine industry's early inroads in cross-media is magazine reps traditionally have courted agency planning groups, Mr. Irving says. At the same time, TV sales executives have emphasized contact with special buying groups at agencies.

"By the nature of their business, magazine people have always been much more accessible to agency planning groups," explains Mr. Irving.

Y&R's media executives believe the agency's planning groups are the best place to evaluate cross-media buys for clients.

"You've got to start out with your business. What is it your clients need and who can best supply you with it," explains Beth Rockwood, exec VP-director of communications planning.

To date, Y&R executives have yet to hit on the right mix. The agency has yet to do a major cross-media deal.

The thing holding back cross-media packaging growth is that it tends to originate from the seller, says Mr. Irving. He and other agency media executives would like to see media reps begin responding to specific client and agency needs.

Toward that end, Saatchi created a cross-media task force a little more than a year ago to acquaint senior media executives with opportunities offered by cross-media vendors and identify strategic client needs they could fulfill.

"We're talking about something that is not just a media concept. These are really marketing concepts."

Fifteen senior Saatchi media executives, from the associate media director level up to the media director, were each designated one multimedia company to become intimate with. The companies range from Time Warner to Capital Cities/-ABC.

"The first task was fact-finding; learning what these companies had to offer," says Mr. Irving. "The second task was identifying areas [where] our clients could benefit from them."

Other agencies are developing similar committees to evaluate and recommend cross-media.

George Hayes, senior VP-director of Comcord Group and McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, says the agency has twice-monthly meetings in which they discuss such deals.

"It's the No. 1 topic," he says, adding that the trend among clients, including Nestle, to consolidate media buying with one agency is accelerating cross-media talks.

"These consolidations are not just to leverage budgets, but [they are] an opportunity to have one resource looking at things like cross-media. It's a total picture," he says.

Regardless of the structure agencies use to evaluate cross-media packages, Mr. Drexler says the key to making them successful is making sure someone has authority to expedite the deals.

"Everyone is trying to find a formula that works for them and that has to be consistent with the culture of their agency, but the key is somebody has to be there to drive it and make sure it happens," he says.

"Someone has to break down the turf barriers so the deal doesn't get bogged down with conventional wisdom. That's the key to making it happen." □ that you want that product," says Dave Lubars, exec VP-creative director, Leonard Monahan Lubars & Kelly, Providence, R.I. "I would only use technology if it was part of the [creative] idea and not the whole schtick."

Mr. Hayden agrees: "Technologies are the first refuge for people who have forgotten how to stop readers with headlines and graphics."

One problem with technologies is once they're used, they lose their novelty, some creatives say.

"Now that a musical ad's been done, who wants to do it again?" asks Roy Grace, chairman and creative director of Grace & Rothschild. The shop creates eclectic print ads for Paddington Corp.'s J&B scotch.

But Mr. Terriss disagrees on this point.

"Some technologies are one, two or three-shot uses, but others like 'magic window' [the technique used in the Grand Marnier ad] will be used over and over again," he says.

Yet, even Mr. Terriss admits to technology's limitations. "Technology can't do it all alone. You need a good creative mind to make it work." □

MARKETING SUCCESS STORIES

We had to reach thinkers. Our first thought: The New Republic.

The Association of American Railroads needed opinion leaders on their side in the fight against allowing double and triple trailer trucks on the nation's highways.

The fight had to go from the opinion leaders through grassroots America all the way to Congress to get legislation enacted to freeze the big rigs at their present sizes.

"We needed to expose the big truck issue. We needed to get America into action," according to Ella Russell, advertising manager of the AAR. "We needed to get them writing and calling their Congressmen and Senators, telling them 'keep those big trucks off my roads.'

"Of course, when you do issue advertising, you address it first to thought leaders," added Ms. Russell. "So, of course, our agency recommended The New Republic, this year's national magazine award recipient for general excellence. 44% of their readers volunteer, 40% of them write to public officials, 27% of them work for politicians they admire, on and on. Why, 18% of them even lobby public officials. They're definitely our kind of audience."

AAR's advertising agency, Bergelt Litchfield, Inc., New York, hit the nerve that was needed with their emotionally charged advertising campaign. More than 100,000 phone calls, coupons and letters were recorded. As a result, the Lautenberg-Chafee Big Truck Freeze Amendment passed with the Senate Highway bill and a similar Big Truck Freeze provision is pending in the House as of this printing.

Thought leader publications like The New Republic got the grass growing in this grassroots effort.

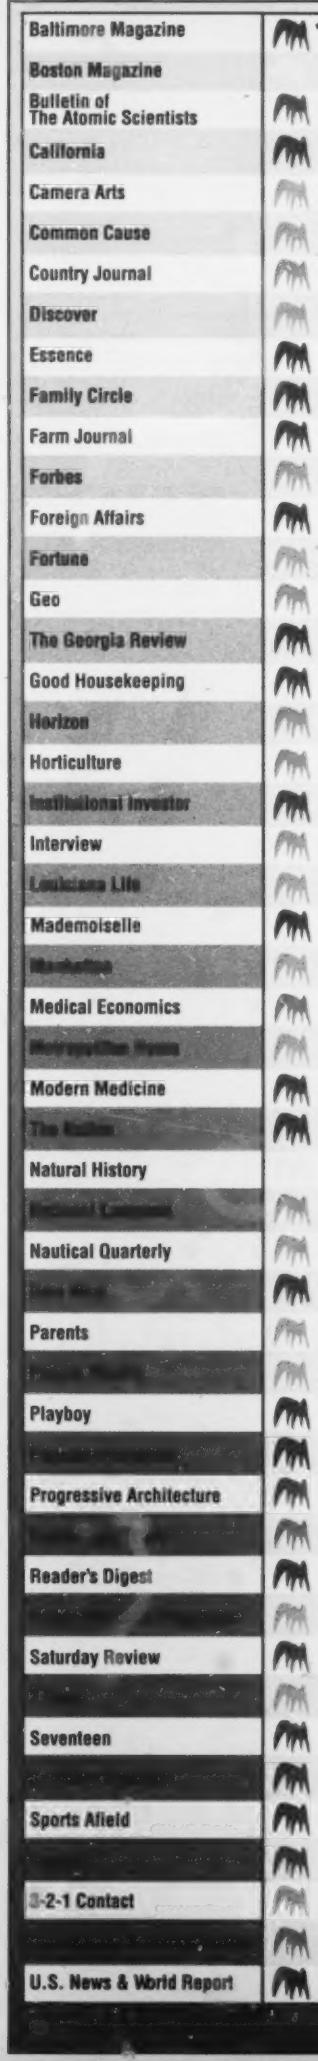
ASME Spells Automatic Recognition



Few things spawn magazine self-promotion like the Calder awards, the industry equivalent of the Oscars, Gold Lion and Emmy awards.

Editors and publishers anxiously await the list of American Society of Magazine Editors' National Magazine Awards so they can take their bows, do a little breast beating and rub their competitors' noses in it.

But the awards accomplish more than stroking egos.

Advertisers say magazines are perhaps the most qualitative media buy, rising above strict number crunching and cost-per-thousand analysis. As such, the ASME awards bestow a seal of approval on publications and can help attract advertisers who are shopping for a quality editorial environment.

Reflecting how a good idea well executed isn't always a guarantee of long-lasting success, a number of award-winners are no longer with us.

However, some venerable titles do emerge consistently victorious. The New Yorker has taken home a closetful of the Alexander Calder-designed awards: seven for reporting, five for fiction and one for public interest. Esquire also has a crowded trophy case, winning five for fiction, two for design or visual excellence and one each for essays and criticism, a single-topic issue, feature writing and service to the individual.

Here, Advertising Age ranks the ASME award-winning publications based on how many plaudits have been bestowed on them since the competition began in 1966.

SIBLING RIVALRY

Seven Sisters scratch for share of changing market, and in the process make New York tabloid war look 'like kindergarten'

By Adrienne Ward

Not so long ago, the Seven Sisters had all the makings of a real family. They looked a lot alike, shared the same friends and hung out with the same crowd of advertisers.

They still do all that, but as the economy weakens, the target market ages and competition with other media increases, sibling rivalry among the sisters is reaching new heights.

This fall, the family feud is getting more ferocious. All seven women's service books are coming out with new or expanded ad campaigns emphasizing their individuality.

"Of all the fields of magazines, women's service is the most ferociously competitive," says Valerie Salembier, the former New York Post president who's now publisher of Family Circle.

"I'm new to the field and am absolutely horrified at the competitiveness. I thought there was nothing more competitive than the New York tabloid war, but that is like kindergarten compared to this," she says.

The Seven Sisters tag is enough to send some publishers and ad directors directly into battle.

"The publishers want nothing to do with the [Seven Sisters] label right now because it doesn't serve them anymore," says Valerie Muller, VP-media director at Pedone & Partners, New York. "They are general service, and that's really not a bad word. But in an era of specialization, general is considered negative. . . . That's why they are identifying for themselves a niche within the mass."

"Being one of the Seven Sisters was an honor a long time ago," says Ellen Levine, editor in chief of Redbook. "But times have changed. A lot of the Seven Sisters schools are co-ed now."

Most media buyers and planners say they shun labels whenever possible, but the volume of material they are required to keep up with each month can be staggering. The tag helps simplify their task.

Besides, says John Gray, senior VP-media director at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, the women's service books look remarkably similar, no matter how you slice it.

"There are some subtle differences but they all tend to reach a similar audience," he says.

The magazines are homing in on those differences, however subtle.

"We have forced publishers to redefine the category," Ms. Muller says. "My side of the desk has said, 'OK, we won't use your old label. Then give us a new one. Give us a drawer to put you in. If you're not [a Seven Sister], then what are you?' "

At Hearst Corp.'s Redbook, the answer would be "juicy."

Redbook redesigned with the October issue and has launched a new ad campaign that expands its 7-year-old "juggler" theme. The $2 million ad blitz, via Rosenfeld, Sirowitz, Humphrey & Strauss, New York, uses the tagline "The Juicy Red Book," and includes trade print ads, outdoor boards and TV spots. The ads tout Redbook's new design and editorial emphasis on women as individuals. Ms. Levine says the magazine is more like an older sister to Cosmopolitan and Glamour than the Seven Sisters books.

The October Redbook, for example, carries a piece entitled "Why I Date Your Husband."

"If that cover line was in Cosmo," says Ms. Levine, "the title would be 'How To Date Someone Else's Husband.' "

The same issue has a story on obsessive mother love, using the cheerleader murder-for-hire trial as the news peg, as well as a piece by New York Times columnist Anna Quindlen on gray hair and the aging process.

The editorial focus is more personal, and stories are more journalistic, Ms. Levine says. "We want them to read our magazine and talk about it the next day," she says.

McCall's has left media buyers with the impression its focus is fashion and celebrities. "McCall's has taken fashion as their one-sentence definition. It is very celebrity, which is a fashion orientation," Ms. Muller says.

But the New York Times Magazine Group book, under Editor in Chief Kate White, is slowly trying to tone down the celebrity emphasis.

"I'd like to feel a good chunk of the magazine revolves around helping women pamper and nurture themselves," says Ms. White, who arrived in March from Working Woman. "So much of the past has helped women nurture others—work, husband, kids. . . . We want to encourage women to indulge themselves without feeling they have to apologize for it.

"It's hard for people in the industry to pick up on [the differences in women's service books] when they only skim through them . . . but readers pick up on it much better. A lot of it is just tone of voice and pace," she says.

"I'd like to feel a good chunk of 'McCall's' revolves around helping women pamper and nurture themselves."

McCall's launched a new ad campaign via Holland Advertising, New York, in September with the tagline "Straight to the heart." It represents the most substantial advertising done by the magazine in several years. Ads appear in the trade press and on telephone kiosks, and the budget is estimated at $1.5 million.

The Seven Sisters label doesn't bother McCall's Publisher Michael Golden, who says, "In the women's service field, [the phrase] Seven Sisters is a convenient name to give them; it makes it easy. But it doesn't mean they are interchangeable."

But Ladies' Home Journal Publisher Donna Galotti quivers at the moniker. "Ladies' Home Journal is really a step-sister," she says.

Ms. Muller says the Meredith Corp. magazine aims for a more sophisticated baby boomer than do the other Sisters.

"Ladies' Home Journal is addressing psychographics rather than the demographics of the '90s," she says. "Its approach is very service oriented, but it is addressing the intellectual, cultural side of women rather than the frivolous. Ladies' Home Journal probably has done the best job in being consistent in developing an [identity]."

The magazine has been running a trade campaign for several years that sets itself apart from others in the field by picking on their weaknesses; it does not, however, pick on its Meredith sister, Better Homes & Gardens.

More than any other book, BH&G is adamant about not being associated with the Seven Sisters.

"We're a family service, not a women's service magazine," says Marketing Director John Brown. "We are lumped with shelter books almost as often as we are lumped with the Six Sisters. We still have circulation hovering around 8 million, but the Six Sisters are down at 5 million or less. The reason is, we're not a women's service book."

BH&G also is getting back into advertising to the trade with a campaign from Ted Chin & Co., New York, expected to break later this year.

"We've been out of [trade advertising] for at least half a dozen years now, which is one of Better Homes & Gardens' problems," says Mr. Brown.

"I don't think there's anything at all wrong with being called one of the Seven Sisters," says Good Housekeeping Publisher Alan Waxenberg.

"There are good years and bad years. A few years ago, everyone said there was no way we were going to survive, but that hasn't happened at all" he says. "Each magazine has a platform that is different from that of the others."

Good Housekeeping has carved out one of the group's most definitive identities with its "New Traditionalist" campaign, which started in 1988 via Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, New York.

Hachette Magazines' Woman's Day also is coming out with an ad effort this fall that attempts to clear up misperceptions of the magazine's reader. "In the eyes of the buyer, to some extent, there's a perception/reality of who the buyer thinks the reader is," says Robert Mate, VP-publisher. "We are trying to introduce a campaign that we hope better identifies who that real reader is."

The $1.5 million campaign is handled by Three Partners in New York.

Family Circle, published by New York Times Magazine Group, has a new ad effort up its sleeve, too. "We've been underpromoted in the last few years," Ms. Salembier says.

Lately, it has been concentrating on developing subscriptions over single-copy sales. Ms. Salembier says the magazine moved from 95% single-copy sales to a "fairly even split: 50% subscribers, 50% single copy today."

Mr. Mate says this fall's trade advertising war will help the Seven Sisters move away from the category label.

"I think they have all individually done a good job," he says. "But nothing happens overnight. You don't run an ad on Monday and then change the world." □

'Biz Week' cuts rates

NEW YORK—Business Week will reduce ad rates about 1% next year to spur ad spending and ease growing pressure to negotiate rates, said Karl Spangenberg, senior VP-ad sales. The rates will be lowered to $39,500 for a b&w page and $59,800 for a color page. Rate base remains at 870,000. Business Week has felt the effects of the industrywide slump. Ad pages through August totaled 1,903.6, down 22.7%.

AmEx's Ryder speaks out

NEW YORK—American Express Publishing President Thomas O. Ryder issued a staff memo last week addressing for the first time rumors the company is talking to others about selling a substantial stake in its magazine group (AA, July 15, et seq.). The memo didn't address specifics, such as rumors that K-III is one of the parties. Mr. Ryder said in the memo that though there was "no news" yet, the company is "exploring many opportunities" that would make the publishing group "bigger and better."

Euro RSCG faces conflicts

By Bruce Crumley and Laurel Wentz

The fate of $100 million in Procter & Gamble Co. business and more than $50 million in Henkel accounts is in question following the merger of two of France's largest agency groups.

Last week, archrivals Eurocom and Roux Seguela Cayzac & Goudard agreed to join forces, forming Euro RSCG, the world's No. 6 advertising group. Shareholders have until yearend to approve the plan.

The deal doesn't appear to be a clean one; it poses significant client conflict problems.

The most serious conflict could involve Tatnam/RSCG's estimated $100 million in U.S. P&G business and Henkel's $50 million-plus in European business at Eurocom.

P&G allows its agencies to work for competitors as long as the agencies handle categories different from their P&G business. But Unilever and Henkel are believed to be exceptions to the rule.

"It is an old P&G rule that no agency network is ever allowed to handle Procter business on one side and Henkel or Unilever on the other," said one source familiar with P&G. "The question now arises whether Eurocom fires Henkel or whether RSCG must give up the Procter account in the U.S. and Europe."

Another source familiar with P&G predicted the company is likely to insist that Euro RSCG resign its Henkel business and a small U.K. Unilever account.

P&G doesn't comment on agency relationships.

P&G is "going to take a close look at it,

Conde Nast sticks to rates; Leser sees better times

ONE ON ONE

Conde Nast Publications recently initiated its second management shakeup in less than a year, naming new publishers at Mademoiselle and Self, and won a public tug of war with Hearst Corp. over Glamour Publisher Jack Kliger.

The unit of Advance Publications is trying to increase the flexibility and creativity of corporate ad sales efforts in response to criticism from advertisers. Its well-known policy against rate negotiation has gained even more attention during a prolonged ad slump.

With the American Magazine Conference taking place in Naples, Fla., this week, Bernard H. Leser, the 66-year-old president of Conde Nast, talked to Advertising Age Reporter Scott Donaton about the changes at the company and his outlook for the magazine industry.

Advertising Age: Do you see signs yet of a turnaround in advertising industrywide?

Mr. Leser: Our feeling—and it's only a feeling that I can't substantiate—is that the economy has reached bottom and that we will now begin to see a modest recovery.

We really will not see, however, a significant recovery as an industry until the second quarter of next year. So much depends upon consumers' confidence.

AA: The magazine industry has undergone fundamental change during the past two years. Has it been for better or worse?

Mr. Leser: There have been too many magazines. There's been a proliferation, and I think we're now in the middle of a pruning,

Theaters flock to call-in tix

By Marcy Magiera

Theater chains are testing a new way to bring people back to the movies: Let them avoid long ticket lines by buying tickets ahead of time with a credit card.

Such leading theater operators as United Artists, AMC, General Cinema and Loews Theatres Management Corp., and some smaller exhibitors, are aggressively experimenting with advance ticket sales by phone as a way to boost flat movie attendance and increase their individual market shares.

MOVIE MARKETING

Cineplex Odeon Corp., the first chain to accept credit cards at its box offices chainwide, is also "examining" the idea of advance telephone ticketing, said Howard Lichtman, exec VP-marketing and communications.

The ability to buy tickets to first-run shows days in advance may revolutionize both movie theater operations and the Hollywood studios' marketing practices.

"People who are attracted to this are people who put a premium on their leisure time and don't mind paying extra" to avoid waiting in lines, said Frank Stryjewski, VP-operations resources for AMC Entertainment.

AMC, which allows advance credit purchases at about 50 of its 250 theaters, is testing a marketwide "teleticket" advance purchase program in the Los Angeles area and Washington, D.C.

With "teleticket," moviegoers call one number to buy tickets to any AMC theater in the area rather than calling individual theaters.

At a recent Saturday night showing of Tri-Star Pictures' "The Fisher King" in Los Angeles, "I'll guarantee you the majority of tickets were sold in advance, over the phone," Mr. Stryjewski said.

Reserved seating is another idea being studied. Mr. Stryjewski said he believes that if moviegoers will pay $1 extra to avoid waiting in a ticket line, they will pay another $1 for a specific seat.

"I think it would be a tremendous mar-

IBM/Apple offsprings

New companies are free to select own shops

By Alan Radding and Bradley Johnson

IBM Corp.'s new alliance to develop products and share technology with Apple Computer presents potential opportunities for advertising and marketing agencies. But all that's probably several years away.

Current IBM shops, Lintas:New York and Wells Rich Greene BDDP, won't enjoy any preference when the joint venture selects ad agencies, said James Reilly, general manager, marketing plans and communications, IBM U.S.

But they won't be prevented from going after the business either.

"The alliances will be responsible for their own communications and are free to hire any agency," Mr. Reilly said. "Joint ventures are separate entities and, as such, run their own marketing communications."

Such was the case with Prodigy Services Co., the online information service that's a joint venture with Sears, Roebuck & Co., he said. J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, handles Prodigy.

Apple's agency, BBDO Worldwide, Los Angeles, could also make a play for joint venture advertising. Apple also lets affiliates call their own shots. Its Claris Corp. software subsidiary, for example, has used Anderson & Lembke, San Francisco, though that account is now in review.

In the IBM/Apple venture, both major products and advertising are several years off.

IBM and Apple, and Motorola—which makes microprocessors that are the brains of a computer—will collaborate on new computer chips to be available in two to three years. The chips will be used in future Apple Macintosh and IBM computers, which the companies say will be compatible with current computers.

KALEIDA™

Taligent.

Brand-new logos for brand-new companies formed by IBM and Apple.

The new operating system, to be developed by an IBM/Apple joint venture company dubbed Taligent, and new multimedia technologies from another IBM/Apple venture company, Kaleida, aren't expected until the mid-1990s.

Both joint venture companies will be based in or around Silicon Valley, close to Apple's Cupertino, Calif., headquarters. But Apple and IBM haven't yet picked management or directors to run the companies, meaning there's little indication yet who will make decisions on advertising—or, for that matter, just how much advertising there will be.

The joint venture companies will license their creations to Apple, IBM and other takers, a gambit to become the industry standard.

The alliance's first offspring, appearing as soon as December, will be networking products, marketed separately by Apple and IBM, that make it easier to hook together Apple Macintoshes and IBM computers. Little or no advertising is expected. But the move should make it easier for Apple to sell Macintoshes to large corporations.

Eventually, the joint venture may generate ad agency assignments and sizable billings. New operating systems typically are accompanied by multimillion-dollar ad campaigns in computer and business publications.

"Except for the networking side, the rest of the [products] really are too far off to start seeing any tangible marketing programs," said John Cook, Apple's hardware product publicity manager. □

Ally taps vet MacDougall

NEW YORK—Ally & Gargano has turned to an old pro for creative leadership.

After a long search, Ally last week named Mal MacDougall as vice chairman and chief creative officer.

Mr. MacDougall, 61, will be closing his agency, the MacDougall Co., a small offshoot from Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, where he was once vice chairman. He earlier served as creative director at what was SSC&B:Lintas, where he helped launch Diet Coke, and was a founder of Humphrey Browning MacDougall, Boston, since merged with Della Femina, McNamee.

Mr. MacDougall succeeds Ally co-founder Amil Gargano, who with several other Ally executives in April formed Amil Gargano & Partners, a new agency in which Ally holds an interest.

Ally's creative reputation has tarnished since the agency lost such signature accounts as MCI Communications Corp. and Federal Express Corp. in the late 1980s.

M. MacDougall

In August, Ally lost the Tambrands account.

Bill Luceno, ceo of the $300 million agency, said he was opposed to hiring a young hotshot from a hot creative shop to recharge the agency.

"I think that the business problems that clients have today are so serious that this is no time to be test-marketing anybody," he said. "We wanted a proven commodity, and that has been the case from the beginning. It's no time for rookies."

He added Mr. MacDougall "hasn't lost his fastball," and his recent work is among the best he's ever done.

Mr. MacDougall said taking the helm at Ally was an honor and that he saw "no reason why Ally can't be one of the hottest agencies of the '90s." He said he believes clients will be interested in a midsize agency where the creative product is results-driven.

"He's something of a new-business magnet," said one former colleague.

At his own company, Mr. MacDougall worked on projects with the World Gold Council and Hearst Corp., as well as handling several Hearst magazines. All the Hearst business will be moving with him.

Mr. MacDougall recently completed a project relaunching Coca-Cola Co.'s Tab diet soft drink. □

Erhardt named Ad Age publisher

NEW YORK—Ed Erhardt has been named publisher of Advertising Age, effective Nov. 1.

Mr. Erhardt, associate publisher for the past two years, replaces Joe Cappo, who becomes publishing director, a post being relinquished by Rance Crain, editor in chief. Mr. Cappo also will remain senior VP-group publisher at Ad Age parent Crain Communications Inc.

Mr. Erhardt, 34, has had management responsibilities for advertising and marketing. Under his direction, Ad Age has increased its market share; launched a "green marketing" seminar series and the first-ever interactive electronic media kit; and is about to launch an international edition of the publication.

E. Erhardt

Mr. Cappo, 55, said he "hired Ed to eventually become publisher of Advertising Age, and Ed has certainly earned the position with innovative and aggressive management over the past two years."

Previously, Mr. Erhardt was VP-sales at the National Journal, and was an advertising sales manager for a group of international publications at Harcourt Brace Jovanovich.

Also at Ad Age, John Brice, 35, was promoted to the new post of national sales manager from eastern sales manager. Randel McDowell, 38, was named to the new post of western sales director, with responsibilities for AA and sister publication Business Marketing, Los Angeles, from western sales manager.

Gregory Bauer, 32, Midwest sales manager, will now take on the added responsibilities of supervising Ad Age's telemarketing and classified operations. □

Saatchi bankers halt AC&R buyout

By Jon Lafayette

NEW YORK—Buyout talks between AC&R and parent Saatchi & Saatchi Co. broke down last week after Saatchi bankers scotched the deal.

Instead, the $300 million agency will now report to Saatchi's Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, which already handles AC&R's largest account, Estee Lauder Inc., in international markets.

AC&R had reported to Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings (USA).

Backer Chairman Carl Spielvogel said there have been no discussions about folding AC&R into Backer's New York office. AC&R will continue to occupy its current quarters rather than sharing Backer's space in the Chrysler Building, he said.

Despite Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings' loss of responsibility for AC&R and the termination of Saatchi's central health insurance plan, there are no plans to reduce that unit's 32-person staff, said Martin Tucker, ceo of the holding company.

Saatchi's Minneapolis-based Campbell-Mithun-Esty agency continues to report to Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings.

The price AC&R offered for the buyback wasn't disclosed. But sources familiar with the negotiations say the proposal would have given Saatchi less than $5 million in cash upfront plus future payments.

Saatchi's bankers were also unwilling to have the company assume some of AC&R's liabilities, including an age discrimination suit brought by four former executives.

AC&R Chairman Alvin Chereskin went on vacation after the deal broke down and couldn't be reached for comment.

Mr. Spielvogel said the new reporting line was set up "to link [AC&R] to a worldwide agency system."

Mr. Chereskin, 62, has known Mr. Spielvogel for more than 20 years, and considered working at Backer when Mr. Chereskin's predecessor, Stephen Rose, tried his own buyback last year, a source said.

AC&R's key clients include Lauder, Seiko Corp. of America and Foster's Lager beer.

Mr. Spielvogel said he cleared the potential conflict between Foster's and Backer's Miller Brewing Co. account with Miller President Warren Dunn.

Saatchi's bankers were unwilling to have the company assume some of AC&R's liabilities, including an age discrimination suit brought by four former AC&R executives in April.

At the same time, two senior executives at AC&R's Los Angeles office have joined with a free-lance creative team to set up an independent agency called CGRW.

Don Cunningham, former general manager of the office, and Suzanne Whitman, the agency's radio and TV producer, teamed with freelancers Bob Grimaldi and Gerry Renert. Each will be a principal and equal partner in CGRW.

Saatchi isn't contesting the breakaway.

The L.A. office had been reporting to Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings. AC&R's Irvine, Calif., office changed its name back to Cochrane Chase, Livingston & Co. in July, and it remains a Saatchi unit.

In addition to that Irvine shop, AC&R will retain a small service office in Los Angeles.

The new CGRW agency will handle the Southern California Chevrolet Dealers Association and First Fidelity Bank, worth about $15 million in billings combined.

In an unrelated move, AC&R's New York office lost a small account last week. Berkley Books moved its business to ZAK, formed three years ago by three former AC&R executives. □

Coke keeps share lead despite Pepsi's charge

By Alison Fahey

Pepsi-Cola Co.'s advertising may be spurring changes at Coca-Cola USA, but so far the No. 1 soft-drink marketer's sales are holding up.

For the first six months of 1991, Coca-Cola's supermarket sales share for its major cola brands was 27.1%, up from 26.8% for the same time a year earlier, Information Resources Inc.'s InfoScan tracking service reported.

Pepsi-Cola's share remained flat at 24%.

Although supermarkets account for only about 40% of the total $46 billion in soft-drink sales, they're an important barometer.

The supermarket "is important because it's a highly visible area, and it's where the cola wars take place," said Hellen Berry, VP-marketing of Beverage Marketing Corp., a consultancy.

Further, supermarket sales are more likely to be affected by advertising and promotional efforts since consumers seldom have a choice between Coca-Cola or Pepsi-Cola fountain products in restaurants or fast-food outlets.

Industry observers perceive Pepsi-Cola as having marketing momentum, driven by the Diet Pepsi commercials featuring Ray Charles that started in January. That momentum could eventually turn sales in its favor but hasn't yet.

"You can't change this business that fast," said Tom Pirko, president of Bevmark, a consultancy. "Even Ray Charles hasn't been enough to make a difference yet. Pepsi is trying to lay the groundwork for real change long-term."

For 1990, Coca-Cola had a 40.9% corporate share while Pepsi-Cola had a 33.2% share of the total U.S. soft-drink market. Those figures include fountain sales, where Coca-Cola is stronger than Pepsi-Cola, and non-cola brands.

But Coca-Cola is clearly worried

Study finds Big 3 nets hiked ad time

By Joe Mandese

The Big 3 TV networks and Fox all added commercial time in at least one daypart this year, says a joint study by the American Association of Advertising Agencies and Association of National Advertisers.

NBC led the way, adding 13 seconds per prime-time hour, 8 seconds per daytime hour and 29 seconds per news hour.

The groups compared data from March, based on Nielsen Media Research's Monitor-Plus system, with data from their November report.

Some major advertisers and their agencies have begun stepping up pressure on the networks to curtail non-programming time, or at least inform clients when they add to it.

Many executives say the increases violate their contractual agreements with the networks.

"My concern is that they're not telling us when they change the rules," said J. Andrea Alstrup, media director of Johnson & Johnson. "We have contracts with all of our suppliers—networks, syndication, cable, everyone—to run our commercials in a program that we assume has a certain number of commercial announcements in it, and we're paying for that."

Ms. Alstrup said advertisers and their agencies have asked the networks to start informing them of such changes, but so far their requests have been denied.

She said the industry plans to step up scrutiny with efforts like the commercial monitoring report.

"It's unfortunate that we don't have a

Walt Disney Co. has Mickey Mouse. Warner Bros. has Bugs Bunny. And Universal Studios has . . . Frankenstein.

MCA, parent of Universal Pictures and the Universal Studios theme parks, this month will launch its most extensive corporate marketing program ever, in support of the "Official Universal Studios Monsters."

The entertainment conglomerate, owned by Japan's Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., wants to build the characters of Frankenstein's monster, Dracula and their ghoulish buddies into an ongoing franchise that may yield licensed merchandise, new TV and film properties and theme park attractions.

In short, the monsters may become Universal's Mickey Mouse.

The monsters will receive $12 million to $15 million in media support for their Halloween-oriented launch this month, estimated Linda Berkeley, VP-business development and marketing for MCA/Universal.

Beware of imitations.

Promotional activity includes:

- Miller Brewing Co. will sponsor screenings of "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" at movie theaters in about 60 cities to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the films. Miller will also team with MCA/Universal Home Video for a Halloween promotion tied to the video releases of the two films, backed by a $5 million TV campaign from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.
- Pepsi-Cola Co. and Frito-Lay will feature the monsters in a joint $20 million "Monster Match" promotion that includes about $6 million in TV advertising. Tracy-Locke, Dallas, handles.
- Southland Corp. will support the "Monster Match" promotion with Frankenstein standees in 6,000 7-Eleven stores.
- Spencer Gifts stores, the 455-outlet chain owned by MCA, will highlight the monsters in

Mattel makes Japan push with revamped doll

By David Kilburn and Julie Skur Hill

Barbie has put on a new face in Japan, a makeover that promises a bigger share for Mattel in the $80 million fashion doll segment as the company eyes expansion into Japan's broader toy market.

In April, the company shifted marketing for Barbie to Mattel K.K., a new wholly owned Tokyo subsidiary, from Bandai, Japan's leading toy marketer.

As the licensing agreement with Bandai ended, Barbie herself changed, taking on a more Western look.

Last month, two network TV campaigns by McCann-Erickson Hakuhodo launched a U.S.-style Barbie doll, replacing a Japanese version.

"Japan is a tough market, but we're making an investment and we're here for the long term," said Laurie Brighton, Asia/Pacific marketing manager. "Next year, we're planning to get a significant share of the pie."

She wouldn't specify a figure, but industry sources say Mattel is aiming for more than a 15% market share of the doll segment.

Attempts to grab other portions of Japan's toy market are in the works, said Donna Gibbs, director of media relations. Next year, Mattel will launch action figures and accessories related to "Hook," the coming Steven Spielberg movie.

"Our plan is to eventually offer the full range of Mattel products in Japan," she said. "For 1991, though, Barbie is our focus."

Barbie made her debut in Japan eight years ago as a doll designed specifically for the Japanese market, called Moba Barbie.

The doll achieved only a 5% to 6% share against leader Takara Co., which holds an estimated 75% share for its Jenny dolls.

"We think the fashion doll market in Japan will be stimulated by Mattel's Barbie doll and will grow between 20% and 30%," said Masaru Nakajima, a manager in Takara's overseas operations department. "We feel it's good for us to have the chance to broaden our views about the development and marketing of fashion dolls through facing Mattel's know-how."

The new Barbie is different from Moba Barbie.

"The face was different; [Moba Barbie] was more akin to the prevailing belief about what the Japanese consumer wanted at that time," Ms. Brighton said.

The first Barbie resembled her competition, Takara's Jenny, a doll with gentle features—doe-like brown eyes, a little turned-up nose, sweet mouth and a girlish figure.

Barbie ads in Japan now show girls how to play with the doll.

Moba Barbie's look "represented what Barbie was supposed to be in this market for the past eight years, but it was not successful," Ms. Brighton said.

"Japan was the only market where we deviated from the norm," Ms. Gibbs said. Barbie is sold in about 100 countries, with just less than half her 1990 sales of $740 million coming from outside the U.S., Ms. Gibbs said.

From July 15 to Aug. 25, Mattel tested new Barbie advertising and promotions in the northern city of Niigata.

The results show the Japanese market is ready for the more sophisticated version as Japanese attitudes toward Western consumer goods have changed, Ms. Brighton said.

"There's an acceptance now and for the future that just was never here before," Ms. Brighton said.

The current effort promotes Barbie with her fashions and full range of accessories, which weren't marketed with Moba Barbie and aren't available for rival dolls in Japan.

"The other doll [Moba Barbie] didn't have the mobility that Barbie has. Her knees didn't bend, so it was difficult for her to do things like get into a car" as the U.S.-style Barbie can, Ms. Gibbs said.

There are two TV campaigns, one for Hawaiian Fun Barbie and the other for Costume Ball Barbie. International Dolls of the World, Babysitter Skipper, My First Barbie and Fun to Dress, and other related play items and accessories, will be promoted through in-store merchandising efforts. Recommended retail prices for these products range from $11 to $18.50.

"It was a test for our total marketing mix and also an opportunity to analyze trade and consumer response to this. Results have been good," Ms. Brighton said. She wouldn't disclose any numbers.

The test indicated Barbie is a "very TV-driven product. Mothers and daughters come into the stores and ask for particular products by name," she said.

Barbie's "not just a fashion doll. She gives a little girl the chance to pretend, to build a fantasy world completely. We believe that this part of our weaponry separates us from the competition," Ms. Brighton said.

Because Japanese girls thought of Moba Barbie as a more traditional display doll, the ads show little girls actually playing with the new Barbie, Ms. Gibbs said.

The company plans to spend $6 million in media by yearend and another $3 million on promotions and merchandising.

With Bandai, Moba Barbie was only promoted through discounting. □

Japan TV surge to hike need for foreign shows

By David Kilburn

TOKYO—Though there are no foreign programs that regularly appear in the top 10 in Japan's TV ratings, demand for foreign programming should increase this decade.

"In the 1990s, we are expecting about 30 new stations—satellite, cable and terrestrial—to start up," said Nobukatsu Takatsukasa, a manager in Dentsu's TV division. "With the number of channels increasing so rapidly, program development in Japan cannot keep up with increased demand. This means more foreign programs will be used."

"In the 1960s, American shows such as 'Rawhide,' 'The Untouchables' and 'Lassie' were popular."

Only about 5% of broadcast time on Japan's five national commercial TV networks is filled with foreign shows, such as "Little House on the Prairie" and "Knight Rider."

Movies have been airing at 9 p.m. Sundays on Asahi TV for 25 years.

"In the 1960s, American shows such as 'Rawhide,' 'The Untouchables' and 'Lassie' were very popular and occupied a great deal of program time," Dentsu's Mr. Takatsukasa said.

But as the program development industry grew in Japan, networks began offering home-grown shows.

Now, even new Japanese shows have a tough time breaking into the country's unusually stable top 20.

Of the top 20 shows, only four have been introduced since January 1990, while four others have made the rankings consistently for 20 years. Of the 10,000 shows that air on the five national commercial networks, about 25% are new each year, according to Dentsu.

Fuji TV's "Chibi Marukochan" ("Little Maruko"), which made its debut in January 1990, is one of the most recent to gain success on one of Japan's commercial networks.

The half-hour show, which airs at 6 p.m. Sundays, ended its first year as the No. 3 show with a 39.9% rating and for the week of Aug. 18 was still holding onto the No. 6 slot, according to Video Research Co.

"Chibi Marukochan," sometimes likened to "The Simpsons," is a cartoon about the everyday life of third-grader. "Chibi" is sponsored by NIT, Takara Co. and Morinaga Co.

Another top animated program, "Sazae-san," began life in 1946 as a newspaper cartoon about the daily life of a young housewife, Sazae-san, and her extended family. Since becoming an animated TV series on Fuji TV in 1969, it's continually ranked among the top 20. Toshiba Corp. has been the single sponsor since 1969.

Only sponsors, whose names are listed on the screen, are allowed to run ads during commercial breaks within programs. To become a sponsor of a prime-time show, advertisers pay about $150,000 per show, which entitles them to one 30-second spot and the right to buy other time within the program. Up to 18% of all weekly broadcast time is allowed for commercials.

Most evenings each week one or more samurai dramas set in the past are aired, often with quite predictable plots.

The highest rated of these is Tokyo Broadcasting System's "Mito Komon," based on the life of Tokugawa Mitsukuni. A member of the ruling family, he investigates crimes, usually involving corrupt high-ranking officials and businessmen.

"What viewers want from samurai dramas is not novelty but simple and predictable plots," said Motokiyo Sugawara, manager of the media development department at McCann-Erickson Hakuhodo.

"Mito Komon" is planned by Dentsu. The hourlong show, aired Mondays, has been broadcast since June 1966 with consistently high ratings. Matsushita Electric Industrial has been the show's sole sponsor since its start. □

Asia, is the most rapidly growing advertising market," Mr. Watanabe said. "We are very interested in Vietnam, which is now a rapidly growing market for Japanese companies. We are also interested in Indonesia. We're studying both markets and expect to continue doing so for another 12 months."

After Asian markets, Europe is Hakuhodo's next priority, he said.

The agency's recent $15 million investment in TBWA is a significant step in improving its service to its clients, especially in Europe.

Eastern Europe is also of interest. "It is possible that there will be opportunities for us in the future. At the moment we are collecting information," he said.

Developing a presence in the U.S., Hakuhodo has its own agency network with a branch in Los Angeles, is problematic.

"Although the U.S. market is enormous and we would like to be doing more there, we have learned from experience that this is very, very difficult," he said.

In August 1987, Hakuhodo opened a joint venture with Lintas:Worldwide in New York, called Lintas:Hakuhodo, hoping to serve Japanese-based clients. But by November 1988, the shop closed, failing to attract any business because of protests by clients within Lintas' parent company, Interpublic Group of Cos. A similar joint venture in Tokyo, however, thrives, handling Lintas clients' needs in Japan.

"Since our subsidiary in the U.S. has a short history, it is difficult for the company to be valued as a local agency in the U.S.," a Hakuhodo source said.

Although Hakuhodo's overseas push is primarily to serve Japanese clients, some Western advertisers, such as Lotus in Germany, started working with Hakuhodo. □

TV season starts slow

Overall ratings lag, but new programs are up

NEW YORK—Combined ratings for the Big 3 TV networks' first two weeks of the prime-time season are down from last year, but new shows are averaging higher ratings.

All new programs are averaging a 10.8 Nielsen rating, up 3% from the 10.5 rating new series averaged in the first two weeks of the 1990-91 season.

At the same time, overall prime-time ratings are down 2%, suggesting network promotional campaigns are generating good sampling for new series.

Sampling is key to the success of new shows. A third of viewers who watch new shows will continue to watch them during the season, CBS research shows.

"Early returns indicate that the three broadcast networks should have several hit shows this season," said Peter Chrisanthopoulos, president of the National Television Association.

The new shows are also experiencing viewer gains among some of the most desirable demographics, he said. For example, ratings among adults 18 to 49 are up 5% from last season.

Among the new-series frontrunners are ABC's "Home Improvement," CBS' "Royal Family" and NBC's "Nurses." But media buyers say it will take several weeks before clear winners are established. □

Entertainment titles position for growth

By Janice Kelly

Advertising and circulation performance of publications.

Entertainment magazines are evolving, with service-oriented titles best poised to succeed in the '90s.

"Entertainment magazines are becoming more valuable because they help consumers manage their entertainment choices," said David Verklin, senior VP-corporate media director at Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "What we are seeing suggests . . . a new category of entertainment magazine is emerging."

There's plenty of room for good editorial products despite the proliferation of entertainment-related outlets, said Michael Klingensmith, publisher of Entertainment Weekly. He cited the growth of entertainment marketing, with more advertisers sponsoring events and seeking product placements in films.

"Entertainment is one of the more resilient American industries right now," he said.

Here's how some of the leading entertainment glossies are faring:

■ People, New York (Time Warner): The granddaddy of the entertainment category, this mass-market weekly in recent years has expanded beyond coverage of the entertainment industry with more stories on non-entertainers.

Ad pages through August: 1,842.07, up 14.4% from the same period last year. Circulation: 3.15 million. Ad rates: B&w page: $70,730; color page: $91,165.

■ US, New York (Straight Arrow Publishers): People's broader approach allowed US to carve out a niche by focusing solely on celebrities, with mixed results. In August, the magazine halved frequency to monthly, primarily to stem financial losses, US executives said. But observers say US may succeed at its new frequency with meatier, in-depth stories and features.

Ad pages through August: 291.8, down 35.3%. Circulation: 1.3 million. Ad rates: B&w page: $25,210; color page: $32,545.

■ Entertainment Weekly, New York (Time Warner): After a bumpy start, the fledgling Entertainment Weekly seems to be on a steady growth path. The magazine, which reviews movies, music, TV, videos and books, claims circulation jumped 56% in the past year and is winning over Madison Avenue skeptics with a less cluttered redesign of its initial format and more mainstream coverage.

Ad pages through August: 521.77, up 0.4%. Circulation: 650,000. Ad rates: B&w page, $17,500; color page: $22,900.

■ Premiere, New York (K-III Magazine Corp.): It's unclear what effects a recent ownership change may have on the monthly, one of eight titles News Corp. sold to K-III in June. The consumer magazine acts like a must-read trade title with its behind-the-scenes look at the movie industry. News Corp. in June published Premiere Preview, a summer movie guide that may be spun off.

Black households viewed 69 hours, 48 minutes of TV during the average week in November of 1990, vs. 47 hours, 6 minutes for other viewing households.

Car spending stalls. First-half automotive advertising on network and spot TV was $1.4 billion, down 9% from the first half of 1990, the Television Bureau of Advertising reported. Network spending fell 9% to $786 million; spot TV dropped 8% to $590 million. No. 1 auto advertiser General Motors Corp. cut its first-half TV budget 6% to $407 million. No. 2 Ford Motor Co. was flat at $198 million and No. 4 Chrysler Corp. dropped 16% to $158 million. The only auto advertisers to increase spending were No. 3 Toyota Motor Corp. (up 11% to $180 million), American Honda Motor Co. (up 6% to $101 million) and American Isuzu Motors (up 3% to $25 million).

Hachette plans cross-media conference. Hachette Magazines will host a worldwide media conference at parent Hachette's Paris-based headquarters Oct. 15 to 18. The company has invited worldwide media directors from ad agencies in the U.S., U.K. and France to discuss possible global cross-media deals and programs linking Hachette's U.S. and foreign properties.

ESPN says oui. ESPN and French partners Canal Plus and Compagnie Generale des Eaux bought a majority interest in the TV holdings of WH Smith Group. The deal includes the European Sports Network, reaching 19 countries through four affiliate companies. Canal Plus is the leading pay TV company in Europe and Compagnie Generale is a leading cable operator.

Chase tags stations for sale. Chase Communications, Hartford, Conn., has placed its five TV stations and eight radio stations on the block to concentrate on overseas ventures. Those ventures include a partnership with Poland's government to provide cable TV to major cities there.

NBC leaps from liability. NBC has disavowed financial liability to "Quantum Leap" producer Universal TV for an episode of the prime-time series that depicts a suicidal gay man. The network said it wouldn't guarantee the episode would be aired, due to concerns from advertisers about the program's content. If the produced episode doesn't air, NBC won't pay Universal's licensing fee.

Film at 11—twice. CBS affiliate KSL-TV, Salt Lake City, on Oct. 21 starts producing a nightly half-hour news program for independent station KXIV-TV, to air at 9 p.m. (MT). A CBS spokesman said it's not unusual for affiliates to produce programs for other stations but was unsure whether any had done so for a station that competes with the network's prime-time feed.

Southern Homes* sold. An investor group and employees of Southern Homes bought the 45,000-circulation magazine from the Haas Group, Norcross, Ga. Robert Patterson will be president of the new, unnamed company; he had been chief operating officer of Haas Group. Southern Homes is published seven times a year.

Multiplication test. Showtime Networks is testing Showtime 2, a multiplexed feed that shows the same entertainment programming as the base channel but at different times. Earlier this year, MTV: Music Television said it would test a multiplexed system to create three different music formats. Other cable networks, including MTV's sister channel VH-1: Video Hits One, have expressed interest in multiplexing. □

Egad! Glad ad makes almost everyone mad

By Bob Garfield

Garfield

Well, the results of the Glad bags campaign reader poll are in, and the response is split:

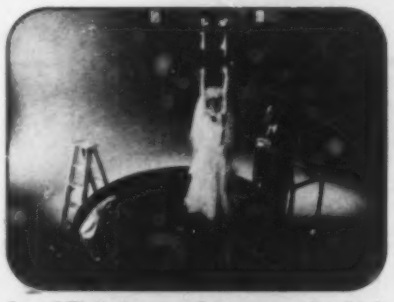
Half of you hate me for detecting non-existent anti-woman imagery in a series of harmless, funny TV spots, and the other half of you hate me for defending the ads' degrading, female-subordinating stereotypes and violence against women.

Scores of letters arrived rating Chicago-based Leo Burnett USA's latest spots for First Brands Corp.'s Glad Handle-Tie plastic garbage bags—spots that, you might recall, place women in very precarious situations as comic Thom Sharp taunts them into trying Glad.

Correspondents as divergent as Sharp ("Bob, I gotta tell you, I think you have way too much time on your hands. Yes, a tad too much analysis here."), Glad/Burnett copywriter Neal Spector and the Lake Stevens (Wash.) High School student body weighed in on the subject. Counting the anonymous, 4-star entries with Chicago postmarks, the response was heavily polarized and evenly split.

"Barely repressed S&M," says June (0 stars) Fletcher. "Twisted, threatening and perverse," says Kimberly (0 stars) Parr. "Time to switch brands," says Roz ("less than zero" stars) Cundell. "They lead me to think the company is led by a group of sadistic, sexist males whose brains reside in their scrotum," offers Rhonda (0 stars) McMahon.

And Lisa (0 stars) Deaton, who regarded the column to be "as offensive . . . as the ad," suggests redoing the Glad spot that featured a young bride-to-be suspended over a wine vat—this time with a middle-age white male in brief swim trunks hanging over a tank of alligators. "That," she predicts, "will get him to hold his little penis."



An ad likely to provoke women shouldn't be on the air, and this one for Glad Handle-Tie bags no longer is.

Always nice hearing from you, Lisa.

Nearly half of the responses were equally vitriolic, all but a few from women. Men, meanwhile, far and away dominated the other point of view.

"Humor that works with a product demonstration," says Greg (3½ stars) Klein. "What more could you want?!" "You copped out and succumbed to the specter of the Politically Correct Mind Police," writes Steven J. (4 stars) McCombs. "It's about time America got down to the serious business of having a sense of humor again," writes Elizabeth (3 stars) Gilmore.

J. Adam Rothstein (5 stars on a scale of 4) denounces the "search for hidden exploitation" as a First Amendment-flouting "politically correct witch hunt known as prior restraint."

David L. (4 stars) White opines that my even raising the question in a column does a disservice, because now agencies and clients "will wonder about how a spot might be interpreted and may throw away great work."

Aha! Inadvertently, Mr. White solves the dilemma: The wedding gown spot never meant to exploit or offend anyone, but if everybody had worried about offending people, it never would have run. And it shouldn't have.

Obviously, there's always some humorless somebody out there just itching to be offended, and nobody's counseling 17 layers of textual analysis or killing a campaign at the first vaguely negative association. That would be craven and foolish—as foolish as failing to consider the reaction to any depiction of women in bondage, imagery that should raise a lawn-and-leaf-bag-size red flag.

This has nothing to do with political correctness, nothing to do with free speech and nothing to do with malicious intent. This has to do with minimum sensitivity to the impact of your message. If an advertising joke risks infuriating customers, the joke can be as funny or innocent as it wants and still be a gigantic mistake—as First Brands evidently concluded when viewer complaints prompted them to pull the wedding dress spot off the air (before the Ad Review ever ran).

It is more or less axiomatic that you shouldn't invest tens of millions of dollars in advertising reasonably likely to lose business. A tad too much analysis? No, big Thom, a tad too little. □

Olympic-size plans

Chrysler, Kmart, CBS form promotion team

By Raymond Serafin

Chrysler Corp. is teaming up with Kmart Corp., CBS and Time Warner for the automaker's biggest-ever promotion, tied to the Winter Olympics.

The cross-promotion, themed "Drive for the gold," is designed to build store traffic for Kmart and Chrysler while promoting CBS' February broadcasts of the Winter Olympics from Albertville, France.

Ross Roy Inc., Bloomfield Hills, Mich., an agency for both Chrysler and Kmart, put together the promotion just as it handled the Kmart/CBS promotions for the last three TV premiere seasons.

The Olympics play a key role in Chrysler's 1992 marketing plans. The company plans to use the broadcasts to launch the Jeep Grand Cherokee sport utility vehicle and may use the Games to tease an important series of new midsize sedans that will make its debut next fall.

Chrysler will spend $50 million as a broadcast sponsor of the Winter Olympics and is the official automotive sponsor of the 1992 Winter and Summer Games.

"We were looking for a partner who has massive consumer exposure, and 57 million people visit Kmart every week," said Mike Kelley, national sales promotion manager for Chrysler.

The promotion kicks off today in Kmart's 2,300 U.S. stores, with point-of-purchase displays, in-store announcements and a 20-minute, CBS-produced Olympics video showing in the stores' video departments.

Simultaneously, Chrysler dealers will use showroom displays and will provide vehicles that can be shown at Kmart stores.

On Oct. 13 and Oct. 20, 68 million households will get a Kmart free standing insert describing the promotion, with other support coming from a $1 million network radio campaign and an ad running in Time Warner's People, Mr. Kelley said. The FSI will include numbers that must be matched against in-store displays to win vehicles.

Also, Kmart cashiers will pass out coupons to be taken to Chrysler dealers to possibly win a vehicle, commemorative Olympics coins, an expenses-paid trip to the Games or a medallion.

Those who visit dealerships will get a special edition of the U.S. Olympic Committee's Olympic. The magazine features numbers to be matched during CBS broadcasts in November, December and January.

Finally, numbers will appear in a special edition of Sports Illustrated, offering the chance to win a vehicle during each of the 16 days of the Olympics broadcasts. □ its "Halloween Head Quarters" promotion, including a 900-number sweepstakes promotion created in-house.

■ Cable channel American Movie Classics will run a 24-hour Universal monster movie marathon on Halloween.

MCA has also signed about 40 licensees, who will market more than 200 monster products including apparel, novelty items and toys, most of which won't hit stores until early 1991.

"We wanted to develop something that would really identify Universal Studios," Ms. Berkeley said. "We wanted to build a brand identity for 'Monsters.' "

The company is already talking to a fast-food chain and a major candy marketer about promotions in 1992, she said.

In its 75-year history, Universal Pictures has released many classic horror movies, including the early favorites "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" in 1931. Other Universal monster movies include "The Bride of Frankenstein," "The Phantom of the Opera" and "The Creature From the Black Lagoon."

Within the past year and a half, MCA has tapped Ms. Berkeley and David Weitzner, president of worldwide marketing for the MCA Recreation Services division, to look for marketing synergies within the entertainment giant's vast film, TV, home video, theme park, music, publishing and retail divisions.

MCA's next companywide marketing push will support the characters from "An American Tail: Fievel Goes West," Universal's holiday animated sequel to "An American Tail."

"We wanted to build a brand identity for 'Monsters.' "

"We'd like to develop [the monsters] as a year-round property, but Halloween is obviously a great opportunity," Ms. Berkeley said.

"Dracula" may get another large promotional push around Valentine's Day—the movie's original release date in 1931. □ about the potential long-term ramifications. Already, the company has sought the help of Creative Artists Agency, a talent agency, to help predict global trends. Coca-Cola is also looking for new creative from its agencies for a global thrust.

More recently, sources say Coca-Cola is re-evaluating its 1992 marketing budget and is considering media mix shifts in addition to an overall increase in ad spending.

"Coke is reviewing their allocation of resources," said one source close to the company. "I think they realize they have to spend more money [on marketing] next year, but I don't think anybody's figured out where to put it."

Some funds could be diverted into in-store marketing vehicles, particularly new technologies like electronic couponing devices and frequent-shopper programs.

One marketing executive who asked not to be identified said Coca-Cola had recently met with several in-store marketing companies that were invited to submit proposals on possible marketing opportunities.

"We will continue to look for creative and innovative ways to impact the public at the store level," said Bob Bertini, a Coca-Cola USA spokesman, who wouldn't elaborate.

Coca-Cola in 1990 spent about $90 million on measured media for Coca-Cola Classic and $70 million on Diet Coke brands, according to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service. McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, and Lintas:New York handle Coca-Cola Classic and Diet Coke, respectively.

Pepsi spent $80 million on flagship Pepsi and about $76 million on Diet Pepsi brands via BBDO Worldwide. □ system that can provide us with this on an ongoing basis, because I think we would find that everybody is changing as their needs require," she said.

"It's apparent that the networks are not heeding our concerns," said Richard Kostyra, exec VP-U.S. director of media services at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, "and we intend to make an exerted effort to control the amount of program time."

He said the Four A's and ANA plan to release another study of network clutter, based on data from July, and a study of cable and syndication commercial clutter at an Advertising Research Foundation meeting in December.

NBC's increases make it the most cluttered of the Big 3 in prime time, the monitoring found. The network did cut commercial time in late night, early morning and sports.

ABC went down everywhere but sports, which increased, and early morning, which stayed the same.

CBS increased commercial time in prime time, daytime, early morning and sports, but reduced it in late night and remained the same in news.

Fox Broadcasting Co. decreased its prime-time commercial time by 15 seconds per hour and its Saturday morning time by 25 seconds. Fox added 7 commercial seconds per late-night hour. □

British Air talks to Northwest

Alliance would give flight to global carrier

By Jennifer Lawrence and Cleveland Horton

Northwest Airlines is in serious discussions with British Airways to forge a corporate alliance that would create a new, powerful global airline brand, Advertising Age has learned.

A proposal under consideration would dissolve the Northwest name and replace it with some form of the British Airways name, said one source involved in the talks.

That could give Northwest, the fourth-largest U.S. carrier, a much-needed image boost and British Airways, Europe's largest carrier, an expanded global presence.

The overall strategy is to repackage Northwest to achieve a marketing integration with British Airways—from frequent flier programs, scheduling and route coordination to employee training and corporate identity.

The plan could be implemented sometime in 1992.

It's not clear whether British Airways would take an equity position in Northwest or whether some other financial arrangement would be structured.

Northwest is already partly owned by KLM Royal Dutch Airlines. Northwest said KLM holds 10.5% of the voting common stock and 20% of common stock. KLM's role in the plan is uncertain.

Foreign airlines are restricted by law from owning more than 49% of a U.S. carrier.

Northwest also has been discussing buying major portions of Continental Airlines, but it appears those talks are proceeding separately.

At press time, British Airways officials in London were traveling. A person in the press office who wouldn't give her name said the company "never comments on such things."

Northwest also declined to comment. "We will maintain our usual position of not commenting or speculating on

Whittle, Forstmann talks die

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Talks collapsed Friday between Whittle Communications and Forstmann Little & Co. The New York-based investment partnership had agreed in principle last month to invest $350 million in Whittle for a one-third stake. The parties said they couldn't agree on the valuation for Whittle. Chairman Christopher Whittle said in an employee newsletter last week that a large portion of the funds would have been used to finance an unidentified $100 million acquisition. He added that the acquisition negotiations were called off two weeks ago but that the company will still look for other capital infusions.

Good old days gone: Publishers

By Scott Donaton

NAPLES, Fla.—The recession has led to a transformation of the magazine industry, and publishers must adapt to doing business in a permanently altered marketplace.

That was the consensus among publishers here at last week's American Magazine Conference, co-sponsored by the Magazine Publishers of America and the American Society of Magazine Editors.

That attitude was in marked contrast to last year's meeting, when publishers portrayed themselves as victims of the recession who would bounce back when the economy improved.

This year, conference participants said there have been fundamental changes in relationships between magazines and advertisers and that publishers must invest in editorial quality and focus on circulation profitability.

■ Negotiated rates are here to stay, agencies tell magazines—Page 36.
■ Publishers are focusing on quality subscriptions, not volume—Page 50.

But above all the calls for creative problem solving, the essential message was that an economic recovery won't mean a return to the salad days of the mid-1980s.

High court may open ad tax

By Steven W. Colford

WASHINGTON—The door to state taxation of advertising could be opened if the U.S. Supreme Court overturns a 24-year-old law protecting direct marketers from state sales taxes.

That's striking fear in the minds of industry representatives and lawyers in the wake of the high court's decision last week to consider a controversial North Dakota case.

"This will most likely be the case that decides the future of the mail-order business."

At issue is whether a direct marketer must have an office or other physical presence in the taxing state or whether, as some states now argue, mailing catalogs and using 800 phone numbers locally is sufficient presence for taxation purposes.

A landmark 1967 Supreme Court ruling said direct marketers must pay sales taxes only in states in which the company has a physical presence.

The principals in the long-simmering dispute: the state of North Dakota, intent on forcing direct marketers to ante up an estimated $5 million in annual sales and use tax receipts, and Quill Corp., an Illinois marketer of office supplies that refused to collect and remit the state's 5% sales tax.

Because of the potential scope of the court's decision, the advertising and media industries stand to lose big if the court veers away from its precedent, National Bellas Hess vs. Illinois Department of Revenue.

Industry officials fear money-starved local governments would then be able to argue that the transmission of a broadcast ad into a state or mailing of a catalog to residents would entitle the states to collect taxes.

"I'd say it's a 60% to 70% chance that Bellas Hess is dead in the water," said Thomas McG[illegible], a Washington attorney at Arnold & Porter, which represents major adver-

RJR's Camel leaves Y&R for upstart shop

By Judann Dagnoli and Jon Lafayette

A two-man agency has snatched R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s $40 million Camel cigarette account away from giant Young & Rubicam, New York.

RJR on Friday said the creative portion of the domestic account will be moved "effectively immediately" to Mezzina/Brown, formed in July by two former Y&R staffers.

The account is the first for the fledgling New York shop, which has yet to even establish a formal office. Media buying will continue to be handled in-house.

The new agency was formed by John Mezzina, former senior VP-group creative director, and Bill Brown, former senior VP-group director, both of whom worked on the Camel account.

Before leaving Y&R, the two executives were negotiating with the agency to establish either a "mini" agency-within-an-agency or a separate shop backed by Y&R, but sources say those talks fell through.

Neither Mr. Brown nor Mr. Mezzina could be reached at press time; Y&R wouldn't comment.

"John Mezzina and Bill Brown have been key to the creative evolution of the successful repositioning of the Camel brand for several years," David Iauco, senior VP-marketing at the tobacco company, said in a statement. "Moving from Y&R to Mezzina/-Brown will provide the continuity the brand requires to continue its momentum in our highly competitive industry."

He declined to elaborate.

The shift comes as RJR continues unofficial reviews of its Winston and Salem brands, both currently at FCB/Leber Katz Partners.

RJR is tapping the resources of Y&R, Leber Katz and Trone Advertising, Greensboro, N.C., for new creative on the $25 million Winston account and also is soliciting ideas from Leber Katz and Trone on the $27 million Salem account (see story on Page 54).

But the "unofficial review" status hadn't included Camel. That brand has experienced a significant turaround with the "Smooth character" campaign featuring Old Joe and his gang of "Hard Pack" sidekicks.

The Old Joe character originated as a Camel promotional vehicle in France during the 1980s and later showed up in a Trone-created promotion in the U.S.

Camel's market share last year was 4.4%, up from 3.9% in 1989, the year the full campaign began in the U.S., according to Wheat, First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr. The U.S. cigarette market is estimated at $40 billion-plus.

The move strips Y&R of its largest RJR domestic account, leaving the agency with the $10 million Now cigarette account and the $1.3 million More cigarette account.

Y&R won the Camel account from McCann-Erickson Worldwide in July 1989. □

Will it be adieu to P&G?

Euro RSCG may lose account to keep Henkel

By Bruce Crumley and Laurel Wentz

Euro RSCG is believed to be prepared to lose its $100 million Procter & Gamble Co. business to keep a similar amount of Henkel business in Europe if P&G stands by its conflict policy.

The conflict issue surfaced early this month when Eurocom and Roux Seguela Cayzac & Goudard agreed to merge, becoming the No. 6 advertising group in the world.

P&G is concerned about the conflict, though Henkel is not, agency sources say.

"This does not really bother me," said Klaus Morwind, Henkel's member of the board in charge of worldwide detergent marketing.

Mr. Morwind confirmed that Eurocom handles close to $100 million in Henkel detergent business—a larger amount than was previously believed—and that Eurocom handles the largest amount of business of any of Henkel's agencies.

He said that since RSCG doesn't handle P&G business in the detergent category, the merger isn't a problem for Henkel.

If P&G believes there's a conflict problem, "I would assume P&G will switch agencies," Mr. Morwind said.

Agency sources in Europe say Euro RSCG's focus on Europe means the group is expected to keep the Henkel business if it must choose between Henkel and P&G.

P&G declined to comment on its agency relationships.

If P&G believes there's a conflict problem, "I would assume P&G will switch agencies."

Jean-Michel Goudard, Euro RSCG's president of international, is going to Cincinnati later this month to meet with P&G, but his office wouldn't comment further.

Although P&G allows its agencies to work for competitors in different product categories, Henkel and Unilever are believed to be exceptions to the rule.

Eurocom and RSCG will maintain separate agencies, but the P&G business at Tatham/RSCG, Chicago, is where the conflict lies.

A Tatham spokeswoman said there's been no change in any client relationships since the merger announcement but that discussions continue concerning any possible conflicts.

Also last week, a top executive quit and RSCG was expelled from the Media Partnership, the media buying group formed by WPP Group and Omnicom Group agencies in Europe.

Jean de Yturbe, former president of Eurocom Advertising, resigned because he was unhappy with the new structure of Euro RSCG requiring him to report to Mr. Goudard, sources say.

Meanwhile, RSCG's expulsion from the Media Partnership leaves Euro RSCG with no European media buying partner. RSCG bought media via the Media Partnership, and Eurocom had been looking for a new partner since ending its European media buying arrangement with Carat in August.

"None of us were consulted in this merger," said Media Partnership President Albert Knobler. "In order to enter . . . [the partnership], the new partner should be agreed upon by all members. Also given Euro RSCG's size, we could have been facing some anti-trust and competition problems here in France." □

DDB Needham-DIK split?

By David Kilburn and Jon Lafayette

DDB Needham Worldwide is on the verge of splitting with Dai-Ichi Kikaku in Japan and setting up its own wholly owned subsidiary there, sources say.

The agency has approached Japan's No. 3 Tokyu Agency to handle media buying for a new subsidiary DDB wants to open, the sources said.

The sources said DDB would be interested in closer ties with Tokyu in the future, but Tokyu is not willing to upset the relationship of its sister agency, Tokyu Agency International, Japan's No. 19 agency, with D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. D'Arcy owns about 24% of Tokyu Agency International.

Tokyu officials said only that they've been approached by a multinational agency wanting media buying services. DDB Needham and DIK wouldn't comment.

The DDB Needham/DIK split isn't expected to affect the joint ventures the two have in other countries. DIK is Japan's No. 6 agency and owns 40% of DDB Needham Japan, the No. 40 shop. DIK also owns 50% of Kresser/Craig, Santa Monica, Calif.; and smaller percentages of other DDB shops around the world. □

No. 4 Fox often 2nd or 3rd

By Joe Mandese

Five years after it began broadcasting to a national lineup of affiliate stations, Fox Broadcasting Co. is still referred to as the fourth network.

But as often as not, Fox's prime-time ratings are third, or even second, to the so-called Big 3 in the current season.

Three weeks into the season, Fox is placing third or better on half its four-night schedule.

On Thursdays, Fox's strongest night, the network is second only to NBC. On Sunday nights, it places a solid third, well ahead of NBC. On Friday and Saturday nights, it runs a close fourth.

More significantly, Fox's ratings are growing at an incredible rate, while the Big 3 are slipping or posting only marginal growth.

"You can't really think of Fox as the fourth network anymore," said Steve Farella, exec VP-media director of Young & Rubicam, New York. "It's no longer a network alternative like cable or syndication, but a part of a base network TV plan for many brands."

For the first three weeks, Fox's average prime-time rating rose 42%, to an 8.1, compared with the same period in 1990, according to Nielsen Media Research. CBS' rose 8%, to a 13.8, while ABC was down 7%, to an 11.7, and NBC dropped 8%, to a 12.1.

"We think of them as an equal player among many key advertising targets—case closed," said David Marans, senior VP-media research, J. Walter Thompson USA.

While agency media executives note that three weeks don't make a season, they point to Fox's long-term growth trends.

"They can't grow in leaps and bounds every year. Otherwise, they would be the No. 1 network very shortly," said Steve Grubbs, senior VP-director of broadcast programming, BBDO Worldwide. "But it's incredible how far they've come in a very short period of time."

Fox hasn't been without its rocky moments. Launched on Oct. 8, 1986, the network got off to a slow start with its ad sales and marketing. But after some turnover in the sales department, Fox appears to have hit on the right mix of sales managers.

Headed by Senior VP-Sales Jon Nesvig, a former senior NBC sales executive, Fox has assembled a team of seasoned Big 3 veterans.

In the 1990-91 upfront market, when the Big 3 decided to abandon the traditional prime-time ratings guarantee policy in favor of an unpopular and confusing formula, Fox executives stuck with the standard one.

When Fox overpromised and underdelivered on ratings estimates last season, it came back in the 1991-92 upfront with conservative numbers that appear to have been a bonus for upfront buyers.

Though Fox's ad revenues are still a fraction of the Big 3, the network is growing at a much faster rate. 1990 revenues totaled $850 million, up 63.5% annually since 1986, according to data from Veronis, Suhler & Associates.

ABC's revenues, meanwhile, grew only 8% to $4.3 billion in the same period; CBS was up 3.8% to $3.3 billion; and NBC grew only 1.5% to $3.2 billion.

Fox has yet to develop a costly national newscast, and its economics may change drastically if it begins to program prime-time hours beyond the Federal Communications Commission's current restrictions under its financial interest and syndication rules.

"They've had a laudatory start, but the challenge they face is the same as all programming sources," said JWT's Mr. Marans. "They have to be able to come up with new hits to refreshen their lineup, and they have to make sure their hard-working veteran shows don't lose ground. That may seem like common sense, but that's what's plaguing NBC now." □

In tune with prunes

YUBA CITY, Calif.—She gave her last album, "No Nonsense," the name of a leading pantyhose brand. Now, country star Barbara Mandrell is singing the praises of the prune. Sunsweet Growers next week will break five 15-second TV spots for its Sunsweet prunes: Ms. Mandrell stars in all five but doesn't sing. Instead, in rural and theatrical settings, she tells consumers how sweet and tasty the pitted prunes are.

Sunsweet signed Ms. Mandrell to a multiyear contract because of her popularity with women 45 and older, the primary prune buyers, said Bob Swensen, Sunsweet's VP-marketing.

J. Walter Thompson USA, San Francisco, created the commercials, which will run during network daytime and early evening programming. □

Nike eyes the ladies

Growth prospects alluring in that segment

By Marcy Magiera

Nike is trying to strengthen its game in the women's market with the double team of the Nike and Side 1 brands.

The company is already so strong in the men's segment, observers say, that any further increase in share will be relatively small. So the leading athletic shoe marketer is focusing on women for growth.

Nike plans to boost its $12 million media budget for Nike brand women's shoes significantly in fiscal 1993, starting in June, and in spring may break its first TV advertising aimed specifically at women.

This month, the Side 1 brand gets its first product-specific advertising, with TV spots for walking shoes and the Sculptor aerobic shoe.

Print ads in Glamour, Cosmopolitan, Shape and Women's Sport & Fitness will also be used.

"Fits like a glove. Feels like love," the voice-over in the Sculptor spot says; the new walking-shoe spot will use Side 1's established "All sides are the same side" theme.

Side 1 is also introducing fitness apparel this month in such retail chains as Nordstrom, Macy's and Lady Foot Locker.

Nike is looking to women's shoes and apparel for growth.

"Apparel is really going to help us merchandise the footwear," said Deb Johnsen, general manager of the Side 1 division.

Spending on Side 1 is expected to be about $8 million through the holiday season, she said.

Nike is supporting Nike brand women's shoes with a $6 million print campaign this fall, in magazines including Cooking Light, Country Living, Elle, People, Mirabella and Vanity Fair.

A series of double spread ads for aerobics, walking, running and cross-training shoes tells young women they don't have to live up to anyone else's perceptions.

Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore., creates advertising; SFM Media, New York, does placement.

Nike introduced Side 1 in 1989 as fashion footwear. Last spring, Nike spent $8 million to relaunch the brand as a fashion-forward athletic shoe, Ms. Johnsen said.

Commercials are running nationally on MTV: Music Television and on a local basis in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and Portland.

"There's no question that the women's area is a high priority" for Nike, said John Horan, publisher of Sporting Goods Intelligence, an industry newsletter. But he questioned Nike's emotional approach in women's marketing.

Nike's "men's marketing is very hip and sassy," Mr. Horan said. "But they seem to think they have to talk to women with a different voice, almost so that you'd never know it's the same brand." □

Chiat lures Babbit to Big Apple from Atlanta

By Jon Lafayette and Leslie Bayor

Joel Babbit, one of the "bad boys" of Atlanta advertising, is leaving as president of Babbit & Reiman to join Chiat/Day/Mojo as exec VP-general manager of its New York office.

Chiat has been looking for someone to run the unit since office President Bob Perkins left to join Pizza Hut in March. His departure forced Chiat North America Chairman-CEO Bob Wolf to run the office.

It's expected Mr. Wolf will stay in New York and pass some of his office responsibilities to Mr. Babbit. The post of president of the New York office will remain unfilled.

Mr. Babbit and Joey Reiman founded Babbit & Reiman in 1986 and sold the agency to Gold Greenlees Trott, London, for $2.3 million in 1988, when billings were $40 million.

Billings at the agency, known for its bragging, in-your-face style of advertising as well as for the creative awards it won, reached $50 million last year.

Mr. Babbit, 38, said the fact that he no longer owns the agency contributed to his decision to leave.

"I guess to some extent when we sold the agency we achieved a goal by building up an agency and selling it," he said. "Now I'm ready for a new challenge."

J. Babbit

Chiat was "the only agency that could have drawn me away," Mr. Babbit said. "I thought I'd be here for the rest of my life."

Mr. Babbit was replaced by Michael Gaffney, 52, general manager of the agency.

"I am comfortable about leaving since Mike Gaffney is taking over as president and the firm is in the best shape," Mr. Babbit said.

"Last year, we had some problems with the loss of the Trump Casino and FNN accounts," he continued. "But this year, we recently won several new accounts, including the $6 million GTE Mobile account, and had no losses. I know that things will continue to be successful since the management and clients are in place."

Mr. Reiman, the agency's chairman, said he's happy for his partner and optimistic about the future, adding, "The friendship will always be there. Joel had a unique opportunity, which I understand."

"I don't know what it means for Babbit & Reiman's future," said Austin Kelley, ceo of Austin Kelley Advertising, Atlanta. "Since Gaffney has been there, there might be a settling effect on the agency.

"However, maybe the controlled chaos was the secret of their success. Joel and Joey were like ham and eggs, or brothers. The divorce is a surprise."

"I'm shocked. I can't see Joel working for someone else, since he is an entrepreneur," said Jan Pringle, president of Pringle Dixon Pringle. □

Anticipating the breakthrough

All eyes on the third quarter for the turnaround, though some call '92 recovery 'puny, punky'

Media executives are wishing they could fast-forward to the third quarter of next year.

Economists and media executives alike are writing off the year's first half, but many are holding out hope that the economy—and ad spending—will turn around by midyear.

Because average media prices for the first quarter of next year were negotiated in the midst of the 1991 recession, the first half is not going to be strong, says Robert Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting for McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

His medium-by-medium predictions of unit cost and cost-per-thousand increases appear throughout this Special Report under the banner "Coen Watch."

But Mr. Coen predicts media price increases likely will make a comeback in the second half of 1992.

An improved economy will prompt a shift in supply and demand, he says, bringing prices up as demand tightens.

Some economists are not quite as sanguine about next year's potential.

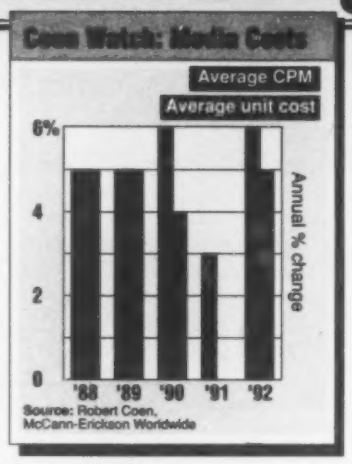
At a recent 1992 forecasting conference held by the Television Bureau of Advertising, Alan Sinai, exec VP-chief economist of Boston Co., predicted 1992 would see an economic recovery, but that it would be "puny, punky, crummy."

In contrast to previous economic recovery years, which saw the U.S. economy grow an average of almost 6.8%, the 1992 recovery will grow only 2%, Mr. Sinai says.

At that same conference, Mr. Coen predicted a more optimistic growth of 6% to 7%. He says 1992 ad spending should rise about two percentage points above that, forecasting an 8% to 9% growth rate in 1992.

"I don't think we even need a robust recovery, just an assurance that it's not getting any worse, and maybe it's getting better," Mr. Coen says.

He believes that by next summer, economic recovery will be visible, and that the Summer Olympic Games and political ad spending will fuel the fires of media price increases. In the fourth quarter, he predicts, price hikes should start to outpace general inflation rates.



Ed Atorino, VP-senior analyst of Salomon Bros., concurs with Mr. Coen's assessment of the economy, saying, "I'm a little cautious short-term, but I think we are going to see some mid-single-digit gain next year with a slope toward the second half and maybe some surprises down the road."

Alan Gottesman, a research analyst with PaineWebber, says should such a surprise in the form of an economic upturn come, it would probably kick in a dramatic uptick in national ad spending.

"It can swing back very fast, because the one thing marketers are afraid of is the competition," he says.

"The turn could come incredibly quickly; I just don't hear any signs of it coming," Mr. Gottesman says.

Potential roar turns into whisper

Even political, Olympics dollars won't pump up the volume at nets

By Joe Mandese

Can a quadrennial year overcome a double dip?

Advertising forecasters contemplating the impact a renewed economic recession would have on 1992 Olympic Games/political TV spending don't think so.

Indeed, for most, it's not merely a question of 1992 being the worst quadrennial TV spending year ever recorded, it's a question of how bad it will get.

If the national economy begins to recover as many expect, forecasters say 1992 TV ad spending will grow slightly over 1991 levels but still will be soft for a quadrennial year.

However, if a secondary recession follows the current one, they say TV ad spending would continue its current slide downward.

Even the normally bullish Television Bureau of Advertising is predicting fairly dour growth for TV ad spending in 1992.

Overall, TvB predicts TV ad revenues will grow 4% to 6% over 1991, with the biggest gains coming from cable TV, up 8% to 10%, and syndication, gaining 7% to 9%.

Network revenues are expected to rise only 4% to 6%, and spot TV and local TV are both expected to grow only 3% to 5%.

While this would signal an improvement over 1991 spending levels, which were down 4.9% through the first six months of the year, it is considerably inauspicious for a quadrennial year.

In the last quadrennial year of 1988, for example, TV ad volume rose 7.5%, according to TvB. That was the first quadrennial year since 1960 that didn't score double-digit increases.

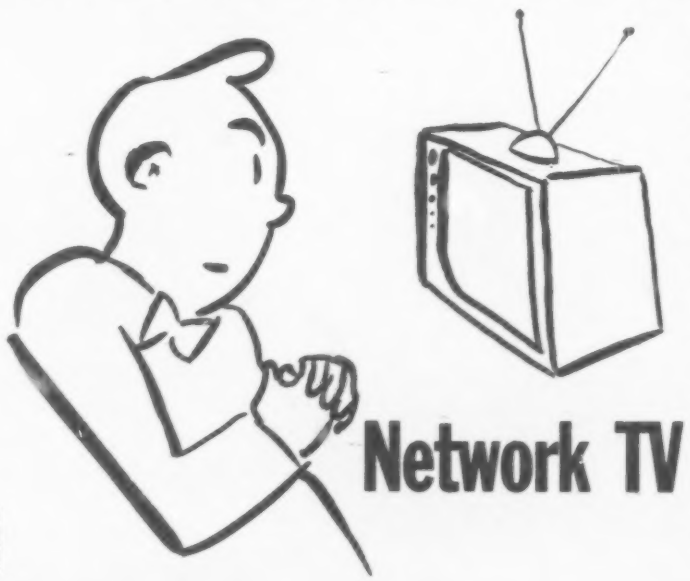
Moreover, 1992 will be the last true quadrennial year. Beginning in 1994, the Winter and Summer Olympics will alternate every two years, creating two moderate biennial Olympics/election years.

As for 1992, agency executives are less optimistic than even the TvB's relatively conservative estimates.

"Everyone is really guessing what the economy in 1992 will be, but we are much more conservative than everybody else," says Steve Farella, exec VP-media director of Young & Rubicam, New York. "We think the advertising business will have very soft growth in the range of 3% to 5%."

Mr. Farella says changes in the national economy are key to any improvement in TV ad spending.

"You can't just look at the media marketplace; you have to look at product sales and how comfortable people are with spending money. There still is not a sense of confidence in the marketplace," he says.



> "We're more conservative than everybody else about the economy in 1992."

Jay Schoenfeld, exec VP-media director of Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, concurs with that assessment, noting he has recently begun downgrading his agency's media spending estimates for 1992 based on new economic forecasts.

Originally, Backer had been predicting network TV would rise 5.6% to $11.3 billion and spot TV would grow 3.5% to $16.4 billion.

While he has not arrived at a revised number for 1992, Mr. Schoenfeld says, "I'm beginning to think we're a little high based on some of the buys we're seeing. I was more optimistic a few months ago."

Based on early TV ad spending, there is going to be a slow start to 1992. During the 1991-92 upfront buying season early last summer, the upfront pie for prime time shrunk nearly 20% to $3.5 billion.

Moreover, two of the Big 3 networks, CBS and NBC, sold a higher percentage of their annual inventory to attain that level. ABC sold less than it normally does, but all three networks discounted their prime-time prices in the upfront.

"There is an imbedded slow start on the network side of the business, just because of the upfront buying," says John Reidy, managing director and senior analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham.

With upfront sales for the 1991-92 season so poor, the networks' 1992 fortunes will depend largely on demand from advertisers for the remaining inventory in the scatter market.

That demand appears questionable. Although it's a quadrennial year, experts say the Big 3 TV networks will get little benefit from campaign spending by presidential candidates.

"In the national election, there is possibly less money available than was available four years ago," says David Garth, political consultant and president of the Garth Group.

He says President Bush's strong lead and the lack of a Democratic front-runner early in the race will lead to lower spending, as well as the fact that there is less matching campaign fund money available from the Federal Elections Commission.

TvB estimates appear to bear that out. Network TV spending by political can-

Snail's pace

Network price increases will be off to a slow start in 1992, but by yearend, prices should be considerably firmer.

In most upfront agreements negotiated in the midst of the current recession, prices were held in check or in some cases declined. These agreements will help to hold down the average increases through the first three quarters of 1992.

However, the exceptional bargains in scatter buys are likely to disappear as the economy picks up next year.

Network unit costs could rise about 4% with costs-per-thousand up 7%. Prime-time unit prices and CPMs are likely to be up slightly more than total network averages.

Net TV

didates in 1992 is expected to decline $30 million, down 22% from 1988 figures.

However, TvB predicts a better political spending picture for TV stations. Spot TV spending by political candidates will rise to $200 million, a 6% increase over 1988.

Meanwhile, the networks will not get the boost from Olympics-related spending that they normally get in a quadrennial year, because most Olympic ad funds come out of existing budgets vs. the incremental spending that normally helps tighten the marketplace in quadrennial years.

Industry sources estimate more than 50% of all Olympics ad spending will come out of existing budgets.

Moreover, Olympics advertisers are paying less than what the networks had originally been asking. Last summer CBS began discounting its Olympics rate by as much as 15% and added inventory to early advertisers' packages to compensate them for the difference.

It also has been reported that NBC discounted its Olympics rate.

With as much as 25% of its Olympics inventory remaining, buyers say CBS' strategy for selling the remainder of its time is key to the health of the first quarter of the 1992 network TV marketplace.

"The first quarter to me is the real wild card," says Steve Grubbs, senior VP-national broadcast buying at BBDO Worldwide, New York.

"It depends largely on what CBS does with its Olympics sales to move its remaining inventory," he adds.

"If it decides to go into deep discounting and pull dollars out of the scatter market, things could remain soft in the first quarter," he says.

"If it doesn't do that, then I believe the first quarter will be a little tighter."

However, Mr. Grubbs believes market conditions already are improving, and he predicts the second and third quarters will be "premium priced.

"If the economy turns around just a little bit, you could see some pretty significant premiums in those quarters," Mr. Grubbs says.

There already are encouraging signs, he adds, noting that fourth-quarter network budgets are beginning to "trickle in" from clients.

As recently as late September, some buyers were saying the fourth-quarter network TV marketplace appeared to be nudging out of its yearlong recession, with prime-time scatter prices rising over upfront for the first time since the fourth quarter of 1990.

"Prices are either the same as or higher than upfront rates, which is surprising people," says McCann-Erickson Worldwide Exec VP-Director of National Broadcast Joel Segal.

However, Mr. Segal says it is too early to tell if the demand will continue.

" 'Tightening' would be too strong a word, but things are not as soft as people thought they would be," he says.

"Prices are edging over the upfront," says Larry Hoffner, exec VP-network sales of NBC. "It's nothing significant, but we're in the month of September, which has always been a problem month, even in the best of years."

However, Mr. Hoffner is projecting healthier gains in October, November and December.

"I don't know that we'll ever see an acceleration, where pricing will jump by 30%," he says. "I think we're looking at a gradual, but steady, growth in the market."

But George Hayes, senior VP-director of McCann's Comcord Group and media director for its Nestle USA account, says even a slight improvement may be enough to loosen ad budgets.

"There are some indications that things are getting better. But a lot of this is psychological, so even a little trickle will fuel some optimism. And that will affect how people release budgets and spend their money," he says. □

Looking for a turnaround

The litany of bad news was no friend to spot TV in 1991. The recession, weak retail business, lack of political activity and the absence of product introductions reduced spot ad demand and prices.

As the economy improves in 1992, spot TV ad demand should turn around and prices should gradually firm up.

Overall spot TV rates are expected to be up 5% to 7% in most markets. Costs per thousand also will go up as audience shares per TV station become more diluted.

SPEAKING WITH AUTHORITY

Traditional quadrennial boom more of a 'blip' this time

Jerry Dominus, senior VP-director of national TV & programming, J. Walter Thompson Co., New York

"I don't think we're going to see a bump [in advertising]. I think we'll see a modest blip.

"Presidential elections, particularly this one, which is likely to be a 'semi-foregone' conclusion, generally don't pump a lot of money into the medium.

"American industry doesn't seem to be buying the bit [that] a new campaign will be good for business in general. There's still a lot of caution out there.

"Much of the Olympics spending will be a cannibalization of money that would otherwise have been spent in business-as-usual efforts. There aren't any significant one-time-only appropriations coming to build up [ad] coffers.

"I don't think it will be back to business-as-usual, the traditional four-year boom. Not this time."

George Mahrlig, director of media services, Campbell Soup Co., Camden, N.J.

"The [Olympics and presidental election] will have some impact; it's a question of degree. Their impact is simply how they are felt in the equation of supply and demand.

"In the past, going back two or three Olympics, the major sponsors had separate budgets, incremental funds that they used, so their media budgets went up those years to participate in the Olympics. But the number of advertisers with incremental budgets has declined.

"More and more of the Olympic spending is being taken from that quarter's national television budget. This year it's interesting that the networks have still not sold out the Olympics.

"It would appear the amount of incremental dollars are at their lowest. And the base from which they're working on a supply side, there's somewhat more supply because the market's not been as strong.

"The national elections are always incremental dollars because [politicians] don't advertise otherwise. So that will have an impact, but here again the degree of impact is dependent upon where the supply side is starting from. In an already tight market it will have an exaggerated effect.

"It can take a soft market and tighten it up considerably. So as the market begins to recover somewhat in the second and third quarters, when election commercials begin to go on the air, it could either represent the recovery or tighten up the market significantly."

Peter Chrisanthopoulos, president, Network Television Association, New York

"1992 has several forces working for it. First of all, the recession will be completely over in 1992.

"Second, the effects of the war on slowing business decisions will be way behind us.

"Third, the Olympic and election years both tend to boost spending on network TV overall.

"And it's also the 500th anniversary of Columbus' discovering America and that is yet another promotion, another opportunity that clients will focus on and take advantage of and also boost spending in media.

"Once it begins, I think the momentum will really carry through and it will be at a much faster pace; we will see the results much faster. Advertisers were cautious in 1991 and we forecast they will be more aggressive in their expenditures in 1992."

"The Adventures of Mark & Brian" sends a fuzzy signal to Saatchi & Saatchi.

Network TV: Hot

On the rebound: With a strong prime-time ratings gain last season and an impressive start to this season, CBS is the network on the come. The network's baseball playoffs, World Series, Winter Olympics and Super Bowl give agency executives reason to expect CBS' upward momentum to continue. A new "advertiser-friendly" and pragmatic sales strategy has agency media buyers feeling high about the network, too.

Executive strength: CBS Entertainment President Jeff Sagansky and Senior VP-Program Planning Peter Tortorici appear to be engineering the greatest prime-time comeback story since NBC shifted from third to first place in the mid-1980s. A former NBC Entertainment executive during that period, Mr. Sagansky now is working that magic for CBS.

Royal treatment: Based on the proven track record of series star Redd Foxx, agency executives predict CBS' "Royal Family" will be a success.

Hospitality: Some agency executives predict NBC's "Nurses," a comedy about five hospital nurses, will be the biggest hit of any new series this season. The show debuted to high ratings.

Teen torpor: Billed by agency executives as "teensomething," Fox's "Beverly Hills 90210" drama about teen-age angst features plenty of emerging heartthrobs and heartthrobettes. A heavy summer promotional effort by Fox's publicity team landed the cast on seemingly every consumer magazine cover, as well as much of the TV talk-show circuit.

Hoop heaven: With bigger-than-life personalities like Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson, Larry Bird and Isiah Thomas, the National Basketball Association has emerged as one of the few success stories in network sports programming. Audience ratings are healthy and agency executives expect ad units to sell out for this season's coverage.

Love in the afternoon: After five years of downward momentum, daytime sales have skyrocketed during the 1991-92 upfront and scatter markets. While daytime ratings declined 6% last season, daytime has become one of the most efficient ways of reaching viewers. Daytime CPMs currently average about $3.50 vs. about $8.50 for prime time.

Network clutter—a heated issue: A recent joint study from the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers demonstrates the networks continue to add commercial and other forms of non-programming time to their schedules in all dayparts. The ad industry has adopted the view that such expansion violates ad contracts, which are negotiated based on an assumption of commercial loads and a minimum length of program time.

Top of mind: The financial interest and syndication rules, which limit the Big 3 TV networks' ability to own and sell TV shows, are being challenged on all sides. The FCC is expected to reconsider its position soon, but the issue ultimately is expected to end up in court.

Network TV: Cold

Downwardly mobile network: With a 13% prime-time ratings loss last season and mixed results early this season, NBC's prime-time fortunes appear to have reversed themselves. Though the network still has some of the most coveted shows on prime time, many of those series are aging, and agency executives question whether the new shows will click with viewers. NBC also has taken big losses in daytime, early morning, Saturday morning and late night.

No one's home: Who would have thought a TV series about the assimilation of World War II veterans and their families in a Midwestern city during the 1940s would appeal to post-Persian Gulf War TV audiences of the 1990s? Not ad agency media executives. Despite a strong lead-in from ABC's hit "Coach," "Homefront" got low audience share projections from agency forecasters.

Post script: A new season report from McCann-Erickson describes CBS' "P.S. I Luv U" as "ordinary." The report also predicts the series has "dim prospects" for success. The show is about a New York cop and a government informant who pose as husband and wife in the witness protection program.

NBC tune out: "Will anyone who doesn't know who Mark and Brian are tune in to find how funny they can be?" asks Saatchi & Saatchi in its new season report. Apparently not. The agency described its chances as somewhere between a "maybe" and a "long shot."

Ultimately a flop: Fox's action/reality series "The Ultimate Challenge" may be aptly named. Predicts McCann-Erickson: "This show's appeal will be primarily men and boys who like watching bungee jumping off the Empire State Building, paraponting or, most enlightening of all, monster truck tractor pulling."

Strike three: Although World Series ratings rose 27% last fall, audience levels for the Major League Baseball playoffs fell 7%. With small-market baseball teams playing in this fall's games, agency executives predict MLB ratings may suffer, as well as CBS' sales efforts.

Too late: After several years of rapidly escalating demand, late night has gotten too expensive for many advertisers. At an average CPM of about $6.50, late night's expense is second only to prime time and some sports. Maybe Johnny chose the right time to leave.

15-second spots: Although clutter is on the rise, it's not coming from more short-form commercials. While :15s rose as a percentage of total commercial volume throughout the 1980s, they began to wane in 1991.

Cooling off: The prime-time access rule, which requires network affiliates to air non-network programming in the time period preceding prime time, is no longer considered a front-burner issue. Instead, the Big 3 networks currently are talking about the possibility of reducing their prime-time hours, not expanding them.

The MTV logo is proving to be a popular label in cross-media deals.

Cable TV: Hot

Tailor made: Cable networks are investing more dollars on producing original programming, resulting in higher-quality shows, series, specials and movies. Some of the noteworthy include: Discovery Channel's "People of the Forest: The Chimps of Gombe," Arts & Entertainment Network's "First Flights" and USA Network's "USA's Gonzo Games."

Crossing the line: Cable networks have entered into the cross-media arena in a big way. Leading the pack are Cable News Network, which has joined forces with USA Today; MTV and Newsweek; and USA Network and its partnership with McCall's.

All for one! Programming and production partnerships between cable and broadcast networks are increasing. Two recent examples: NBC aired a show called "Hi, Honey, I'm Home" produced by Nick at Nite. CBS and USA Network again shared coverage of the U.S. Open Tennis Tournament.

Hitting the target: Narrowly targeted networks such as Lifetime, Discovery and Family Channel should fare best as marketers look to pinpoint potential audiences.

High-tech talk: Technology such as video compression that will allow for increased channel capacity is a hot topic, but it's far from becoming reality.

Capitol issue: Cable reregulation issues will heat up again in 1992 as broadcast networks increase lobbying efforts against cable.

Rave reviews: CNN proved to be a major force in TV news with acclaimed coverage of the Persian Gulf War. Ratings soared during CNN's war coverage and again during the attempted coup in the Soviet Union.

Cable TV: Cold

Despite the war: CNN failed to convert its ratings blips during the Persian Gulf War and Soviet coup into permanent increases. Buyers say it lost a golden opportunity to build on its momentum.

Striking out: ESPN continues to lose a bundle on big-name sporting events for which the network paid big bucks.

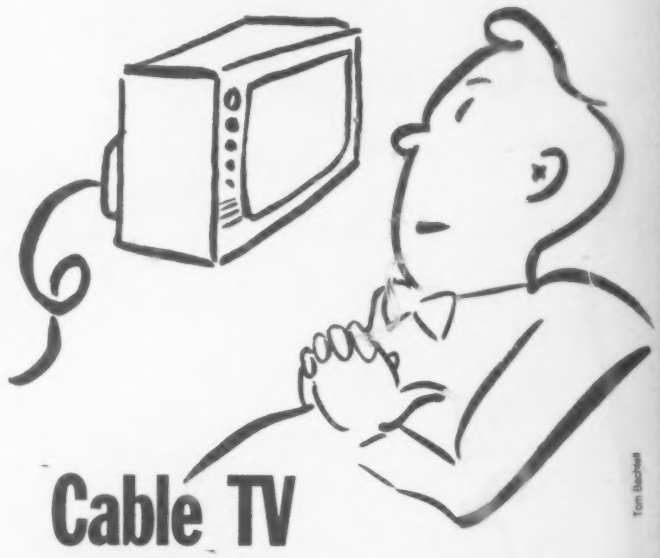
Double trouble: Double-digit cost-per-thousand increases are history, at least for a while, say buyers and cable executives who cite a "marketplace correction" in CPM gains.

The national pastime is putting a strain on the bottom line for ESPN.

Right place, right time

But days of 20% are gone, requiring some adjustments

By Alison Fahey



Unlike most other media executives, cable leaders are optimistic for 1992.

The cable TV industry is going to experience strong growth in 1992, but at a slower pace than in past years, insiders predict.

After becoming accustomed to years of record-breaking ad revenue increases, which in some years exploded by 20%, cable networks in 1991 got a dose of reality as recession-wary marketers played it close to the vest.

At the same time, the embattled broadcast networks wooed advertisers with steep discounts on costs per thousand, particularly during the upfront selling season.

Looking ahead to 1992, cable sales executives are guardedly optimistic about ad revenue growth, mostly because an economic turnaround isn't expected until midyear.

"In general, I don't think anyone is projecting the growth rate in national ad spending for 1992 that there was in 1991 or 1990. There's a more cautious approach," says Joe Uva, exec VP-CNN Sales.

"Ad spending [recovery] lags economic recovery somewhat, but I do believe the market will be stronger throughout 1992 than it is in the second half of 1991," he says.

Overall, Mr. Uva predicts a "fairly strong" 1992 for the cable industry.

More cautious is John Silvestri, exec VP, USA Network. "I think 1992 will be a little better than 1991—not much," he says.

Still, cable networks should reap double-digit ad revenue growth, again outpacing their broadcast counterparts.

"Cable is still very well positioned for growth," says Erica Gruen, associate director of new media and TV information, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York, who notes that narrowly targeted cable networks probably will fare best.

"It will continue to benefit from the fact that it's still a cost-efficient medium and also because advertisers' dollars tend to flow where the audience is, and cable viewership and penetration continue to grow."

Mr. Silvestri predicts cable ad spending in 1992 will grow about 10% to 12%, compared with 12% to 14% gains projected for 1991.

"The cable industry is going to continue to grow significantly faster than the rest of the TV industry," predicts Bill McGowan, senior VP-ad sales, Discovery Channel.

The Television Bureau of Advertising, in a September report forecasting 1992 TV revenue gains, put cable at the top of the list, growing 8% to 10%.

That compares with 3% to 5% revenue gains for both local and spot TV; 4% to 6% increases for network TV; and 7% to 9% hikes for syndicated TV.

Overall, cable revenues will outpace total TV revenues, which TvB predicts to grow 4% to 6%.

Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau is even more optimistic about the industry's 1992 outlook, even though its forecast shows a slowdown in growth.

It predicts total cable ad revenues will rise 17% to about $3.6 billion in 1992. In 1991, CAB projects total ad revenues will grow 19.1% to $3 billion.

John Barbera, president of Turner Broadcasting Sales, says Turner is looking for 11% ad revenue growth for the industry in 1992, compared with 13% for 1991.

"The total advertising industry won't be growing as fast as last

SPEAKING WITH AUTHORITY

Too much inventory to make much of a dent

P. Isacsson

D. McCormick

Paul Isacsson, exec VP-director of broadcast programming and purchasing, Young & Rubicam, New York

"I can't recall, since I've been in the business, an Olympics-election year where we haven't had a strong national economy, which generally leads to a strong television economy.

"But I think [the quadrennial year] will not be as impactful as it has been in the past, because since 1988, there's a lot more inventory out there.

"In terms of the Olympics, clients are able to plan better to avoid being caught in the higher-priced periods.

"I do think the national TV market will be stronger; we're starting to see some money come into the market now for fourth-quarter.

"But I don't think the Olympics will have much impact on cable advertising network sales; we're looking at only a 5% to 6% increase next year.

"Cable might benefit from coverage of the presidential election because the conventions or primaries might not be on to any great extent [on network TV].

"This year you may see a continued shift in cable covering things like the national elections, which require a great deal of airtime. I know CNN has plans to do a half-hour a night on the election process starting in January.

"Local candidates may be able to target better, spend their dollars more efficiently on cable, because they can buy a ward or an individual borough.

"There could be a shift in how local political advertising money is spent."

Doug McCormick, exec VP, Lifetime Television, Astoria, N.Y.

"Some of the dollars that went into [previous] Olympics are under a lot more scrutiny now.

"There's probably pressure on the networks to go ahead and attack normal advertising dollars to fill up the Olympics.

"To the extent that that contributed to a less-than-robust sports package, I think the economy took some normal upfront dollars and put them into the Olympics.

"In this environment, dollars were put into the Olympics on a guaranteed basis. And to the extent that the Olympics are guaranteed that puts pressure on the networks doing the guarantees, and it will serve to tighten up the marketplace.

"If the Olympics underdeliver, future time periods will not be available for sale. We have seen some advertisers that are sponsors of the Olympics craft certain specialty packages that herald their participation in the Olympics.

"They've taken those messages beyond the individual networks that carry Olympics. An investment in the Olympic rings is no small commitment, so you want to make sure you're letting people know as many times as possible that you're a supporter of the Olympics.

"If this election stays the way it is, I don't expect there to be as much of an uptick than if it was a contested race.

"Those budgets have a habit of materializing at the last minute. If one were to draw the curve right now, yes there would be an uptick but not the kind of uptick if there were a slugfest. It's more like a lackluster Super Bowl right now.

"There is a fair amount of money that comes in from [political action committees] and to the extent that women's rights and women's issues are important in elections, I think you'll see that category heat up.

Local advertising on a system-by-system basis has been one of the most effective means for political advertisers. They love cable because they can go right into their districts.

"If I'm a local cable seller with a hotly contested race, I'm going to reap a bonanza in the upcoming race."

Jim Desrosier, VP-advertising, MasterCard International, New York

"From our standpoint, if you're a major TV advertiser, you can't be on the tube and just depend on the networks. You have to be in cable.

"If you anticipate the need for that in your plans, as we have, you're going to buy that anyway. [The elections and Olympics] are not going to change your demand for it.

"What it may do is force you to go upfront rather than buying scatter. It's the only way to make sure you have the priority in programming and networks you want.

"It's possible that for those people who are trying to go scatter, that if the Democrats get their act together on a fund-raising level, if the Republicans decide they have to spend heavily to establish credibility on the domestic agenda, you may see some increase in demand on quarterly pricing basis for scatter.

"And [that increase in spending will likely go to] the top six networks like USA, CNN and A&E and Turner, those networks that have fairly well-defined audiences with a high composition of people in a position to influence an election.

"There may be no impact, not until the second half of the year. Then there may be tighter inventory.

"But you'd have to see some heat come on and I haven't seen anything yet.

"The Olympics, I just don't see it. The networks are having trouble selling off the inventory, so right now I don't see any impact on cable."

Magazines

Flat, but at least crisis is averted

'People on the ad side have gotten used to getting by with less'

By Scott Donaton

With apologies to Yogi Berra, it will be deja vu all over again for the magazine industry in 1992.

Publishers and media buyers say it would be hard for the ad climate to deteriorate any further in 1992, but they're not expecting a strong recovery, either.

Most predicted a weak first half, a stronger second half and a flat finish for the year compared with 1991.

Ad pages for this year will likely be down 10% or more compared with 1990 figures, which were down 3.7% from 1989.

"My sense is more of the same, unfortunately," says James Berrien, senior VP-group publisher, American Express Publishing Corp. "There aren't going to be any big reasons for people to spend a lot more. I think people on the advertising side have gotten used to getting by with less."

But, he adds, "I don't see that it could possibly be worse."

"If magazines can finish 1992 even, I think they're in good shape," says Roberta Garfinkle, VP-director of print media for McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York. "They're just going to have to fight harder to maintain their share."

Industry observers say they expect to see continued consolidation as more marginal properties are folded or sold.

"We're probably going to see the demise of some additional small titles and small publishing companies, simply because they're not going to be able to compete in the merchandising and value-added arenas," says Ms. Garfinkle.

"I'm still waiting for one of the big ones to fall," says Jack Kliger, publisher of Conde Nast Publica-year," he says.

Most cable sales executives are counting on the second half of 1992 to salvage the year's spending levels.

"I think the whole year will be slightly better than 1991, starting with the second quarter," says Angela Pumo, senior VP, NBC Cable Sales.

"With the economy getting stronger, maybe advertisers will start reinvesting. There'll be more dollars coming into the marketplace."

Some expect incremental dollars from Olympic Games and election spending, although not as much as in past quadrennial years.

"As far as election and Olympics and their impact on next year's advertising investments, I think the Olympic and election years always bring more dollars into the marketplace because they are two important programming franchises," says Mr. Uva.

In terms of costs per thousand for 1992, most cable sales executives hope to leave the flat to slightly higher CPMs of this year's cable upfront behind them.

Cable networks in 1990 reported record upfront sales of $750 million, about a 40% increase over 1990.

But this year, when the economy stalled and ad spending followed suit, cable networks were facing the same distressed selling conditions as their broadcast counterparts.

"I think the broadcast networks were in a position to [offer] such significantly reduced CPMs that it inhibited the cable networks from raising their CPMs as quickly as they could have," says Mr. McGowan.

"We're negatively impacted by the over-the-air broadcast networks' softness," he says.

That led to flat CPMs or low single-digit increases, in many cases, which resulted in a flat upfront selling season.

Still, several cable sales executives were grateful upfront didn't turn out worse.

"The bargain basement deals that have been out there during this year's upfront will no longer be out there once we get into 1992," Mr. McGowan says. □

The happy medium

Cable TV has more to look forward to than most other media industries.

As audience shares continue to expand and ratings increase, cable networks have been able to raise unit prices while holding the line on costs per thousand viewers, which improves their competitive pricing positions.

In 1992, average unit prices for all cable networks are expected to go up about 7% while cable TV CPMs should remain nearly unchanged.

'Sports Illustrated' optimistic, but few believe elections, Olympics will have an impact on magazines

D. Hobbs

A. Saralegui

A. Linderman

Dick Hobbs, senior VP-media services, Leo Burnett Co., Chicago

"My feeling is that it [the quadrennial year] has no effect. And the reason I think it has no effect is that one uses magazines for a different reason than one uses television.

"The Olympics and the elections have some effect on the way television is distributed client-by-client, but I don't believe it has any effect on the way magazine dollars are planned and/or spent.

"I think the potential increase in 1992 is almost completely related to whether the economy turns around and not the Olympics or the elections.

"I think we're looking at a year when the Olympics that used to, way back, turn up some additional advertising dollars from client-to-client and as slowly over time become replacement dollars, probably in 1992 and maybe forever, will be replacement dollars."

Alvero Saralegui, advertising director, Sports Illustrated

"Traditionally [advertisers] do get excited about the Olympics, and I'm optimistic they will again. I think there's more money being spent in print than in the past.

"For instance, in our Pathways issues leading up to our preview issue, we will sell roughly two and a half times more [advertising] than we did in 1988 when the Games were in North America.

"It's a very strong showing by the Olympics sponsors. A part of it is these sponsors signed up much earlier in the quadrennium than in the past.

"And with the changeover to the Olympics to every two years instead of every four years, it becomes every other year you're doing an Olympics.

"With the format change coming, they wanted to get the '92 Games wrapped up as soon as possible, and the International Olympic Committee signed up all the sponsors, including ourselves, much earlier than they have in the past.

"I think [the 2-year format] has led to people deciding [Olympic sponsorships] are a depreciable asset.

"As soon as the Olympics are over, you have to sign a new sponsorship agreement.

"As long as you've committed to the Games early on, you might as well use the positive rub-off of the rings earlier on in the quadrennium. We've already had a lot of advertisers doing that, starting earlier."

Allan Linderman, VP-advertising services, Alberto-Culver Co., Melrose Park, Ill.

"I don't think [elections and Olympics] are going to have an impact on magazines.

"There are some special opportunities that may come up from a pricing standpoint.

"But neither of those two events will have much impact on the magazine industry.

"Things inventory-wise are beginning to tighten up but I don't think 1992 is going to turn into a seller's market."

Coen Watch: Magazines

Hard work, no play

The struggle continues.

To offset hefty postal rate increases and other operating costs, many magazines are announcing much higher ad rates for 1992.

But magazine rate cards no longer are a completely accurate means of measuring how much more marketers will pay for their schedules in an upcoming year.

The current sluggish state of ad demand and the growing availability of special purchase arrangements will water down the announced increases.

But by mid-1992, real prices should be on the upturn.

For the year as a whole, page rates will probably be up around 5% while costs per thousand grow 7%.

'Limp-wristed recovery at best'

Experts say newspapers caught in evolutionary downward spiral

By Christy Fisher

Maybe next year. That's all the newspaper industry can hope.

Caught in its worst cyclical downturn in 20 years, newspapers had hoped for signs of a recovery in 1991. But instead, the industry is likely to post its second consecutive down year—the first time in 40 years it has taken a double dip.

"Everybody keeps telescoping out," says Kenneth Berents, an analyst with Alex. Brown & Sons, which does a quarterly outlook survey of newspaper executives. "Now, they're pointing to the second quarter of 1992 before they expect a pickup. When it does pick up, it looks like it will be a limp-wristed recovery at best."

According to Mr. Berents' survey of newspaper executives, retail ad revenue should be off 4.6% for 1991, classified will be down 5.3% for the year and national ads will decrease 3.9%.

He expects the industry to post increases in the low single digits in 1992.

Newspaper Advertising Bureau is looking for the industry to post a 2% ad revenue gain in 1992, fueled by improvements in the economy. The increase, modest on its own, still is a stark improvement over the 3% to 4% decline expected for 1991, says Len Forman, ad bureau president.

The industry reported ad revenues of $32.2 billion in 1990, down 0.3% from the previous year.

While many believe the industry is stuck in a temporary cyclical trough, other newspaper insiders say the medium is on a slow evolutionary downward spiral, as Mr. Berents suggests.

Either way, newspaper executives aren't wasting time debating the issue. They recognize the industry has problems deeper than the current recession.

"Pain helps you focus," says Cathleen Black, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. "The pain of the last couple years certainly has publishers, editors, ad directors and classified managers exploring every possible nuance to making their product as timely and relevant as possible. . . . The newspapers of the '90s are going to be different."

Faced with stagnant circulation and declining readership, newspapers are paying more attention to the baby-boom generation, which largely has shunned the medium.

Tom Bachtell

Chains such as Knight-Ridder Newspapers and Gannett Co. are overhauling their editorial products to make them more lively, useful and readable.

"Of the potential pool of 24 million baby boomers age 30 and older in the 1980s, only 500,000 have become newspaper subscribers," Mr. Berents says. "Newspapers have to change to bring in the baby-boom generation."

Newspaper advertising executives, who have been accused of arrogance by advertisers and their agencies, also have developed a more consumer-friendly attitude, and for good reason. Newspapers' dominant ad-medium market position has been slipping over much of the past decade as advertisers jump to more targeted media vehicles such as direct mail and cable TV.

Newspapers had a 25.1% market share of U.S. advertising dollars in 1990, for example, down from a 27.6% share in 1980, according to NAB.

As Ms. Black says, "It's no longer 'This is what we have and this is what you have to buy.' "

Mr. Forman adds, "One positive aspect of this two-year period of falling revenue is new product innovations are real hot."

Newspapers are forming alliances to facilitate national or regional buys for advertisers and their agencies. National newspaper networks, such as Newspapers First, are working on one-order, one-bill capabilities. Regional networks also have been set up in such states as Florida, Iowa and New Jersey.

Newspapers also are making available to advertisers more detailed demographic information on their readers and developing more targeted vehicles for specific segments, such as zoned editions, special sections and stand-alone magazines on special-interest topics.

> "We may look back on the '80s and realize that they were the golden period of newspapers."

Newspapers are paying more attention to their competitors and developing new products. Many papers are accelerating the development of audiotex services now that the telephone companies have been given permission to compete in this arena.

In August, the Kansas City Star

tions' Glamour. "There's still a lot of debt factored into the way these magazines are operating."

The swell in multimagazine and cross-media deals will intensify, with Time Warner, Hearst Corp. and Meredith Corp. leading the charge, magazine executives say.

There also will be an explosion in strategic alliances between small and midsize publishers as they strive to compete with media giants. "I think you're going to see an increase in packaging," says S. Christopher Meigher, president of Time Inc. Magazine Co.'s New York-based magazines.

Publishers are working harder than ever to prove magazine ads move product. Many are offering more added-value and cross-media deals, and are making use of technologies such as ink-jet imaging and selective binding.

"What's going to happen is advertisers are going to continue to look for more accountability and a clearer path to sales," says Mr. Berrien. "Magazines that can help them ring the cash register are going to see growth next year."

"The more we can bring the consumer closer to the point of purchase, the more effective a marketing program is going to be," agrees Steve Goldberg, president of the publishing division of Touch Tone Access, which creates interactive marketing programs for magazines.

On the circulation front, more magazines are likely to scale back rate bases as they raise cover prices and eliminate marginal subscriptions.

Magazines are not expected to get much of an ad page lift from the Olympics and elections next year.

John Suhler, president of investment banker Veronis, Suhler & Associates, says, "The quadrennial is a top-down phenomenon."

Normally, network TV inventory tightens and rates rise during an Olympics/election year, pushing more advertisers into spot TV. As that market tightens and rates rise, advertisers spill over into other national media, including magazines.

Because network TV is not expected to get a major boost from the quadrennial, magazines will not feel any spillover.

A handful of publishers have a more optimistic view of 1992.

Michael Perlis, publisher of Playboy—which has posted strong ad page gains this year—says he expects to continue on a growth path next year, although he admits the market is weak.

"The fourth quarter is really tough. We're working hard for every dollar," he says. "I think it's going to continue to be tough in the first quarter from an ad sales standpoint. But beyond the first quarter, we see marketers getting more ambitious and enthusiastic."

In a sign of how troubling the downturn has become, even those who consider themselves optimistic have a fairly sobering outlook.

"I don't see people increasing budgets much, but I don't see them slashing them any more either," says Mr. Kliger. "I'm predicting a flat year, which would be a victory."

Media buyers say a glum view is probably warranted.

"We don't see budgets increasing dramatically," says Peg Ianacone, manager of print media for Grey Advertising. "It's probably not going to turn around in the first half. I don't know about later in the year.

"The magazine business is going to be as much of a struggle in 1992 as it was this year." □

The other revenue stream: As ad revenues continue to fall, the importance of circulation becomes clearer. Family Media's heavy use of discounts to woo subscribers played a critical role in the publisher's collapse. Look for publishers to continue to pay more attention and less lip service to circulation. As a result, more rate-base reductions are likely.

We are family: Parenting and family oriented magazines will continue to thrive along with the current mini-baby boom and the return, real or perceived, of so-called traditional values. Two new entrants in the field, FamilyFun and Ladies' Home Journal's Parent's Digest both got off to strong starts this year, and both will be pushed more aggressively in 1992.

In this corner: The argument over whether mass-market magazines have a future continues, but the recession has made it clear special-interest magazines have an edge in the age of target marketing. The short list of magazines that have seen ad page increases this year is dominated by such titles as Muscle & Fitness, Outside, Popular Photography and Runner's World.

FamilyFun (above) is off to a fast start while National Lampoon remains hung up on panty raids.

Jack's knack: How hot is Glamour Publisher Jack Kliger? At a time when Conde Nast is playing musical chairs with many of its publishers, the company engaged in a public tug-of-war with Hearst Corp. over Mr. Kliger. Conde Nast won, but Mr. Kliger, whose future at the publishing company seems quite bright, was the real victor.

Where in the heck is Emmaus, Pa.? Rodale Press' hometown will become a household name in magazine publishing in the 1990s. The publisher is perfectly positioned for the coming decade, with strong managers, virtually no debt and magazines that focus on such hot topics as health, fitness and the environment.

The cable connection: If cross-media deals in general are hot, packages linking magazines and cable TV are sizzling. Both are narrowly targeted, flexible media with similar pricing structures and already share many of the same advertisers.

Magazines: Cold

Disconnect the (sneaker)

launched StarTouch, a phone-based feature that allows the newspaper to provide updates on breaking stories. For example, the Star included a telephone number on a recent story on a possible takeover of a local company. Readers could call the StarTouch phone number if they wanted updates later in the day. The paper plans to use the service to update election results as well.

The Star also uses StarTouch to enhance feature articles, as it did for a story on Chicago White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell and his band, View. Readers could call the StarTouch number to hear the band.

The service will be used for advertising later this year, primarily to enhance direct-response efforts.

To better compete against direct mail, the newspaper industry has developed Newspac, which allows liquid or powder product samples to be inserted in newspapers without spilling or breaking. The first test of Newspac is expected in October in the Chicago Tribune and Milwaukee Journal.

But even with these changes, it is unclear whether newspapers will ever see the spectacular growth of the 1980s again.

"We may look back on the '80s and realize that they were the golden period of newspapers," Mr. Berents says.

One of biggest problems newspapers face is their largest ad category also is undergoing great stress and evolution.

The retail industry, which con-

phone: Despite taking a harder look at circulation quality, publishers likely will continue to use discounts and editorial-related premiums (i.e., special issues, newsletters, etc.). But the smart ones will abandon the use of gimmicky, non-editorial premiums such as sneaker phones and clock radios.

My other car is a Volkswagen: Conspicuous consumption is out and magazines targeting the noisily affluent will be out as well unless they tone down their focus to reflect the quieter affluence of the '90s. Look no further than Town & Country, where ad pages declined 35% through August.

Loves music, loves to dance: Smaller publishers are going to be taking out personal ads soon, as they search out strategic partners in the age of multi-magazine and cross-media deals. Those who think they can still go it alone may be in for an unpleasant surprise.

Why buy? Cautious buyers, a shortage of sellers, unrealistic asking prices and a weak outlook for magazines have conspired to virtually halt the sales and acquisition market. More publishers are likely to look to launches for future expansion. And more would-be sellers may be forced to shut down operations for lack of a buyer.

Quit fooling around: National Lampoon has changed hands several times in the last two years and each set of new owners has promised to drop the sophomoric gags and return the magazine to the cutting edge of sophisticated humor. New owners J2 Communications seemed genuine in their promise but the October issue, with a cover story on panty raids, shows some things never change.

Local political advertising may plug some leaks

D. Zinda

Jack Cohen, VP-director of print media buying, DDB Needham, New York

"Normally, in an Olympics and presidential year, you do have an increase in newspaper spending. I would like to think that would be the case in 1992.

"It just might happen a little bit later this time because clients seem to be making decisions later, and it may not be as dramatic a bump as it has been in the past."

Scott Bedbury, director of advertising, Nike

"During the election period, the battles become furious and the amount of time needed [for political ads] forces prices up for either print or TV. That is fairly temporal.

"The only urgency that I've detected is if someone wants an outdoor board in Atlanta in 1996, they may have already missed the boat.

"There's been little emphasis on the Olympics [next year]."

Diana Mather Zinda, senior VP-advertising and marketing, The Baltimore (Md.) Sun

"While newspaper ad revenues for the first half of 1991 were down 7% and some of The Baltimore Sun's key categories have remained very soft, we remain optimistic about marketing opportunities in 1992.

"Historically, events such as the Olympics and the elections attract high reader interest and present newspapers with the opportunity to be innovative in capturing increased market share.

"In addition to meeting the traditional needs of newspaper advertisers, we'll continue to develop new approaches for clients to capitalize on events at the national, regional and local levels.

"It will be a difficult year. Generally, we expect no huge changes.

"However, with continued tenacity toward creative marketing, developing sponsorships, special value-added programs and partnership packages—on both the local and national levels—we clearly recognize and plan to meet the challenges and the opportunities ahead."

In the black: Hired in June because she knows her way around Madison Avenue, ANPA President Cathleen Black has given the industry the high-profile boost it needs to show advertisers and agencies newspapers are serious about reinventing how they go to market. She also scored points among colleagues in July with her first lobbying effort before Congress, urging it to keep the regional telephone operating companies out of information services.

Cathleen Black's congressional lobbying effort was a hit with colleagues; Newspac takes the spill out of product samples.

Reaching out: Newspapers are finally getting serious in their quest to attract baby boomers, who have shunned the medium in favor of TV. Knight-Ridder is expanding elements of its Boca Raton (Fla.) News experiment to its other 28 newspapers. Gannett Co. has implemented a plan called News 2000, which calls for the rethinking and possible redesign of all 86 of its newspapers except USA Today. The future is likely to hold more color, shorter stories and bold graphics for these newspapers.

Creative networking: Newspapers are starting to catch up with direct mail and cable TV in grabbing their fair share of ad dollars for target-marketed products. New ad vehicles like Newspac, which allows product samples to be inserted in newspapers without breaking or spilling, are an encouraging sign.

Promoting readership: Similar innovations are being used to attract subscribers. Frequent-reader promotions have sprung up in several markets including Hartford, Conn.; Richmond, Va.; Reno, Nev.; and Tucson, Ariz. These have a double payoff: Readers who buy a paid-in-advance subscription get a discount at companies that advertise in the newspaper.

Partnerships: USA Today and Turner Broadcasting System are teaming up for a cross-media deal, the likes of which could propel newspapers out of the doldrums.

The two are producing a sports show called "College Coaches Corner," a weekly poll of the top 25 football coaches. Results appear in the national daily, and the companies are selling a joint ad package. And this is only the beginning. USA Today and CNN are discussing other cross-media and cross-promotional packages for the future.

Newspapers: Cold

Two-timers: The recession is likely to take its toll on two-newspaper towns, especially in markets where a common owner puts out a competing morning and evening edition. In 1992, newspapers in San Diego and Richmond, Va., will consolidate operations, though San Diego will continue to publish a morning and evening edition. Morning and evening papers were merged this year in Portland, Maine; Asheville and Durham, N.C.; and Newport News, Va. Papers have been or will be shuttered this year in Baton Rouge and Shreveport, La.; Lawton, Okla.; Manchester, Conn.; Roanoke, Va.; and Union City, N.J.

Cold shoulder: There's a run on pink slips as newspapers consolidate operations and suspend publications. Layoffs were announced at the Atlanta Journal & Constitution; Asbury Park (N.J.) Press; The Boston Globe; Dow Jones & Co.; The New York Times; and The Miami Herald, to name just a few.

tributes more than 50% of newspapers' ad revenues, shows little sign of recovery any time soon. Overleveraged department store retailers, an advertising mainstay for big-city dailies, have trimmed ad budgets as they struggle to pay down debt, says Kevin Gruneich, an analyst with First Boston Corp.

> "Newspapers have to change to bring in the baby-boom generation."

Changes in consumer buying habits away from traditional department store retailers and toward specialty retailers, which do little newspaper advertising, also have hurt the industry, he says.

The trend toward image campaigns over price-item advertising has been a problem for newspapers as well, Mr. Gruneich adds. It doesn't help that several of the retail industry's success stories—Wal-Mart Stores, Nordstrom and The Limited—are not heavy newspaper advertisers.

"Those dollars may be lost for a long time," he says. "Newspapers are going to have to make do without them."

The business conditions likely will depress ad rate increases next year. Rate hikes, which should average 5% to 5.6% in 1991, will be a more moderate 4.6% to 4.7% next year, according to Alex. Brown & Sons' most recent quarterly survey of newspaper executives.

"The years of significant rate hikes are long gone," says Mr. Berents.

At least 63% of the executives surveyed indicated advertisers' reaction to the rate hikes was mild—even in this down economic year. Only 29% said the reaction was severe.

Mr. Berents says advertisers may be getting conditioned to yearly rate hikes.

When the rebound comes, rate hikes coupled with linage gains will translate into revenue gains, he adds.

Mr. Forman says the newspaper bureau expects rate hikes of about 3% to 5% according to the rate of inflation.

As far as criticism on how newspapers can raise rates when overall circulation and penetration are declining, he says most newspapers actually are beginning to report circulation and readership increases. The industry's overall numbers are down because of the closing of papers, but those that survive are getting stronger, he says. □

Coen Watch: Newspapers

Paper chase

Newspapers had a bad year in 1991, and 1992 doesn't look like it's going to get much better.

In most markets, the average newspaper ad linage rate increase will be about 5%.

Newspapers will be reluctant to raise prices substantially once business improves because of the pressures created during the current depressed newspaper economy.

The uncertainties about future ad demand should hold back any spurt in newspaper ad rates until late 1992.

If politicians want to gab, radio eager to listen

Recession hit hard, and execs hoping to hold even

By Adrienne Ward

If no news is good news, the radio industry is in for an average year.

"At this point we're forecasting a flat year for 1992," says Mike Nicassio, exec VP-sales at radio rep Eastman Radio. "If there's any turnaround, we're not expecting it before the second quarter of 1992."

Mr. Nicassio says total national ad revenue for radio was down 2.7% to $718.5 million through August, the latest month for which figures are available. Last year at that time, revenues were up 3.4% from 1989.

Ad agency media buyers and planners say radio stations will have to work very hard to maintain their business in the coming year.

"I don't think we're going to see anything in terms of killer increases or usage," says Liz Russo, VP-network radio at Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York. "It's going to be pretty much steady in terms of how increases have been going in the past couple of years; nothing like the early '80s. But I think it will hold its own.

"Right now network radio is doing very well so hopefully that will carry into next year for spot and local."

Network ad revenues have been able to maintain their momentum during this year's weak economy, and Bud Heck, president of Radio Network Association, predicts they will continue to grow next year.

"We have been able to show increases through the end of August, which none of the other media can say," he says.

Network ad revenues grew to $283 million by the end of August, a 1.8% increase from the same period last year, Mr. Heck says.

He expects 1992 network ad revenues to post double-digit growth.

"I don't think people are using us because we are cheap," he says. "They're using us because they're finding out that we're effective. If you want to be cheap, you can go out and put your name on matchbooks."

Tom Bachtell

He attributes network radio's growth to better marketing efforts on the part of the industry.

Last year, many radio insiders predicted the industry would benefit from the economic recession, believing that advertisers would move their ad dollars from TV to radio.

But that didn't happen.

"In years past, radio profited in recessions because its efficiencies compared favorably to television. If [an advertiser] couldn't afford a large TV campaign, they'd switch to radio," says Mr. Nicassio.

"But this year, ad expenditures are just cut across the board, there's not as much shifting from one medium to the other," he says. "They're just cutting rather than taking it in column A and putting it in column B."

Len Stein, senior VP-associate director of radio at Young & Rubicam, New York, says the 1991 recession wasn't much of a boon to radio, after all.

"The problem was created within the TV industry, because TV ad sales were off and therefore [network TV] pricing was adjusted to that, which made them extremely competitive.

"Advertisers looking to spend in electronic media would tend to go toward the video—both TV and cable—because of the pricing.

"I don't think radio overall fared as well as it normally has in these kinds of periods, though network radio has done fairly well."

A good deal of radio's fortune in 1992 relies on how quickly the economy picks up.

"Given that radio has seen an

The radio networks are picking up steam, and the outlook for next year looks good.

Network radio experienced a slump in ad revenues earlier in 1991, but demand appears to be increasing. Next year, economic growth, the Summer and Winter Olympic Games and political elections will increase demand for network radio ad time.

Unit prices could go up as much as 6% in 1992, and costs per thousand could grow about 5%.

"We use radio for a number of our brands and we plan to continue to use it, but we haven't made any supplemental buys based on anticipating differences in media impact. And I don't see other companies doing that either.

"We are fairly significant sponsors of the Winter and Summer Olympics, the broadcasts, a big buy on CBS, so we've tapped into what's happening from that standpoint. But beyond that, we haven't made any compensating kinds of buys at all.

"We don't think the recession is over. Consumer confidence is down again. We don't see any real signs that the consumer has found confidence yet and we think 1992 will be a tight year.

"But we'll be out there on radio plugging away on our products."

Sam Michaelson, VP-director of radio, Saatchi & Saatchi, New York

"I believe we will see that quadrennial bump. I don't believe that it won't be there, it's always been there. . . . It's contagious, those events [Olympics and elections] create enough excitement that everyone wants to get involved.

"The only question that I have about the political situation is who the Democrats put up for election. How much media weight is Bush going to put behind his re-election?

"But we're going to feel it, the market is going to tighten up. It has to. There's a lack of inventory.

"We're spending a lot more on radio, the ratings are there and [radio] inventory is worth more. I'm very positive about it. Clients are asking a lot more questions about radio advertising."

David Landau, president, Unistar Radio Networks, New York

"It's been our experience in election years, particularly presidential election years, that the dollars in radio get spent on a local market-by-market basis and they're concentrated in the major cities that will swing the electoral votes in powerful states.

"What we think will happen is that the local radio markets will tighten up and advertisers will have trouble getting into scatter markets and we [network radio] will be the beneficiary of that.

"For the Olympics, we're out on the street with a package. We . . . believe that, as the TV networks tighten up, it will also create another supply-and-demand situation as advertisers look for other successful national media to advertise in.

"Network radio is usually their choice. We and network TV are the only true national [mass market] advertising vehicles, right now, so we're pretty confident on that score.

"We're optimistic about 1992. We feel the business climate is improving, and with the election year, the bottoming of this economic downturn and the Olympics, we believe there are some real positive things going on. We believe 1992 is going to be a good year."

Locker room banter: All-sports radio stations are becoming a growing trend. Diamond Broadcasting, owner of Chicago's WXRT-FM rock station, has a new all-sports station set to begin airing this month, pending Federal Communications Commission approval. The station joins others in New York, Philadelphia, Denver, Minneapolis, San Diego, Seattle, Tampa, Fla., and newcomers in Albuquerque, N.M., and Boston. ESPN and ABC Radio are forming a national all-sports radio network in January that will air 16 hours of programming every week. ESPN Radio Network will broadcast weekend shows and weekday reports during morning and afternoon drive times.

Air shows: We're not talking about the kind the military puts on in the summer—we're talking about in-flight radio services that allow fliers to tune into live sports, news and entertainment events. Jocks on the tube: Chicago disc jockey Jonathan Brandmeier's late-night TV show bombed horribly and stations that picked it up struggled to find a late enough spot where it wouldn't do them damage. Now Los Angeles jocks Mark and Brian have upped the ante. Critics say it will be miraculous if their NBC-TV show makes it to mid-season.

Falling off charts: Top-40/-dance-oriented stations are finding it hard to stay on top with pop. Insiders say lack of creativity and increasingly fragmented audiences are hurting the format.

Not so E-Z after all: Does anyone listen to E-Z listening stations anymore?

Spot radio will be benefit from the quadrennial year.

The Olympics, elections and expected economic recovery are likely to boost spot radio revenues.

These events come after a year of bad news for spot radio. The Persian Gulf War and recession caused considerable disruption in spot radio spending in 1991, but by spring 1992 demand should radically improve.

overall soft market this year, I would think economic recovery should help them in terms of getting a larger share of dollars that are out there," says Richard Alcott, senior-VP media director at Lord, Dentsu & Partners, Los Angeles.

He says vertical programming, such as an all-sports network, will attract more advertisers. "I see it as a potential growth area next year," he says.

One potential bright spot on the horizon could be next year's big events: the Olympics and elections. But radio buyers and sellers are not holding out great hope that the quadrennial year will boost radio ad revenues.

Olympics traditionally do not give radio stations a jump, but elections often have. In the 1988 quadrennial year, for example, political ad spending comprised 1.3% of total spot radio advertising (network radio was not used in the 1984 and 1988 presidential elections), according to the Radio Advertising Bureau.

"One of the important things for the radio industry as a whole is the anticipated heavy activity with national and local political campaigns," says Mr. Stein. "It will be a strong revenue base if there is a significant amount of it. But it's hard to say if there will be. It's going to depend upon who the Democratic candidate is and the dollars available, plus their marketing strategy."

Most radio insiders worry the elections will not provide substantial revenue increases next year. "The elections and Olympics will probably generate some additional revenues," Ms. Russo says. "But it's not going to be really huge."

The result could make for a long winter for radio ad revenues.

"While the economy is in a recovery mode, it takes a long time to filter down. September unemployment figures show the work force is still in recessionary mode. . . . We're probably going to see this [recession] for another year," Mr. Alcott says. □

Package goods could arrest slump

'New' outdoor categories looked upon to ease two years of slippage

By Junu Bryan Kim

Insiders say it won't be so cold outdoors next year.

Despite the recession and continued spending cutbacks from tobacco companies, outdoor advertising revenues next year should be equal to or slightly better than this year's total, industry observers predict.

If this holds true, the total will stop a two-year slide in annual revenues.

The recent slump will keep price increases in check. Outdoor sellers and most buyers predict increases of about 4% to cover inflation.

However, Byron Chandler, VP-out-of-home media, Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson, New York, predicts overall prices will be flat. He attributes that to an increase for high-demand boards in good locations while low-demand boards remain flat.

> 'Suppliers are getting a lot of inquiries regarding space availability.'

Some in the industry won't complain too loudly if it runs in place. "The way people in media got hammered, when you can say you did about as well as the year before, you can say you did well," says Tommy Teepell, senior VP-marketing, Institute of Outdoor Advertising.

"I think things are going to look up for [outdoor vendors] next year," says Chris Massler, VP-out-of-home media director, Leo Burnett USA, Chicago. "Suppliers I've talked to are getting a lot of inquiries regarding space availability for 1992. . . . These inquiries for business basically went by the wayside in '91."

According to LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service, outdoor advertising expenditures in 1990 totaled $688.8 million, down 2.4% from 1989's $705.8 million and 4.1% off 1988's $718.2 million.

But LNA/Arbitron also reports first half 1991 outdoor ad revenues totaled $327.4 million, about even with the $327.1 million spent in the same period in 1990.

Out of Home

Tom Bachtell

The upbeat 1992 predictions will be realized only if expected business materializes from ad categories that traditionally have used little, if any, outdoor.

"The outdoor industry, if it relies on traditional revenue sources, will see little or no recovery," says Pete Riordan, VP-out-of-home media, BBDO Worldwide, New York.

Although vendors perenially have sought increased ad revenues from non-traditional users of outdoor, such as package-goods marketers, these aspirations appear more attainable because out-of-home advertising is riding the current interest in targeted media, buyers and vendors say.

"This section of media is being viewed as being directly more responsive with the market," says Mr. Chandler.

This affinity for targeting has contributed to a year-to-date revenue increase of more than 7% from national marketers at Gannett Outdoor Group, says President-CEO Don Davidson.

"We're getting looked at almost like alternative media, so we get into some budgets that we weren't in before," says Mr. Davidson, who predicts a 4% increase from national marketers next year.

Mr. Davidson says categories on the rise include entertainment companies such as movie studios; package goods marketers, including Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Bristol-Myers Co.; and fashion marketers such as Levi Strauss & Co.

But the local ad scene still could present problems, Mr. Davidson says. Most major local advertiser categories—local broadcast media, auto dealer associations and financial institutions—still are affected by the recession and aren't expected to boost outdoor spending next year.

One possible bright spot on the local level could be retail. But that hinges on economic recovery and a surge in consumer spending.

"Retail tends to be down more in bad times but recovers more quickly in good times," Mr. Riordan says.

However, Mr. Teepell says, "Leveraged retailers will force [their advertising people] to be careful."

The increases from untapped revenue sources are needed to balance another predicted drop in tobacco revenues. Despite grassroots protests, tobacco remains the biggest source of outdoor ad dollars.

Vendors say the category will remain heavily active in the medium.

"Has overall revenue for tobacco companies gone up or down? Sure it's gone down. But is the sky falling? No, I don't think so," says Stephen McNeely, president-ceo, Patrick Media Group.

Tobacco spending has accounted for about 25% of total annual outdoor ad revenues since 1987, LNA/Arbitron numbers show.

The need to recoup lost revenues from tobacco companies underscores the importance vendors see in improving their marketing techniques.

Mr. McNeely says Patrick sales staffs now are being taught to put the customer's interests first and to consider how outdoor, as a part of a media mix, can address the client's needs.

"The philosophy is to be a business partner with a client, rather than someone who's selling outdoor advertising," he says.

For example, Patrick has started putting together cross-media programs with other local media such as cable and

Kicking the habit

Outdoor rates barely rose in 1991, and the outlook doesn't get much better for the first half of 1992.

Tobacco and alcohol marketers—key outdoor advertisers—have been cutting their schedules back in recent years.

Outdoor sellers have turned to local marketers to replace the lost revenues from alcohol and tobacco companies, but many smaller marketers have been severely hurt by the recession.

Some gradual improvement is expected by mid-1992 for the out-of-home industry, and published rates are going up 5% to 6%.

But the medium is still highly negotiable. Actual rates negotiated will probably end up being only 3% to 4% above 1991 levels.

IF YOU THOUGHT LAWRENCE WELK WAS ST. PETERSBURG'S FAVORITE BAND. . .

We hate to burst your bubble.

While St. Petersburg — and the entire Tampa Bay area — was once thought of as the retirement capital of the world, this is no longer true. The volume of new, young residents arriving in the St. Petersburg area has lowered the city's median age by nearly eight years since 1980.

So it's not surprising that a sell-out crowd of nearly 48,000 young people turned out for the New Kids on the Block concert in August 1990 — one of the many rock concerts held at St. Petersburg's new Suncoast Dome.

And it's not surprising either that Tampa Bay keeps up with the Times. The St. Petersburg Times, Tampa Bay's largest newspaper, beats the Tampa Tribune in metro circulation by more than 106,000 papers daily and 122,500 on Sunday.*

So get in tune with Tampa Bay. Call 1-800-333-7505, ext. 8249 for the latest information on this thriving market and the newspaper that serves it best.

Count me in: Here's an easy way to double revenues—have someone else count them. Institute of Outdoor Advertising has claimed LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service wasn't getting revenue figures from all vendors—and thus underreporting the industry's income. By how much? Third-party auditor Lee Cobb & Associates extrapolated LNA's data and estimated 1990 industry revenues to be almost $1.5 billion—more than double the LNA figure. LNA is considering whether to include these estimates in its spending logs.

Bon voyage: With today's emphasis on target marketing, buyers like the right-place, right-time characteristics of transit properties—especially commuter rail stations and airports, which feature a more affluent clientele.

Celluloid heroes: Outdoor salesmen have made like aspiring actors trying to impress movie studios. So far they've done well: Vendors say the entertainment category has been a big bright spot this year.

The right call: Give people a phone number and they'll call it—even if they're literally on the road. That's what some marketers believe, and they're splashing phone numbers on outdoor ads to catch the increasing number of people with car phones.

Self-help course: With the industry taking a longer look at how it's marketing itself, watch for Outdoor Advertising Association of America to lend a hand. Observers predict next year the group's emphasis will swing from addressing government issues to promoting the medium.

Entertainment fare such as "Soapdish" has boosted outdoor, while the bogus Afro Country Club board ran afoul of vandals.

Out of Home: Cold

Tacky, tacky, tacky: Creative departments, take note: No more garish outdoor ads. Day-glo paint is out; simple images are in.

Fighting battles abroad . . . The fight against tobacco advertising has intensified outside the U.S. Outdoor tobacco ads will be outlawed at the end of this year in Australia and by January 1993 in France. In addition, the European Community has proposed banning all tobacco advertising; a vote is expected next month.

. . . and at home: Meanwhile, U.S. community activists have continued their protests against cigarette and alcohol ads, especially those in minority neighborhoods. Most notable among protesters in 1991 is the Rev. Michael Pfleger, a Chicago clergyman who was acquitted after being charged with defacing alcohol and tobacco boards in the predominately black neighborhood around his church.

All smoke, no fire? Despite the efforts of people like Rev. Pfleger, tobacco companies remain a force in outdoor. Although total tobacco spending has dropped in past years, the percentage of total annual industry revenues coming from tobacco companies has hovered around 25% since 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

PC or PO'd? Two Michigan artists bought an outdoor board to hopefully spark discussion on racism—and instead sparked the anger of vandals. Their board, placed in suburban Chicago last month, portrayed a black man sitting in a golf cart holding a golf ball. The copy, promoting a fictitious country club, read, "Afro Country Club: 'where only the ball is white.' " Vandals defaced the board, forcing it to come down after six days. The artists, though, said the board had done its job of calling attention to racism.

direct mail, he says.

"We package our product with another medium to accomplish the objective of the advertiser and give him that focused buy," he says.

Meanwhile, Gannett Outdoor will continue to promote its affiliation with "Gannettwork." This cross-media structure, incorporating the media company's broadcast, newspaper and outdoor vehicles, was established in early 1991.

Mr. Davidson says he's been involved in the package since May. Although the concept is still being introduced to advertisers, Gannett has signed up Georgia Power Co. for the Atlanta portion of the network, he adds.

Buyers say they've noticed improvements in sales pitches.

"Their presentations have a bit more marketing background to them vs. what they've had in the past," Mr. Massler says.

Despite the industry's potential for next year, observers admit these hopes could collapse if the economy doesn't improve.

"Everybody seems to be holding," Mr. Chandler says. "The indications are we're climbing out of recession, but for every step forward there's a step back."

In fact, some insiders seem downcast about their fortunes.

"1991 was difficult for all of us . . . and while we all have lots of optimism about things improving [in 1992], it's not easy to see at this point in time," Mr. Davidson says. □

"The 1992 Games coming up in France and Barcelona are only going to reinforce the excitement and enthusiam that is already in Atlanta, not only locally but from regional and national advertisers. The 1992 Olympics will impact Atlanta reasonably well. I don't see the same enthusiasm spreading nationally, however.

"As for the presidential election, we did real well last time in all our markets. But the one before that, not much happened. And with Bush being a strong front-runner I don't know if there will be a big push on the Republican side, but maybe it will come from the Democrats.

"We have a lot of impact in outdoor from local, state and federal legislators from specific states because outdoor is a consistent medium for them. It has a 24-hour-a-day consistency to it which elected officials like. They can put their picture out there and have it stay for the duration of the campaign.

"As for any bump in overall spending: When you have things that impact the country, like a presidential election, it's always good for the economy. We've always done well by it, but I've never been through this type of recessionary environment.

"The last thing I heard is that they're having a hard time selling the Olympics from a broadcast standpoint. That's a good prognosis of what's going to happen unless something stimulates the overall economic environment. We need a stronger domestic economy."

New study finds green confusion

By Joe Mandese

Consumers are still a little green when it comes to practicing what they preach about the environment.

A new study shows that people in the U.S. don't actually buy the products they claim to prefer.

The study, conducted as part of Simmons Market Research Bureau's 1991 Study of Media & Markets, is believed to be the first to link actual buying behavior with consumer attitudes on the environment.

While the study does show consumers are sensitive to environmental issues, it also shows that being concerned doesn't mean consumers will change buying patterns.

Indeed, it appears to contradict a recent study conducted by Gerstman & Meyers, a packaging consultancy, that found consumers overwhelmingly preferred buying products that are environmentally safe.

In the Simmons survey, 60% of women 18 and older agreed

Fiat quits Euro RSCG

$70M account moves as conflicts build

By Bruce Crumley

PARIS—Client conflict fallout is starting to rain on Euro RSCG.

Last week, Fiat pulled $70 million in French business out of the agency.

Two other automakers—Mitsubishi Motor Corp. and Porsche—are also reviewing their accounts due to conflict concerns at the shop, formed earlier this month following a merger of France's two largest agency groups, Eurocom and Roux Seguela Cayzac & Goudard.

But Fiat is the first to move. The Italian automaker shifted its French below-the-line and ad budget to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles after pulling it from Eurocom-owned MAO. It's the largest account move in France in the past three years. D'Arcy won the pitch over Leo Burnett Co. and the incumbent.

Fiat decided to review the account before Euro RSCG's formation, in part because Eurocom Advertising also handles the worldwide Peugeot account, agency sources say.

It's the largest account move in France in the past three years.

The sources in France, however, say when RSCG's worldwide Citroen account also entered the Eurocom family, the Italian automaker was convinced to take its French business elsewhere.

Fiat is in the process of consolidating the Fiat line account across Europe at D'Arcy and Burnett, said Vittorio Rava, director of advertising.

Last week, the automaker moved its $8 million Dutch account to Noordervliet & Winninghoff/Leo Burnett, Amsterdam, from FHV/BBDO.

Fiat "does not intend to reduce its ad spending but is rather keen to be more cost-efficient," Mr. Rava said. Rather than pan-European campaigns, each geographic area, such as Italy, Greece, Portugal and Spain, will have a lead agency to coordinate local campaigns.

Among RSCG and the Eurocom family of agencies, a total of three

KLM, British Airways talk

NEW YORK—KLM Royal Dutch Airlines said Friday it's "engaged in discussions with British Airways on a range of possible areas of cooperation." The announcement follows last week's Advertising Age story that Northwest Airlines and British Airways are discussing a corporate alliance (AA, Oct. 14). KLM holds 10.5% of Northwest's voting stock and 20% of common stock. It's unclear whether KLM is involved in the Northwest-British Airways discussions.

Interpublic, Omnicom stocks hot

NEW YORK—Interpublic Group of Cos. and Omnicom Group shares jumped in New York Stock Exchange trading last week. Interpublic closed at $52.75 a share, up $1.63 Friday and 18.5% from Oct. 10; Omnicom finished at $33.38, up $1.86 Friday and 15.6% from Oct. 10. Analysts said institutions seemed to be buying the shares in anticipation of an end to the recession and a pickup in the ad business.

Top female execs say media, agency record is good

The Senate confirmation hearings of Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas and his Capitol Hill confrontation with Professor Anita Hill sparked nationwide debate on the issue of sexual harassment. Advertising Age invited Frances Lear, editor in chief of Lear's*; Diane Rothschild, president of Grace & Rothschild, New York; Myrna Blyth, publishing director-editor in chief,* Ladies' Home Journal*; and Louise McNamee, president-chief operating officer of Della Femina, McNamee, to share their views in a panel discussion with New York Deputy Bureau Chief Pat Sloan on how the issue and the debate have affected advertising, marketing and media. An edited version follows:*

■ Sexual harassment issues are a hot topic at media companies, agencies and advertisers—Page 55.

Advertising Age: Do you think sexual harassment is a big problem in the advertising, marketing and media industries today, and to what extent?

Ms. Lear: I think it's a big problem generally. I don't know how we stand as an industry, whether we're better or worse than anybody else. But it certainly is an enormous problem throughout the country. I would imagine certain industries are worse than we are . . . because we have some kind of enlightenment.

Ms. Rothschild: I don't think it's that much of a problem. Based on experience and from what I observe, there are isolated incidents that are offensive. But I don't see it being pervasive or as common

'Pravda' struggles post-coup

By Betsy McKay

MOSCOW—Pravda, once the largest daily newspaper in the Soviet Union, has fallen on hard times.

The newspaper, formerly the rich child and mouthpiece of the Communist Party, is now faced with paying its own bills.

After being shut down in August during the unsuccessful coup, the paper declared its independence and became an employee-owned-and-operated publication. Instead of reporting Communist propaganda, the paper strives to be somewhat more objective.

Circulation has slid dramatically, a trend that started earlier. Circulation now stands at about 2.5 million, down 69% from 8 million in 1990, said Victor Linnik, Pravda's New York-based U.S. correspondent. Pravda now has the lowest circulation of all the established national dailies in the Soviet Union.

At this point, Pravda doesn't even know whether it or the disintegrating Communist Party owns the property where the daily is based. And bills for paper, are mounting.

Since the attempted coup, Pravda hasn't had access to the money in its bank accounts and isn't likely to get it, Mr. Linnik said.

The chief hope for survival is advertising.

"Thank God, the attitude toward advertising has changed," said Gennady Zafesov, Pravda's director of advertising.

GLOBAL NEWS

The paper's editorial leaders have realized that to survive, they will have to accept concepts like advertising that they used to consider evil.

Although the paper has had an ad department for almost eight months, few ads have run.

There are indications, however, that that may change.

Even though Western advertising has been practically nil, advertising in Pravda is up overall, Mr. Zafesov said.

As an example, he said his department netted four pages of ads in one week in mid-September, exceeding its usual volume of four to six pages per month. Ad rates are $50,000 to $60,000 for a page, but "prices are flexible," Mr. Zafesov said.

Most of the ads are for small stock exchanges—including the Russian Raw Materials & Commodities Exchange—and trading companies that are cropping up around the country. Soviet banks and financial institutions also advertise.

Mr. Zafesov attributed the lack of Western business to "the very difficult economic situation in this country.

"It seems to me that as soon as there are some real moves toward improvement, then things will pick up," he said.

Ads are also starting to pick up slowly at Izvestia. Although Advertising Director Eduard Gonzalez said so far he's seen no sign of an increase in advertising, a look at the 4.7 million-circulation daily indicates otherwise.

Recently, there have been half-page ads for Sony Corp. TVs and tape decks and automaker Hyundai, as well as quarter-page ads for Taiwan Computers and Ricoh Co. copiers. A recent eight-page issue contained two pages of advertising.

Izvestia is now independent but was the official organ of the Soviet Parliament until just after the coup.

Most foreign advertisers negotiate contracts through Izvestia's Western agent, German Burda Publishers.

Izvestia also plans to print a weekly 12-page issue on Fridays starting in 1992, an attempt to attract more readers than its usual six-to-eight-page format.

A 12-page experimental issue, published Sept. 24, contained 1½ ad pages, but Mr. Gonzalez is aiming for four. The rate now is $52,000 a page, but Mr. Gonzalez said, "We'll be cheaper next year." □

What TV program is hot in Moscow? 'Dallas,' of course

By Betsy McKay

MOSCOW—"Dallas" attracted the most Soviet viewers during a week-long run of U.S. programming on Soviet TV's Channel 1, according to a poll of 500 Muscovites completed by Gosteleradio's social research center.

"Dallas" garnered 66% of the viewers, who gave the show a rating of 4 for entertainment value on a scale of 1 to 5, with 5 being the highest.

The glitzy prime-time soap gave the audience a chance to "acquaint themselves with the American way of life," considered "realistically portrayed," according to the study. The actors' looks and personalities, as well as the "moral values" portrayed in the dubbed programs, attracted viewers, the study said.

The shows aired from July 1 to 6. The 500 Muscovites polled, all over the age of 16, were chosen randomly from Gosteleradio's in-house list of viewers and asked to complete a questionnaire two weeks after the U.S. programming aired. The questionnaires were returned by early August to the All-Union Television & Radio Co., also known as Gosteleradio.

U.S. TV shows are "easy and relaxing to watch" and more professionally produced than Soviet TV, the study said.

"The Man From Atlantis" attracted 65% of viewers surveyed, achieving an entertainment rating of 4.2.

Other popular programs included "The Love Boat" (57% viewership), enjoyed for its "light comedy," and "Highway to Heaven" (53%), drawing viewers because of the charity and care shown for the elderly and general "belief in people," according to the study. "The Streets of San Francisco" attracted 38% of viewers surveyed, while "Little House on the Prairie" grabbed 24%. The two-part documentary "American Chronicles" pulled 27% for day 1 and 22% for day 2.

"The Flintstones" and "The Jetsons" grabbed 32% and 29% of the viewers, respectively.

Forty-three percent of those surveyed gave negative comments on the U.S. programming, with some complaining the programs were dated or "primitive" and aimed at the lowest common denominator of viewers.

Apparently not recognizing the cartoons as children's programs, some respondents said they would like to see children's or youth programs. Others expressed a desire to see sports shows and what they called "classical" programs —old films or concerts. □

Visa charges ahead into Soviet market

By Betsy McKay

MOSCOW—Visa last month became the first credit card available to the general public in the Soviet Union.

Only the tiny percentage of Soviets holding a hard-currency account will be able to get the cards, which will expire every six months.

The cards, issued by Russian commercial bank Credobank for Visa International, will be linked to hard-currency accounts.

The cards are aimed at the growing number of Soviet business people traveling abroad.

Credobank hopes to issue 500 cards by yearend and 3,000 to 5,000 during a two-year period, said Ruslan Vassiliev, deputy general director of BBDO Marketing, the agency handling the credit card marketer's public relations and marketing.

Igor Lipanov, director of Credobank's credit card division, said an education print and TV campaign generated by the bank's own commercial department began this month. □

a call for entries

Chicago wants to see your stuff.

With the support of The Chicago Advertising Federation, O'Hare Plaza and Advertising Age's Creativity Magazine, The Off The Street Club is sponsoring a billboard design competition to raise money for and awareness of the organization. They invite you to "Draw The Line For Good."

The Off The Street Club
The Off The Street Club is a safe haven on Chicago's West Side that for 90 years has offered 3000 teenagers an alternative to gangs and violence. It is supported largely through the efforts of Chicago's advertising community.

How to Enter
Create a billboard design that captures the spirit of The Off The Street Club. The competition is open to advertising, sales promotion, public relations, graphic design and marketing communications agencies and corporate departments in the Chicago area.

Winners will have their design and name displayed on the O'Hare Plaza office complex billboard, visible from the Kennedy Expressway, and will be recognized at the dedication of the billboard. The winner and runners-up will have their designs showcased in the December issue of Advertising Age's Creativity Magazine.

Deadline for entries is NOVEMBER 18, 1991. For further entry details and guidelines, contact Dawn Gray at 312/372-9333.

SEPTEMBER AD RESULTS

Skimpy fall fashions

September issues benefit little from traditional ads

By Scott Donaton

Traditionally ad-fat fall fashion issues shed some weight last month as the advertising depression wears on.

MEDIA WORKS

September issues are usually the year's thickest for women's magazines dependent on fashion, retail and beauty advertising. While that held true this year, September fashion books were slimmer than the same issues in 1990, Publishers Information Bureau reports.

Category leader Vogue saw ad volume fall 12.7% for the month but still carried an impressive 422.4 pages. Competitors didn't fare as well. Elle's 257.8 ad pages were down 22.9%; Harper's Bazaar's pages fell a painful 42.2% to 130.3.

Other fashion- and beauty-oriented women's titles down in pages for the month included Cosmopolitan, Glamour, Lear's, Mademoiselle, Mirabella, New Woman, Self and Seventeen. Conde Nast Publications' fledgling Allure carried an anemic 22.8 ad pages in September.

Twice-monthly W was the only title with cause to celebrate: Its 222.9 pages were up 42.4% from last September.

The men's fashion field posted similar results. GQ, with 223.5 pages, was down 24.2%. M Inc.—to be renamed M with its November issue—saw pages drop 18.2% to 124. Esquire was flat with 131.8 pages.

Overall, magazine ad pages for the month totaled 14,854.1, a 7.9% decline. After three quarters, PIB-tracked magazines were down 10% at 109,265.5 pages.

Forbes took the lead among PIB-tracked magazines for January-September with 2,317.2 ad pages, a loss of 6.9%. The every-other-weekly's 483.7 September pages were up 76.2%. That gain was primarily attributable to a strong showing by spinoff Forbes FYI, rather than increases for Forbes. The quarterly lifestyle supplement's Sept. 30 issue carried 78 ad pages, counted as part of Forbes' total.

Rival Business Week was second overall with 2,265.5 pages so far this year, a 20.4% decline, and likely will assume its place atop the PIB ad page chart in the fourth quarter despite substantial losses this year. Fortune was fifth overall with 1,940.9 pages, down 16.4%.

Among national Sunday magazines, Parade was up 6.3% through September with 551.1 ad pages. USA Weekend's 488.7 pages were down 2.3%. Among local Sunday magazines, The New York Times Magazine continued to bleed ad pages, down 27.1% to 1,953.5. The Los Angeles Times' Sunday magazine was flat after nine months with 669.2 pages.

At least two magazines had a reversal of fortune—one for the better and one for the worse.

American Health, where ad pages were off more than 40% after six months, saw pages rise 16.2% to 34.3 for the month. The gain left January-September pages down 29.4% at 231.3. Runner's World, where ad pages were up more than 40% at the half, carried 35.9 pages in September, a 37.9% drop. After nine months, its pages totaled 415.8, up 19.2%. □

VideOcart hunts media deal

By Scott Hume

CHICAGO—VideOcart is looking for a media partner.

The in-store marketing company initiated discussions with all four TV networks and plans talks with major publishers to strike a deal for an advertising presence at supermarket checkouts.

VideOcart, whose liquid-crystal video devices on supermarket shopping carts display ads and store information as shoppers move through a store, says its two top short-term objectives are to sign a multibrand advertiser and a media company.

The media deal likely will be signed first, and soon, said VideOcart Exec VP Bob McCann.

"I'm confident we'll do a deal in the next few months," he said. "It may be with a newspaper or a magazine publisher or TV network, but we intend to have a checkout sponsor."

VideOcart recently signed a deal with Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Discover card unit, making an ad for the credit card the first screen shoppers see when they start their tours through one of the 30 stores in 13 markets equipped with the devices.

The company wants an exclusive sponsor for the last screen, which now carries horoscopes, trivia questions and other entertainment features at the checkout.

"The screen could give the day's headlines and ask, 'Want to know more? See today's USA Today,' " he said. "Or say, 'What was Liz Taylor's wedding really like? Pick up this week's People magazine.'

"If we tie in with a TV network, the screen could give that night's prime-time schedule."

VideOcart's recent strategic alliance with Information Resources Inc. provides for a sharing of information, including household buying information from IRI's InfoScan service. That will allow package-goods marketers to decide which brands to promote via VideOcart in individual stores.

Similarly, it could allow multi-property media companies to use VideOcart to "micro-market" specific publications or TV programs based on lifestyle and viewing patterns of an individual store's clientele, Mr. McCann said.

Having completed a 2 million-share offering that raised $27.3 million in capital, VideOcart is moving into an expansion phase. It's promising advertisers and investors that it will be in at least 500 stores by 1993. □

Meredith's fall freeze. Meredith Corp. began a companywide salary freeze that it said will last at least one year and will affect all areas, including the company's magazine, book publishing and cable TV operations. In an internal memo outlining the freeze and other minor cost-cutting actions, President-CEO Jack Rehm stressed that the company hasn't been "forced into really awful decisions" such as massive layoffs or asset sales.

Court records. TeeVee Toons filed suit in the Supreme Court of New York State against Details and parent Conde Nast Publications, charging the magazine with the "intentional misappropriation" of a promotion that offered a customized music collection as a subscription premium. TeeVee Toons, a record company that had approached Details with the promotion, seeks at least $700,000 in damages; Conde Nast said the lawsuit is without merit. □

P&G's Artzt on ads: Crucial investment

By Jennifer Lawrence

Edwin L. Artzt, chairman-ceo of Procter & Gamble Co., thinks advertising is better than promotion for building brand loyalty, believes mediocre advertising is better than no advertising, likes advertising that lasts and doesn't plan to reduce P&G's investment in it. He is, however, reducing the cycle time for product rollouts.

In a wide-ranging interview with Advertising Age, Mr. Artzt shared his views on the role of advertising as he prepared to address the Association of National Advertisers' 82nd annual meeting in Phoenix, Ariz., today.

In a speech titled "Grooming the Next Generation of Management," Mr. Artzt will touch on key elements he thinks should be incorporated into ad training programs—possibly even at P&G.

"A belief in advertising really begins with developing professionalism in the people who handle advertising," he told Ad Age. "If they haven't been professionally trained, how can they believe in it? They will always have that doubt."

"Advertising is a longer-term investment, and it shouldn't be intruded upon by short-term needs."

At one time P&G's manager of ad copy, Mr. Artzt intends to restore a belief in advertising at all corporate levels, from new hires to ad managers.

"Advertising is a longer-term investment, and it shouldn't be intruded upon by short-term needs," said Mr. Artzt, who acknowledged this belief is being put to test right now. P&G last week reported net earnings for the July-September quarter dropped 3%, to $536 million, compared with the same quarter last year.

"Everyone will say, 'Hey, you're not going to make your profit forecast, and what are you going to do about it?' There's that advertising budget just sitting there like a big plum ready to be plucked."

When it does get plucked, "It's

Women to get 'equal roles' in new A-B campaign

By Ira Teinowitz

Anheuser-Busch says it's abandoning the traditional portrayal in beer advertising of women as sex objects as part of a major new direction for its flagship Budweiser.

There are still attractive women in tight clothes in the ads, but the company claims it's not now portraying them as typical beer ads do.

"We wanted to make a campaign that would cut through and take away from typical beer advertising in the '80s. In the future, women will have equal roles and be treated in equal manner," said August Busch IV, who recently became the brand manager for Budweiser.

A-B last week kicked off a sharply different "heartland" campaign as one part of a $75 million effort for Budweiser. The drive jettisons much of the strategic direction of the less than 2-year-old "Nothing beats a Bud" campaign, which the brewer said had become "arrogant."

The new effort calls Budweiser "as genuine as the people who drink it," and features real-life situations that often use a combination of older and younger people.

The campaign from D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, St. Louis, still uses the "Nothing beats" tag but only as a final super.

"We didn't want to get into the body parts [advertising] of Coors Light," Mr. Busch said, "especially after the Supreme Court inquiry. We have heightened sensitivity to what has

Coen expects '92 recovery, 9% ad $ hike

By John P. Cortez

ORLANDO, FLA.—The long-awaited and much-predicted economic recovery is around the corner, says Robert Coen, senior VP and director-forecasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York.

Though the ad industry traditionally lags behind the economy as it recovers, the industry should see a 7% to 9% increase in total media spending next year, he said.

Mr. Coen's forecasts are eagerly anticipated by the advertising industry, which generally has been expecting slow growth next year.

With anticipated inflation of 4%, Mr. Coen's forecasts translate to real growth of 3% to 5% in 1992. Mr. Coen doesn't distinguish between nominal and real growth in his forecasts.

Speaking to the Yellow Pages Publishers Association's annual convention, Mr. Coen predicted the U.S. could find itself in an economic boom by the fourth quarter of 1992.

Symptoms of the turnaround are appearing now, but too late to make 1991 anything but disappointing for most marketers and their agencies, he said.

"Things are starting to tighten up in some of the media

Lois/GGK buyout set

NEW YORK—Management at Lois/GGK reached an agreement to buy the agency from Trimedia Group, Zurich, executives familiar with the plan said. Trimedia acquired GGK in August 1990; GGK had bought Lois in January 1985. The Lois agency's new name is expected to be unveiled in the next few weeks. George Lois, chairman of the agency, wouldn't comment on the deal.

States oppose TV ad proposal

NEW YORK—Fourteen state attorneys general have asked the Big 3 networks to reconsider plans to relax standards restricting deceptive advertising. The move was made in response to changes proposed by ABC that would lift bans on several types of advertising, including ads featuring doctors or actors portraying doctors endorsing medical products. The attorney generals also urged ABC to abandon plans

Euro RSCG merger troubles U.S. units

By Jon Lafayette and Scott Hume

The future of Euro RSCG's agency stepchildren in the U.S. is getting cloudy.

When the two largest French agencies, Eurocom and Roux Seguela Cayzac & Goudard, merged this month, concern spread through Eurocom's New York-based Della Femina, McNamee; RSCG's Tatham/RSCG, Chicago; and RSCG's Messner Vetere Berger Carey Schmetterer, New York.

Of the three, Tatham's situation seems to be the most volatile.

Observers say the agency might be better off breaking away from Euro RSCG to retain $100 million in Procter & Gamble Co. business. That represents one-third of Tatham's billings.

Tatham's P&G business conflicts with Eurocom client Henkel, and P&G has a strict conflict policy. Euro RSCG executives appear unwilling to resign the nearly $100 million Henkel account.

Discussions between Euro RSCG and P&G to resolve the issue were held at P&G headquarters in Cincinnati last week, but no decisions were reached, Tatham sources said. The talks will continue "until everything is resolved," a Tatham executive said.

Tatham principals declined to comment on the buyback rumor or any other possible scenario.

"We have no further comment and have no announcements," an agency spokeswoman said.

If a sale was to take place, a management buyout appears to be the most likely possibility. But other agency groups seeking a strong Chicago office might also be interested.

RSCG acquired a majority stake in Tatham-Laird & Kudner in 1988. The agency was renamed Tatham/RSCG in May.

Even if the P&G problem is resolved, Euro RSCG could face problems with Della Femina, McNamee Chairman Jerry Della Femina.

Mr. Della Femina is said to be unhappy about sharing top billing with his new U.S. colleagues.

After a long-simmering feud, Mr. Della Femina earlier this year was named head of Eurocom-Della Femina, a North American holding company that was to include all of Eurocom's ad agencies.

But Mr. Della Femina was excluded from the RSCG merger talks and, after the merger was completed, Euro RSCG announced that Tatham and Messner Vetere would continue to report to Jean-Michel Goudard, president-international of Euro RSCG, not Mr. Della Femina.

It was unclear whether Mr. Della Femina would insist on having Tatham and Messner Vetere report to him or seek an alternate resolution to what appears to be a breach of his earlier agreement.

"I expect Euro RSCG will honor my contract," Mr. Della Femina said last week. "I don't see it as a major stumbling block."

Other sources close to Mr. Della Femina suggested the French parent might be running out of patience with Mr. Della Femina, whose agency hasn't had a good year.

They speculated that if three U.S. agencies are too many for Euro RSCG, then Della Femina, McNamee may be the one most likely to be jettisoned.

Other executives familiar with the situation maintained that a three-agency lineup could work for Euro RSCG if it resists the urge to merge them in search of economies of scale. □

GM card to give car credits

By Raymond Serafin

General Motors Corp.'s venture into credit cards next year will be aimed primarily at boosting vehicle sales and customer loyalty, say sources familiar with the planning.

The MasterCard program is likely to include a way in which card use will provide credits toward the purchase of a new vehicle, sources say.

That feature, comparable to "frequent flier" points associated with some airline-affiliated credit card programs, would be a first for an auto marketer.

It's expected there will be a cap on the total discount a cardholder can obtain.

Agency sources have confirmed that McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, will handle the estimated $70 million rollout, as expected (AA, June 24).

The launch is anticipated for early 1992, though lingering concerns about the economy could force a delay.

GM last week reported losing $1.06 billion in the third quarter, leading to concerns about starting a major program at this time.

Sources have declined to talk on the record because GM remains tight-lipped about the project, refusing to confirm that a credit card is in the works.

GM spokesman Tom Pyden acknowledged the hiring of Ron Zebeck (AA, Oct. 7) but wouldn't confirm whether he will be responsible for running the program. Mr. Zebeck had been VP-marketing at Advanta Corp.'s Colonial National Bank, the nation's 24th-largest issuer of credit cards.

The agency review was largely conducted by Philip Guarascio, GM's executive-in-charge of corporate marketing and advertising, but Mr. Guarascio delayed naming an agency until Mr. Zebeck was on board and could provide input on the decision.

Other GM agencies that pitched were Leo Burnett USA, Chicago; D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Bloomfield Hills, Mich.; and N W Ayer, New York and Detroit.

McCann Direct is expected to be involved in the launch because direct marketing will likely play a significant role in signing up GM vehicle owners.

The media campaign will be aimed at both recruiting users and persuading them to use the cards.

The program will be a MasterCard "affinity" setup, in which Banc One Corp. will issue the cards. The cards will carry the logos of both the bank and GM. GM will get an estimated 1% to 2% of the charge volume generated.

Ford Motor Co. and Volkswagen U.S. are also operating credit card programs as ways to enhance owner loyalty.

Ford's financial subsidiary, the Associates, in June began issuing MasterCard and Visa credit cards with no annual fee plus a rebate of 1.5% on annual purchases.

MBNA America Bank issues the VW affinity card, launched in midyear with no annual fee and a yearly 3% rebate on purchases. □

Ad community feels losses from fire

By Alice Z. Cuneo

OAKLAND, Calif.—About a half-dozen agency executives lost their homes last week when fire swept through the hills that overlook this city.

Bob Hoffman, president-creative director of Hoffman/Lewis, lost his 1920s Tudor-style house, which he had only recently bought.

At the time of the fire, he and his wife were in different parts of the Bay area and were unable to reach each other, creating a "mirror of the horror of the earthquake" of 1989, Mr. Hoffman said.

Sara Ecker, an account supervisor at J. Walter Thompson USA, San Francisco, who plans a December wedding, also lost her home.

Others who work in the industry in San Franciso who lost their homes included Mario Valencia, assistant treasurer at Gardner Communications; Bob Finkel, a copywriter at Viacom/FCB; and Robert Werts, partner at Carney & Werts.

Twenty Clorox Co. employees had to evacuate their homes, and nine of those homes were destroyed, a company spokesman said.

Dozens of others in the ad community were forced to gather a few possessions and flee the area. Damage in the fire was estimated at $5 billion.

"It was pretty terrifying," said John Yost, senior VP-general manager at Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. The fire missed Mr. Yost's home.

"We were really lucky," he said. □

NAD dips into spaghetti sauce fight

By Janice Kelly

NEW YORK—Campbell Soup Co. was one of seven advertisers that modified claims reviewed in September by the National Advertising Division of the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

NAD canned commercials for Prego spaghetti sauce, from FCB/-Leber Katz Partners, following a complaint from Ragu Foods.

Ragu said the spots erroneously communicated a claim that each variety of Prego sauce (Prego and Prego Extra Chunky) is thicker than each variety of Ragu. Also, Ragu stated it was unfair to compare Prego to a thin sauce while omitting mention of thicker Ragu varieties.

Campbell said it's entitled to select any target for its advertising, provided the two products being compared have been adequately identified. Ragu Old World Style was selected because it was the original variety of the line and retains the largest market share.

NAD agreed Campbell can select the target for its ads without noting whether other Ragu varieties more closely resemble Prego sauce in consistency.

But NAD concluded that one TV spot failed to identify the target variety in the audio segment; the specific names of the varieties were used only in the first seconds of the commercial and the later references to the brands were all in general terms. So NAD recommended current ads be modified to reflect those concerns.

Campbell said it would consider NAD's concerns in future ads and in modifying current ads.

Other ads modified or discontinued:

Abbott Laboratories (Selsun Blue and Extra Medicated Selsun Blue dandruff shampoos; Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson): Procter & Gamble Co. objected to two TV spots claiming: "Selsun Blue relieves dandruff flaking better than Head & Shoulders, Denorex and Tegrin," and Extra Medicated Selsun Blue contains "the medicine doctors recommend most. Medicine that relieves flaking better than Head & Shoulders."

P&G said any comparison should be made with its Intensive Treatment formula, not its regular formula. P&G also said the reference "regular formula" was inaccurate. The white bottle formula is available in two versions: Normal to Oily and Normal to Dry.

NAD concluded the Extra Medicated Selsun Blue spot should be modified since a Head & Shouiders product wasn't shown and the super described it inaccurately as the regular formula. Abbott agreed to stop airing the disputed ads and to end references to P&G's "regular formula" in future comparison ads.

Albany International Corp. (Primaloft garment insulation; Damian Bisch & Partners): United Feather & Down challenged several ads appearing in garment industry trade magazines claiming: "Primaloft, preferred by experts 3-to-1 over down." United Feather said the headline implied that a survey had been conducted or that the named companies had expressed a preference for Primaloft. It also said the ads stated an unsubstantiated overall superiority claim. NAD recommended the claims be qualified.

Albany said there are no current plans to extend the use of the trade ads and will take NAD's concerns into account when developing future ads.

Phone Programs USA ("T2 Telephone Sweepstakes"; in-house): The Children's Advertising Review Unit challenged a commercial that appeared on an independent station during children's programming. The spot invited the viewer to "enter the 'T2 Telephone Sweepstakes' and lend the Terminator a hand, because he's going to give you his." CARU said "teleprograms for children should consist of totally self-contained story lines or completed audio products." Phone Programs said it will consult CARU when placing ads for future teleprograms.

Saab Cars USA (Saab 9000 CD Turbo car; Angotti, Thomas, Hedge): BMW of North America challenged newspaper and magazine ads claiming: "The Saab is faster, larger, safer and better protected. Unfortunately, it's less expensive. . . . " Other claims included: "It's one of the safest cars in the world," based on accident reports compiled by the Highway Loss Data Institute.

NAD said the information on the car's safety features and record alone wouldn't substantiate the comparative claim that it was safer than BMW. NAD also questioned the use of the term "accident reports" to characterize the institute's reports. Saab said it will try not to use the term in future ads and won't run the comparative ads in the future.

Toys "R" Us (in-house): NAD questioned a newspaper supplement headed: "The world's biggest toy store. Lowest prices guaranteed." After that supplement, but before the NAD inquiry, Toys "R" Us created a new campaign, running in October, that said, "Our price guarantee can't be beat," with the accompanying disclosure statement, "We guarantee our low prices." NAD said the revised claim and disclosure eliminated the issues. Toys "R" Us said it will eliminate a percent-off sales claim.

ConAgra (Healthy Choice frozen dessert; Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis): Kraft General Foods, marketer of Breyers and Sealtest ice creams, questioned ads that claimed: "Healthy Choice ice cream has a premium quality taste equal to Breyers and Edy's. All the creamy taste of the richest ice creams." Kraft said in a taste test consumers preferred Sealtest vanilla ice cream to Healthy Choice vanilla. ConAgra said the ad has been revised, and comparisons to named brands and to "the richest ice creams" have been omitted.

Claim substantiated:

Anheuser-Busch (Bud Dry; DDB Needham. Worldwide, Chicago): Coors Brewing Co. complained about TV spots claiming: "Why are beers that go down so lightly watered down so heavily? Turn off the water and turn Bud Dry. Its smooth, draft taste is dry-brewed, not watered down. To drink light, yet satisfy completely. So why get soaked—when you can drink Bud Dry?" NAD concluded Anheuser-Busch had substantiated its claims. □

Lean Cuisine tries to heat up

By Julie Liesse

Stouffer remembers when Lean Cuisine was the hottest name in the freezer case. And with a new $15 million to $20 million ad campaign, it hopes to bring some of that magic back to the battered franchise.

In the past year, Lean Cuisine's share of the frozen dinner and entree category has fallen to 7.8% from 8.9%, according to Nielsen Marketing Research. That places the Stouffer Foods Corp. brand second in a dead heat with H.J. Heinz Co.'s Weight Watchers and nearly 3 share points behind ConAgra's Healthy Choice.

The marketing team that took over at Stouffer a year ago has already reformulated the 10-year-old line to be competitive with Healthy Choice in fat, cholesterol and sodium levels. Ten new entrees were added in February, with prices lowered across the line.

Stouffer last week broke a network and spot TV campaign, the brand's third creative positioning in a year.

"Since May, we've been working on a long-term campaign that expresses what Lean Cuisine has and what people eat for: taste," said Thomas Schafer, senior partner at agency Tatham/RSCG, Chicago. The two previous campaigns "were designed to level the playing field, more stopgap solutions."

The new campaign starts with two 30-second spots featuring consumers remembering when "you didn't worry about what you ate." One spot says: "Salt? Hey, no problem. Cholesterol? Who knew?"

The tagline is "The taste you can love for life."

Both commmercials use a male voice-over; one features a man as the Lean Cuisine consumer.

"We thought it was an opportunity to bring more men into the Lean Cuisine franchise," said Ed Marra, Stouffer's senior VP-marketing.

Print ads are scheduled to follow at the start of 1992, and several additional TV spots are in the works, Mr. Schafer said.

Despite the Nielsen numbers, Mr. Marra said, "Lean Cuisine's been gaining back volume all year." Nielsen does show that for the year ended Sept. 7 Lean Cuisine's unit volume was down only 7%, compared with the 11% drop in dollar sales—perhaps reflecting the impact of the price cut.

"I think what we are going to recapture is the magic of the Lean Cuisine and Stouffer [red box] combination," Mr. Marra said.

He said he thinks Healthy Choice is more vulnerable today because of "more competition—and more aggressive competition—and because of the overproliferation of the Healthy Choice brand. It's hard to execute and hard to maintain brand equity across so many categories."

ConAgra's latest additions are extra-lean ground beef and spaghetti sauce. They join a Healthy Choice franchise that's approaching $500 million in total sales. □

Falling share

Healthy Choice this year surpassed Lean Cuisine and Weight Watchers in its dollar share of the frozen dinner and entree category.

Brand	Share as of 9/8/90	Share as of 9/7/91
Healthy Choice	7.6%	10.7%
Lean Cuisine	8.9	7.8
Weight Watchers	9.6	7.8

Hot, not cold, and why

Your recent special issue on Magazines in America (Oct. 6) was a disappointment to us, as I'm sure it was to our client, Forbes Inc. . . .

At the moment, Forbes, which ranked 17th in ad pages among all PIB-measured magazines when Doremus acquired the account, rose to No. 2 by the end of 1990, and is now No. 1. . . . Its modest page loss through September is small compared with most other magazines in this tough year. And American Heritage, a past winner of three National Magazine Awards for General Excellence, is one of the few magazines ahead in pages for the year.

In my opinion, based on the strength of editorial, circulation quality and advertising success, Forbes Inc. is in remarkable shape for the future. Whose long-term record is better?

Yet, Advertising Age rated Forbes more cold than hot, with only a two out of a possible four. Half of the magazines you rated scored higher. Newsweek, down 17.49% in the first nine months, rated a three, as did Time Warner (with People down 12.81%, Sports Illustrated down 14.71%, Fortune down 16.35% and Time down 20.04%). While acknowledging Time Warner's $8.9 billion debt and the rumors that it may spin off its magazines, you still rate their prospects higher than Forbes!

Specifically, for a publication that says its forecasts are going to focus on the present and the future, your review of Forbes Inc. includes the following: 1) The death of Malcom Forbes; 2) Gratuitous mention of unnamed competitors' claims that Forbes negotiates rates and inflates page counts. (For the record, Forbes negotiates no rates. While Forbes originated none of its page incentive plans, it has met every plan offered by its competitors. What's more, all Forbes incentive plans are detailed in its rate card.); and 3) Volunteers that ". . . there is still a lingering odor from the failure last year of the poorly conceived Egg." Where does that odor linger? With Advertising Age? How many other magazine groups have experienced failed start-ups that were not mentioned?

Your reporter made no mention of: 1) Forbes FYI, the one-year-old quarterly lifestyle supplement that just published its record issue; 2) Forbes' international success with the German monthly, Forbes von Burda, and the new Chinese venture, Forbes Zibenjua; and 3) The simple fact that Forbes is now No. 1 among all PIB magazines in total advertising pages.

Advertising Age is entitled to its own opinion concerning which publications are hot or not, but it does seem to me that your forecasting is flawed. If the consensus among magazine publishers is that "the good old days are gone," then I am at a loss to understand how biweekly Forbes could rank so low when it has just become the nation's No. 1 magazine in ad pages.

Forbes' gutsy editorial and quality circulation have produced a great advertising success story. If this success, patiently pursued and promoted over more than two decades, is not a solid indicator of probable future progress, then I'd be interested in learning the basis on which editors make their puzzling prognostications.

Hispanic print growing

Your Magazines in America 250th anniversary issue was a bold move, and certainly appropriate for the times. I wonder how, though, in looking toward the future, you could neglect to recognize the impact Spanish-language media are having in the marketplace.

Print, as a medium for targeting Hispanics in large numbers, is only just beginning to flourish and is fast becoming a valuable tool for national marketers. While it is certainly small, it is definitely a part of the total story regarding changes in media in the U.S., and merits recognition.

TAB ready to measure

In the Sept. 9 issue, you carried an observant editorial entitled, "The CPM benchmark under attack." We could not agree more with the comment that "we suspect a problem for non-traditional media will always be the lack of measurement. Most clients want some proof of performance, even if it is only how many pairs of eyes were exposed to the [ad]."

In fact, it was this need on the part of the advertising industry that brought about our reorganization some months ago to become the Traffic Audit Bureau for Media Measurement—a central source for the verification of all forms of out-of-home media. Most non-traditional media fall in this classification, and we have already audited ski-area displays and will shortly do the same for various in-store media forms, as well as a variety of others.

The TAB stands ready to tackle those auditable media not currently being certified so that CPM is not the only measurement of fulfillment and delivery.

Grammar ain't easy

In response to Douglas Groner's remarks (Letters, AA, Sept. 30) about the grammar in our "Home Theatre" ad, Ed Crowne, our proofreader of 10 years, replies:

1) The adverbial form "easily" is also "easy." See Webster's.

2) VCR's. Standard reference texts make it clear that this plural may be formed with or without the apostrophe at the discretion of the author. Consider "pj's."

3) Reference texts state unambiguously that collective nouns (such as "line") may take a singular or a plural verb depending on intended meaning.

4) Resolution of "as- . . . than" is more troublesome. A brief, preliminary examination gives little or no reason to reach a conclusion one way or the other.

In closing, we wish to thank Mr. Groner for his concern, and for comparing us to Frank Perdue. Mr. Perdue became quite successful cutting up his chickens. We consider it something of an honor to do as well as with words.

RECESSION REIGNS

No rebound in sight

As dollars vanish, one exec exclaims: 'I've never seen anything like this'

By Gary Levin

As if anybody didn't already know it, the recession has hit the business-to-business marketing community with a vengeance, and industry executives believe the changes it has wrought will become a permanent part of the business-to-business landscape.

A survey of advertisers and agencies conducted by Beta Research Corp. for Advertising Age and Business Marketing confirms the bleak picture many have painted for more than a year.

More than 60% of agency respondents say the recession has led clients to cut business-to-business media budgets this year, while another 26% say budgets are the same as in 1990.

Clients seem more optimistic—or at least less willing to own up to the recession's bite. More than 43% of clients surveyed report budget increases, while 41% say spending levels are flat and less than 15% say budgets are being cut.

"Our budgets are down over last year, but not as far as they could be because of new-product introductions," says Tom Mathie, manager of marketing communications for Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s distribution and controls business unit.

Still, that unit's total marketing budget is off 25% this year, he says.

Like many business marketers, Westinghouse is cutting media advertising and other areas it feels are less related to direct sales. In addition to media, allocations for trade shows and collateral efforts are suffering most, Mr. Mathie says.

"Because of the recession and the way marketing is being done these days, more resources of a firm like ours are moving toward marketing functions other than advertising," says John Casteel, manager of marketing communications at Dow Corning Corp.

Proportionately speaking, "more is going into direct marketing, more is going into trade shows and more into public relations," Mr. Casteel says.

But rather than increasing, budgets for those disciplines "are holding their own while [trade] advertising suffers a big hit," he says.

Indeed, more than 56.4% of the clients surveyed say business media advertising is now less effective than non-media marketing efforts.

Still, specialized business publications continue to rank at the top of the list of media getting the largest percentage increase by both clients and agencies, although many are consolidating their buys among fewer titles, according to survey results.

Steve Bjorkman

And contrary to Dow Corning's strategy, trade shows are mentioned most often—by nearly 20% of clients—as the most likely target for budget cuts.

Agency executives, normally ranked among the eternal optimists, are nearly uniform in their assessments of a troubled marketplace.

Since June, "I've noticed a lot of clients cutting out [budgets for] the rest of the year," says Lee Courtney, media planner and buyer for Mintz & Hoke, Avon, Conn. "They say '92 is going to come back, but once again I think that's probably not true."

"I've never seen anything like this in my life," says a blunt Fergus O'Daly, chairman-ceo at Poppe Tyson, New York, a business-to-business agency unit of Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt. "Here we have almost daily in the newspapers [reports of] complete turmoil. It seems like there's no bastion that's safe."

Worsening the near-term outlook is Mr. O'Daly's belief that business-to-business marketers "are often the last to come back to their budgets" following a recession because plant cutbacks result in reduced inventory.

"If the consumer market starts to move quickly, it's a little hard to start up a plant and move inventory" in a hurry, Mr. O'Daly says. That often leads to a four- or five-month lag until supplies can be boosted. "You don't advertise something you don't have to sell," he says.

After months of declines, spending levels appear to have flattened out at best, and even in must-have areas such as collateral and product

ABOUT THE SURVEY

To precisely gauge opinions on business-to-business media and marketing activities, Advertising Age and Business Marketing commissioned Beta Research Corp., Syosset, N.Y., to conduct a telephone survey this summer.

The randomly selected sample of 202 respondents, split evenly between advertisers and advertising agency executives, reflects a statistically projectable representation of industry opinion.

Tossing the schedule out the window

Cancel and shift clauses critical for clients, agencies in such a staggering ad market

By Joe Mandese

Ask a business press publisher how many ads are running in the next issue and chances are the answer will be, "We'll know when we print it."

In this environment, an insertion order doesn't necessarily translate into a page of paid advertising.

With most business advertisers feeling the recessionary pinch, their agencies are insisting on—and often getting—greater flexibility in their media commitments. The contingencies allow their clients to pull out at the last minute to shore up their bottom lines.

"There is a great deal of volatility in scheduling and there's a lot of shifting around of schedules," notes William Mackey, VP-director of media and planning for Rumrill-Hoyt, Rochester, N.Y.

According to a recent Beta Research Corp. survey of agency media executives conducted for Advertising Age and Business Marketing, three-quarters of the respondents say cancel and shift clauses were important elements of media plans.

Nearly two-thirds of the respondents say they exercise such clauses frequently.

Normally, advertisers who cancel ad schedules and fall below contracted order levels are forced to pay higher ad rates. But agency media executives say increasingly conciliatory business media reps frequently turn a blind eye in an effort to keep the client's business.

Steve Bjorkman

"There's a lot of weird stuff going on," adds Robin Donovan, VP-media director of Mason & Madison, New Haven, Conn.

By "weird stuff," Ms. Donovan means greater contract flexibility. She says the practice usually is implicit rather than overt.

"Publishers don't really want to publicize it. They want to make you feel like you're a special situation."

But most business media buyers say it's a universal trend.

"It really depends on how close you get to the contract fulfillment. If you're just a little shy of it, a lot of times the publisher will not bill you for the space that did not run. It depends on how far you've missed it," explains Tyler Schaeffer, VP-associate media director of FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York.

"If you miss a 250-page contract by 75 pages, that's one thing. If you miss 250 pages by 10 pages, I can't imagine a publisher short-rating you on the whole ball of wax," Mr. Schaeffer adds.

Mr. Schaeffer says some buyers now are inserting clauses in their insertion orders that give them contractual rights to cancel or shift their budgets—sometimes to other parts of the publisher's operations.

But business publishers say they're not detecting any significant changes in the wording of their media contracts.

"Contracts are a declaration of intent. And if you don't run, you get short-rated. I haven't heard of anyone who is giving up short-rating people who don't live up to their contracts," says American Business Press President John Emery. But he says ABP hasn't polled its membership recently on the topic.

While Penton Publishing hasn't revised its media contracts to include such clauses, Senior VP Jerome Neff has noticed more clients waiting until the last possible minute to commit to buys.

"It's safe to say that we have fewer and fewer long-term contracts," he says. "In the past, we may have had as much as 60% or 70% of our salesmen's space in an issue contracted for in advance. Now it may be 10% or 20%."

As a result, his sales force must spend more energy closing orders that remain open until the last minute.

"If that's had a direct impact on how many pages we carry, it's pretty difficult to measure," Mr. Neff says.

"But it has certainly has an impact on the amount of time that our salespeople can spend in front of customers selling the virtues of our magazines."

Whether written loopholes or implicit understandings, most buyers and sellers in the business press acknowledge that tight ad budgets and greater uncertainty over ad spending are leading to more flexibility and creativity in managing magazine ad contracts.

"I'm hearing so much creativity that my head is spinning," Ms. Donovan says. □

Riding the recession

What's the outlook for business-to-business media?

"Business-to-business marketing is moving away from [traditional] media advertising. . . . It's turning to forms of communication that are more targeted and, in some cases, more interpersonal, such as trade shows, and direct sales supported by direct mail, and sales promotions such as events and seminars."

"There will still be a place for the strong publication in any industry, but I don't think there'll be a place for three or four in each."

Published prices just don't rate

Advertisers are asking for—and getting—more bang for their ad buck

By Bradley Johnson

Trade books' rate cards don't rate the same respect they used to.

The economy has played a major role in rate card reduction. More than half of agency executives say rate discounting is more active now than before the recession, according to a Beta Research Corp. survey commissioned by Advertising Age and Business Marketing.

Left unsaid is whether those are negotiated discounts given to individual advertisers or deals such as frequency discounts or free premium positions offered to all comers.

Membership rules of American Business Press, a group that represents about 750 trade journals, prohibit offering space to one advertiser at a rate below that available to others.

But both cut-rate deals for individual customers and discount programs for all advertisers have become common in this recession.

Many publishers—including Cahners Publishing Co., the industry's biggest trade publisher, and Crain Communications Inc., whose titles include Advertising Age and Business Marketing—say they will not negotiate rates with individual advertisers.

"We do not negotiate rates," says Joe Cappo, Crain senior VP-group publisher and senior VP-publisher of Advertising Age. "It's a corporate policy that everybody pays the same published rates."

That doesn't mean everybody gets the same deal. Crain and Cahners, for example, both reward bigger advertisers with volume discounts and an assortment of value-added offerings (see related story on Page B-8). It's up to the advertiser to decide just what mix of extras offers the best deal.

"In magazine space buying and selling, rates are negotiable," says Richard Hamilton, senior VP-media director at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York. "Our ingoing belief is that off-card rate dealing of one sort or another is possible in a majority of cases" with business publications.

Even if a title won't budge on its official rate, Mr. Hamilton says, it often is willing to throw in a premium position or some other extra in the name of "value added."

For the advertiser, the end is the same—more bang for the buck—regardless of whether a deal is couched as a discount or a value-added program.

In the Ad Age/Business Marketing survey, 43.6% of media buyers surveyed say at least a fourth of their media placements carry a discount off published rates. More than a third of respondents say the average discount is 5% to 10%, including straight dollar negotiations and incentives, such as frequency discounts.

Three-fourths of the media buyers say the average discount is 20% or less.

The results reflect a sea change for trade magazines, says ABP President John Emery.

Discounting was "almost non-existent" in trade advertising until about five years ago, he says. But then negotiated rates, after spread-

Cornucopia of value-added options makes a lasting impression on eager advertisers

By Bradley Johnson

There's very little a media company won't do these days in the name of value-added services.

And advertisers are hooked.

Cahners Publishing Co. is working on a package for a key advertiser in which it will produce custom newsletters, prepare advertorials, print brochures, generate direct mail to the client's customers and dispatch editors to talk at client sales meetings. The package is the largest ever attempted by the trade publisher, says Chuck Moodhe, senior VP-general manager of Cahners' Chicago division. Costs for the services have yet to be negotiated.

Except for the advertorials, these efforts are only tangentially related to selling more ad pages. In the name of added value, the trade publishing giant thinks it can boost its client's business, make a buck recycling its own resources and, over the long run, sell more ads by building a relationship.

"We're making our resources available to people to help them increase the sales of their product as opposed to just giving them some cut-rate way to run their advertising," Mr. Moodhe says.

"This is not something that's going to give [us] more space in the October issue. Are we going to get more advertising space out of them this year? I would think so," he says.

Opting for added values

Do you expect to pay more for value-added options or do you expect them to be offered at no additional cost (percentage of advertiser respondents)?

CYNTHIA WATSON

At its worst, value added is simply a euphemism for "discount."

At its best, it taps a publisher's resources to give clients ideas, products or services they wouldn't otherwise have—all ways of stretching a client's marketing budget.

Clients like that.

The Beta Research Corp. survey of business advertisers for Advertising Age and Business Marketing indicates many business advertisers are so enamored with value-added options that they're willing to pay extra for them.

More than 75% of clients responding to the survey say they don't expect to pay more for value-added options. However, if it came down to a choice between no value-added options or those offered at an additional cost, 47.5% say they'd rather pay for them than do without.

"I really encourage our agency to go after the added value, the merchandising, [the] promotional side," says Marty Brandt, communications manager at Sun Microsystems, the computer workstation marketer. "I am not as interested in knocking the price off as I am in getting some added value."

Mr. Brandt and his agency, Anderson & Lembke, San Francisco, are considering separate offers from International Data Group's CIO and CMP Publications' InformationWeek to sponsor luncheons that would bring together Sun and its customers. "It's a chance to get some feedback," Mr. Brandt says.

Sponsoring lunches, cocktail parties and seminars are among the ing from broadcast to consumer magazines, began infiltrating segments of the business press, Mr. Emery says.

Trade discounting took off with the recession. Mr. Cappo figures half of business magazines "are wheeling or dealing their pages in some way," he says.

Chuck Moodhe, a Cahners senior VP, estimates 25% of trade publication ads are being written with rates negotiated off the card.

The fiercest discounting—including cutting special rate deals with individual advertisers—comes from second-tier publications, publishing and advertising executives say.

But pitching price as a title's main virtue doesn't necessarily go over with advertisers.

"There's a damaged goods mentality there" when a magazine offers a cut-rate deal, says Marty Brandt, communications manager at Sun Microsystems. "If there's something fundamentally unstable about the publication or the audience they deliver, discounting it another 10% or 20% isn't going to make it much more attractive."

'When we see heavy discounting, we start to question what's going on'

Major discounting can signal that something is amiss, advertisers say.

"When we see heavy discounting, we start to question what's going on," says Cheryl Coultas, an account supervisor at Dahlin Smith White, Salt Lake City. "We want to advertise in the healthiest publications."

Though the recession may be ending, discounting shows no signs of waning.

Robert Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, says trade publications overall will be lucky to get a 3% to 5% rate increase for 1992, about even with this year.

Trade publishing, with the exception of generally healthy pockets, such as computer titles, remains depressed, meaning continued pressure for discounting to generate revenues.

"As our beloved president would say, 'Can we put the genie back in the bottle?' " Mr. Cappo says. "I'm not sure we can." □

'Candy shop'

more popular ways trade magazines cater to their clients.

Other ideas on the value-added menu include marketing research, such as testing ads with focus groups, and offering services at trade shows, including distributing client brochures, providing premiums and even putting up outdoor boards promoting the client.

"It's all negotiable, and it's only limited to the clients' and publications' imagination," says Cheryl Coultas, account supervisor at Dahlin Smith White, Salt Lake City.

Some media companies, including Crain Communications Inc., publisher of Advertising Age and Business Marketing, dole out a certain dollar amount of value-added benefits with set formulas based on how much an advertiser spends. Others, such as Cahners, are more flexible—leaving the door open to hard bargaining by the advertiser.

'I really encourage our agency to go after the added value'

"We have to focus the package to meet the needs of the advertiser," says Ira Herenstein, exec VP-computer and communications group at McGraw-Hill.

"One might want the stock report . . . one might want mailing labels, one might want the breakfasts, and somebody might want them all. If you give us enough advertising, it's an open candy shop," he says.

With advertisers seeking out value-added deals, small publishing companies are hard-pressed to match the resources of a giant. Mr. Moodhe boasts that Cahners—with its massive data base, printing clout and advertising and editorial resources—can create co-op ad programs, translate ads to reach foreign audiences and even print sales materials cheaper than a client can do on its own.

The emphasis on value added is an outgrowth of the recession, which forced publishers to find new ways to sell ads and generate revenues. But value added won't disappear with the recession.

"I don't think we ever really looked at our resources" until this recession, Mr. Moodhe says. "It's forced us to take a good, hard look at how we operate. We're learning all of the resources or talents that we have had available. We're enjoying our economies of scale and learning of their asset value for the first time."

But advertisers, accustomed to getting value-added services free, have mixed feelings about paying for the passel of services offered by Cahners.

"My problem is, as a buyer, I don't expect to pay for value added," but think it should be thrown in at no additional cost, says Ms. Coultas, whose agency places ads for Intel Corp., the semiconductor giant, in Cahners titles.

Still, she says she believes advertisers will be willing to pay for some of Cahners' non-advertising services.

Although Cahners has expertise in some areas—such as research and printing—tied to the business of magazine publishing, its ability in other areas like creating direct mail must be proven, Ms. Coultas says.

"I would definitely be interested in the programs they have available," particularly in research and printing, she says. "[But] I'm skeptical about the creative services that they may be offering." □

Riding the recession

How have your dealings with the media evolved during the recession?

"We don't see much going off rate cards.

"We're seeing much more bundling discount structures with sister publications [within one company]. If you advertise in one, you get a discount in another, so if you have six insertions in three different publications, you're effectively earning the 18-times rate.

R. Owens

"The other mechanism is bundling additional services with basic advertising. Traditional things you see are merchandising to distribution networks, such as sending out copies of the publication with a cover letter from the publishers saying, 'We want you to know that Poqet is running an ad this month and you'll be getting leads for your sales force or dealer network. They're also doing 'did you buy?' studies and follow-ups."
—Robert Owens, director of marketing communications, Poqet Computer Corp.

"One thing we hadn't seen before is that more than one publication offered to give us the findings of specialized research reports they commissioned at their own expense as an enticement to advertise.

"They will commission a special study on the [software] industry, or on how business leaders make their MIS decisions. When they say, 'We would like to present this research to you to use for your own marketing purposes,' it is very interesting to us. It's tempting. This is a new market offering they're making now that wasn't always there."
—Karen Buttermore, marketing communications manager, KnowledgeWare

K. Buttermore

"We've probably had a greater emphasis on marketing public relations than before the recession, making sure to cover our bases across all the trade media with case histories and new products application stories. We've had very good results in terms of product interest and leads.

R. Dinsdale

"I can't say those [magazines] we're dealing with have shown a whole lot in discounts. Should they? Should we offer discounts to our customers in tough times?

"Probably not. We have to make an honest buck and so do they."

Slowing down the hemorrhaging

Marketers shift, now favor balance of trade books, shows and direct mail

By Betsy Spethmann

Business marketer retrenchment is helping trade publications weather the media recession.

Many companies this year have boosted their reliance on specialized business publications, according to a recent Beta Research Corp. survey of business marketers for Advertising Age and Business Marketing.

Although more surveyed advertisers have boosted direct-response efforts than business press placements, trade press received the single largest budgetary increase among the respondents.

Nearly 49% of respondents say their companies this year earmarked a larger percentage of marketing budgets for specialized business titles, compared with 53.5% bumping up direct-response activities. However, almost 29% say ads in trade books are getting the biggest percentage increase of total budgets.

That represents a reversal for business marketers, who for the past 10 years have cut the percentage they earmark for trade ads, says Peggy Nordeen, president of Starmark, a Chicago business marketing agency.

Recent mergers and reorganizations have made trade books more valuable to keep awareness high industrywide, when marketers can't be sure who their individual prospects are, she says. When marketers know their prospects, direct mail can be most effective, she says.

A recent survey by Starmark shows executives consider media ads the No. 1 tactic for "marketing to the recovery in 1992." Direct marketing and trade shows ranked Nos. 5 and 7, respectively, out of eight tactics.

This year's shifts in budget roughly correspond to respondents' perceptions of which media and marketing tactics are most effective in selling products.

When asked which three media and marketing areas were most effective in their ability to result in a sale, 64.5% cite trade books; 45.5% say direct response; and 42.6% cite trade shows.

The business-to-business tactic suffering most from the recession is trade shows, with 19.8% of executives saying trade show budgets have been cut more than any other tool, and 16.8% citing the economy as a reason for the cuts.

While marketers favored trade shows and direct mail in the '80s, they're now "seeing a need for balance, looking at each tool as part of the whole and better understanding each tactic's role," Ms. Nordeen says.

She cites three reasons marketers are relying more on trade ads. With more companies developing "buying committees," it's hard to directly target all the individuals who influence purchases.

High turnover among customers and prospects—exacerbated by the recession—also makes it tough to target individuals.

And aggressive marketers are taking advantage of a recession-induced marketing lull to reach prospects while competitors cut trade advertising, Ms. Nordeen says.

Marketers likely will devote more money to image and brand-building ads as the recession fades, says Steve Trygg, chairman-chief creative officer for Anderson & Lembke, New York.

Still, the return to more trade ads hasn't yet been a boon for publications. "The recession is hitting business publications less seriously than consumer books, but it's still serious," says John Emery, president of American Business Press.

Total ad pages from January through June this year are down 11% compared with the same period last year, according to MMS-Rome Reports, which tracks 692 business-to-business publications in 87 industries.

The continued growth of direct mail is a boon for publishers, who profit from renting their subscription lists. But that's "a mixed blessing—if all the advertising shifted to direct mail, there wouldn't be any lists to sell," Mr. Emery says.

Marketers will continue to use direct mail as part of integrated marketing strategies, Mr. Trygg says.

Trade ads and direct mail—especially using a trade publication's mailing list—are a strong combination, Ms. Nordeen says. □

Client caravan tries direct route

Budgets show driving force of direct-response efforts

When it comes to marketing dollars in today's economy, business marketers are taking the direct route to sales.

Of the clients responding to the Beta Research Corp. survey for Advertising Age and Business Marketing, 53.5% say direct-response activities are receiving a greater percentage of their budgets this year. Among agency executive respondents, 60.4% say direct mail accounted for a greater share of billings this year vs. last.

Further evidence of marketers' emphasis on sales-directed efforts is reflected in the emphasis on dealer/-distributor materials, with 49.5% of clients indicating a larger percentage of their total business marketing dollars are being directed there this year.

All that tells a sorry tale for specialized business publications, the traditional budget leader, which ranked third among client budget increases.

Only 48.5% of business marketers say trade magazines will garner a greater share of their marketing budgets.

But compared with other media, business publishers should feel lucky. General business magazines are receiving increases at only 12.9% of the responding client companies this year. Even local/regional business publications bested the general business books, receiving increases at 17.8% of respondent companies.

Results from agency respondents, which ranked media options only, mirror client company opinions.

More than 60% say clients are bumping up spending in direct mail vs. the 44.6% who say specialized magazines will receive a bigger chunk of their clients' budgets. Another 33.7% of agency respondents say clients are directing a larger percentage of their budgets to other direct-response or data-base activities.

Video, another direct-sales medium, is receiving a greater percentage of clients' budgets at 21.8% of the agencies surveyed.

Again taking a big hit are other non-trade book forms of business press. Clients are directing more of their marketing dollars to local or regional business publications at 17.8% of responding agencies, while general business magazines are only seeing increases at 5% of the agencies polled.

Declining inquiry rates turn up the pressure

But phone calls and faxes put a dent in traditional response-measuring method

By Joe Mandese

Trade publishers increasingly are coming under fire to prove performance as advertisers focus more than ever on the quality and number of inquiries their ad placements generate.

"Media is becoming more accountable," notes Tyler Schaeffer, VP-associate media director of FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York. "If we can prove that it's working, that's a good sign for increasing media budgets. And if it ain't working, let's cancel it and find something that is working."

As a result, Mr. Schaeffer says there's an increasing emphasis on media that can provide a direct response. Although communicating an image is more important than generating a direct response to some advertisers, accountability now is a factor in both, he says.

'If it ain't working, let's cancel it and find something that is working'

The problem is the number of inquiries generated by reader service numbers, the main measure of responsiveness, "is shrinking at an alarming rate and there's a lot of panic going on," adds Robin Donovan, VP-media director at Mason & Madison, New Haven, Conn.

Ms. Donovan says declining inquiry rates are putting pressure on agencies trying to rationalize buys in the business press.

However, the trend may have less to do with the effectiveness of the medium than with changes in technology and the way in which potential clients seek information, she says.

A confidential survey conducted recently by a business publisher in the engineering industry seems to confirm as much.

Asked how they prefer to follow up on a product they read about in a magazine, only 28% of readers surveyed cited reader service cards, while 64% cited phone calls and 8% sent faxes directly to the advertiser.

"Inquiries started to dwindle because people don't want to use reader service cards. They want direct response, too," she says.

"They want to use telephones and the people who get the phone calls don't tell the publication and the publication has no way of tracking it unless it's a reader service card." □

Logistics snarl integrated efforts

Coordinated programs win high marks, but getting go-ahead a problem

By Kate Bertrand

Integrated marketing—the buzzword of business publishers and advertisers—is experiencing growing pains.

Both media sellers and clients say they want to provide it, but there's disagreement over whether either side is prepared to handle it.

All agree it's the key to remaining on the cutting edge in business marketing.

For marketers, having coordinated strategies and messages is becoming increasingly important as budgets feel the recessionary pinch, says James Reilly, general manager of marketing services and communications with IBM Corp. "Corporations are all under pressure . . . to demonstrate a return on the communications investment."

For publishers, it's a need to follow the advertiser.

"Something's changing out there in the marketplace," says Ira Herenstein, exec VP-computer and communications group at McGraw-Hill. "The new game is to use [our resources] in focusing on advertisers' and customers' needs," he says.

"Business publishing is changing like our customers' businesses are changing," adds Cahners Publishing Co. Exec VP Frank Sibley.

"We have customers who say to us, 'We want to partner with you. We will take the time to explain to you what our broader marketing goals are. We expect you to come back with a well-thought-out presentation that is far beyond three titles that we ought to be placing print advertising in.' "

Despite some confusion over definitions (see related story on Page B-29), business marketers are clear in intent: They expect to buy more than just ad space from publishers.

In a recent survey conducted by Beta Research for Advertising Age and Business Marketing, 82.2% of agency respondents and 61.4% of advertiser respondents say it's "very" or "somewhat" important for media sales reps to combine media and marketing options when making presentations.

Despite advertiser demand for integrated marketing and publishers' willingness to provide integration in some form, the corporate organization of marketers and media vendors has hindered its implementation.

"There haven't been many [media] people knocking our door down with integrated packages so far," says Mike Neavill, PR and advertising director at AT&T Microelectronics. "I don't think the media really have it together yet, and the ad agencies can't really pull it off yet either."

Buying and selling

media "have become a problem," says Jerry Bryan, director of corporate communications with Sverdrup Corp., an engineering/architecture company. "The classic industrial marketer had an ad manager. He smoked a short cigar and had a belly overlapping his belt."

Today's industrial marketer is organized differently, Mr. Bryan says. Either the marketer has one person supervising all marketing communications activities or those functions are divided among various departments such as trade shows, direct marketing, etc.

"For a while the publisher's rep could deal with that. But now the situation on the publisher's side has also changed from one product to sell to up to a dozen products to sell," he says. "So you've got more products to put against more buyers, and somehow the system then has to be altered."

In the opinion of advertisers and agency executives, much of that change should take place at the media company.

In the Ad Age/Business Marketing survey, 56.4% of agencies and 46.5% of advertiser respondents say they don't believe media sales reps typically have the authority to negotiate multimedia placements.

Some on the media side challenge the notion they're unable to handle integrated deals, charging that internal power struggles at advertisers complicate the sale.

Some marketers, such as Dow Plastics, have centralized marketing communications decision-making by business unit or market segment.

At Dow, the communications specialist in charge of a segment such as consumer electronics develops and executes a communications strategy that supports the segment's overall marketing strategy. The Dow specialists control their own budgets and work closely with multiple agencies to select, buy and evaluate media for their market segments.

The result is consistent, coordinated marketing communications across advertising, trade shows, public relations and all the other communications vehicles, says Mike Butcher, director of communications.

AT&T Microelectronics put a similar organizational structure in place last year.

"I think companies are [reorganizing] a lot," Mr. Neavill says. "They recognize the synergies of this, and that it makes good business sense."

However, not all companies are prepared to handle integrated marketing, Mr. Reilly admits.

"Some companies are simply not organized to do it. You simply can't do it if your organization doesn't permit it. If the budgets are dispersed, it's going to be very tough to integrate," he says.

Some publishers are responding to advertisers' corporate restructuring by creating new integrated marketing sales programs.

International Data Group in September deployed a special sales force to consult with advertisers about integrated-marketing options. The national account reps provide an overview of IDG's services and act as part of a selling team composed of corporate and individual publication sales reps, says Erica Baccus, VP of IDG's Marketing Services division.

"We'll be talking to senior-level marketing people on the client side. They're the ones who are really looking to maximize their marketing budgets and they're looking for other avenues to market their products," she says.

Media sellers' ability to communicate their offerings and advertisers' readiness to embrace them may prove to be the business marketing litmus test of the '90s.

On both sides, "they'll either learn fast or their competitors will eat their lunch," Mr. Bryan says. "The game has changed. If you're on top, you win." □

One step beyond

Integrated marketing—a.k.a. fusion marketing, contact management, one-voice marketing, seamless communications—has almost as many definitions as it has names.

Marketers, ad agencies and media vendors each tend to have their own idea of what it means.

Agencies define integrated marketing as the ability to provide communications services beyond print advertising, such as sales collateral or direct-mail campaigns.

Business press publishers, in turn, think of it as new-age merchandising or perhaps as combination rates on print ads in various titles.

For the marketer, though, integrated marketing involves much more than print. Advertising, PR, direct mail, research, telemarketing, trade shows, sales promotion and training—in fact, all the marketing communications activities—play a role.

James Reilly, general manager of marketing services and communications with IBM Corp., offers a working definition from the marketer's point of view: Integrated marketing allows marketers to present a consistent look and feel to a specific target audience.

"It's basically the orchestration of the various communication skills or activities that are available to you, all designed to effectively deliver your message to some defined audience," Mr. Reilly believes.

And it's a trend on which marketers will build throughout the decade.

"As you look out into the 1990s, the new issue will be to raise the effectiveness, raise the threshold of impact, of all of the communications activities," he says.

To do that, agencies, media companies and advertisers first must come to terms with their terms.

Trade events losing focus—to move product

By Debra Aho

Steve Bjorkman

It's time for marketers to take trade shows more seriously.

Too often companies look at trade shows as training grounds for junior salespeople, junkets for top performers or a chance to check out competitors and "fly the company flag."

"Those are ancillary reasons to be at a trade show," says Darel Hamilton, communications director of the Trade Show Bureau. The primary reason is to move product, he says.

Mr. Hamilton says few companies look at their trade-show activities as an integrated part of their marketing efforts, explaining why trade activities are being cut in tight economic times.

"Those increasing their trade-show activities, unfortunately, are anomalies," he says.

According to a Beta Research Corp. survey commissioned by Advertising Age and Business Marketing, 56.4% of marketers surveyed say trade shows will receive the same or a smaller percentage of their total business-to-business marketing budget in 1991.

Trade-show activities also are down because marketers haven't put in the mechanisms to evaluate effectiveness.

"They are [spending] a chunk of money that is very directed to a single activity. If that activity is not measured and documented in terms of results, they're hesitant to continue with it," says Peggy Nordeen, president of Starmark, Chicago.

"Too many companies define a great show as a stack of 500 business cards; 500 cards are not a lead. If you get 500 cards, you're in trouble," Mr. Hamilton says. He attributes a 33% turnover of first-time trade-show exhibitors to lack of planning, marketing and evaluation.

Marketers should promote their participation in

Riding the recession

If your marketing budget suddenly increased by 10%, where would you put the additional funds?

"I think we would look to do more advertising of our new lines of business in defense high technology, systems integration and environmental services fields.

B. Reinike

"I also think we would try and focus on the select media that [address] that line of business, such as trade publications, rather than general consumer publications.

"If it is an electronics need, we'd put those ads into electronics trade magazines rather than those that speak in general to the interests of [targeted prospects]."

information, "people are trying to get away with [using] last year's brochure," Mr. O'Daly says.

"There's almost a complete lack of spending in image or brand awareness [advertising]," he says. "Whatever dollars are spent, it's in actual product sales."

Because business-to-business advertisers "have a tougher problem showing the direct relationship of advertising to sales, they don't feel much of a problem cutting advertising," observes Steve Trygg, chairman-chief creative officer at Anderson & Lembke, New York.

"Clients still have a hard time justifying media advertising to top management. It's much easier to justify what could be considered direct-sales efforts."

"A lot of companies . . . have to look at the long-term effect," says Robin Donovan, VP-media director at Mason & Madison, New Haven, Conn. "Instead [they] are saying, 'We didn't advertise for a year, and we're not out of business yet, so why do we need to?' "

But that thinking has proved a boon to the few who remain.

"A lot of smart marketers who stay in the game are the only guys who own those pages," Mr. O'Daly says.

Reflecting the lack of image advertising, clients and agencies say the ad spending cuts were most acute in general business magazines, such as Business Week and Industry Week, as opposed to vertical books serving specific industries. Also feeling the hit were local or regional magazines and newspapers.

But more targeted business publications, like consumer magazines, are facing an intense shakeout.

"I don't think it's the death knell for the publishing business, but I don't think you will have four or five publications serving an industry," Mr. Casteel says.

For those not being cut from schedules, discounting and other forms of rate negotiation are nearly universal. One buyer says certain competitive categories lead to "ridiculously low rates," and that's likely to continue even after the worst of the recession is over.

"I think people have sort of seen the fun of getting a bargain," Ms. Donovan says. "I think they're going to be looking for it with a much more jaded eye than before.

"We're having to be accountable for how a buy is more efficient. If they have double the budget, they're going to want you to give them double the shows aggressively with direct mail, telemarketing, print advertising and calls from top executives to executives at client and prospect companies, he says.

They should define objectives in terms of sales-lead development and closings for each show; develop more sophisticated sales-lead tracking; compare results with objectives and other shows; and adjust trade-show activities accordingly.

MasterCard International's lead tracking system has allowed the marketer to make recessionary cuts while focusing on the shows it considers most effective, says Maureen Cronin, director-member relations. After each show, MasterCard analyzes attendance, costs and quality of attendees. Then it decides whether to alter its participation or cut the show, she says. MasterCard has cut about 15% of the shows at which it exhibits but has kept its budget level, devoting more money to key shows.

Because MasterCard's sales force is small, Ms. Cronin says, shows maximize salespeople's time and energy.

Mr. Hamilton says trade shows offer an opportunity to cut into the costs of field sales forces, not business media. He touts his group's statistics citing trade-show-generated leads are 70% less expensive to close than cold sales calls.

Despite paring budgets, many marketers still see trade shows as effective marketing components.

More than 42% of those responding to the Ad Age/Business Marketing survey say trade shows are the best way to make a sale, behind only direct response and specialized business publications in effectiveness.

"We're allies of the business press," not opponents, Mr. Hamilton says. "[Marketing managers] who integrate their efforts will not have their budgets bloodied."

Apple Computer is planning an integrated marketing campaign around a trade show, using advertising and direct marketing to tell prospective attendees about Apple before the show rather than depending on the trade show to do all the work. It also has set measurable objectives for the shows it attends, analyzed results and developed a communications plan to reach sales leads.

The drive to become more sophisticated comes at a troubling time for trade shows.

Tradeshow Week reports show attendance fell 2.5% in second quarter 1991, compared with the same period in 1990, the biggest drop since 1971. Exhibitor commitments were up only 0.3% in the same period. Darlene Gudea, the newsletter's publisher-editor in chief, predicts no growth until first quarter 1992.

When recovery does occur, attitudes toward trade shows will have changed permanently, Ms. Nordeen says.

"Once companies are used to [justifying marketing expenditures], it takes more than an expanded budget to get them back into trade shows. There will be hesitation to go back with as much verve and vigor as in the past."

Until marketers re-evaluate their objectives at trade shows, Mr. Hamilton says, budgets will continue to be pared when companies look for cuts.

"The majority of exhibitors are still just [business] card collectors," he says. □ bargain," she says.

Magazines are presenting "a lot of incredible offers," says John Keck, VP-director of media and research at The Juhl Agency, South Bend, Ind. "It's too bad it took a recession to get them to be creative" with merchandising support, promotions and other value-added services.

Mr. Courtney says he sees a fundamental change taking place. "I don't know if [rate] negotiation will ever be as severe as it is now, but it'll be part of the process."

Increased accountability isn't new, of course, but it is becoming far more crucial to business magazines. "They have to be more than a page in a magazine," Mr. O'Daly says. Publishers must become more marketing-oriented, provide research, answer inquiries and offer telemarketing services to clients.

But even if non-media marketing methods gain more prominence, Messrs. Trygg and Keck believe that the reliance on media will be fundamentally unchanged even beyond the recession.

"There are still problems of justifying [media ads]," Mr. Trygg says. "But in their hearts we know management will approve budgets for advertising if the money is there," and he says encouraging signs are evident for 1992. □

Budgetary boosts on hold, and agencies feel the pinch

Asked whether total 1991 business marketing and advertising budgets will increase, decrease or stay the same vs. 1990, a majority of client respondents say their budgets will stay flat or decline.

■ SETTING THE AGENDA

Consumer doubletalk makes companies wary

'Preferring' to buy green isn't proven by sales

By Scott Hume

Consumers say they want environmentally friendly products and will back up that desire in the grocery aisles, even if that means paying more.

But can manufacturers afford to believe them?

That remains one of the major questions yet to be answered in the green-marketing revolution.

The first phase of that revolution is complete: Consumers have been educated to better understand the environmental problems posed by some products and packaging.

The second phase—convincing consumers to change their attitudes toward products depending on their environmental friendliness—appears near completion.

But will consumers in fact do what they say they will: seek and purchase green products?

That third phase is just beginning, and many marketers are entering it more with uncertainty than confidence.

"Like everyone else, we're looking for the right answers to consumers' environmental concerns. No one's really sure which way to jump, but we know we have to move forward. Consumers want us to," says Charles Rath, exec VP-marketing at Wendy's International.

The No. 4 hamburger chain has moved to recycled paper napkins, bags instead of boxes for children's meals and collection and recycling of corrugated products.

"It's an investment, sure, but you can't look at it in terms of return on investment. You have to do it because we all need to be better citizens," Mr. Rath says. "It's a basic social responsibility."

For Wendy's and scores of other companies making changes intended to help the environment, the belief that environmental responsibility is now a corporate function is based on a growing body of research that overwhelmingly shows consumers want those changes and will repay marketers' investments by accepting higher prices.

"American Consumers: From Brown to Green," a study conducted last year by Roper Organization for S.C. Johnson & Son, reveals the average consumer would pay 6.6% more for a green version of a product (see related story at right).

Although the study indicates a limited amount of environmental activity by consumers, it shows they believe strongly that manufacturers should make pro-environment changes.

For example, 46% of those polled say they regularly recycle bottles and cans, 26% recycle newspapers, 14% regularly buy products made from or packaged in recycled material and 16% say they avoid buying products from companies they consider not environmentally responsible.

However, nearly 75% of the consumers polled say they believe business must be forced by government to develop environmentally safe products.

Other research studies paint a picture of a consuming public that at least has good intentions, if not actions.

"We're in a double-dip recession, and consumers are not willing to pay more even if they tell pollsters they are."

In Reader's Digest's "1991 Environmental Study," based on questionnaires completed by 831 readers, 98% say they're personally willing to change their behavior and buying habits in order to ensure a cleaner world.

Asked if they're willing to pay more, 85% of the sample say they'd accept cost increases for less-polluting detergents and soaps; 82% would pay more for biodegradable plastic packaging; 79% would pay extra for gasoline that's one-third less polluting to the air; 78% would pay more for aerosol products producing one-third less air pollution.

"Environment USA '91," a survey jointly conducted by Golin/Harris Communications and Angus Reid Group, produced similar results. Of the 2,000 U.S. adults polled by telephone, 74% say they consider environmental protection a priority, even if it means slower economic growth.

Majorities of these respondents also claim a willingness to pay more for environmentally friendly products: 59% say they would pay 25¢ more per gallon of gas to cut air pollution; 55% would pay 50% more for garbage collection to pay for safe long-term disposal; 76% say they'd pay 10% more for an "environmentally 'green' grocery product."

In fact, most consumers believe they will have to pay more for green products.

According to a telephone survey of 300 adults conducted in May by the research department of Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, 28.6% say they're "willing to make drastic changes in my lifestyle to help the environment," and 67.1% agreed that "environmentally friendly products are often expensive."

That perception remains the major stumbling block for the environmental movement, says Gerald Celente, director of the Socio-Economic Research Institute of America and author of Trend Tracking.

"I hold no stock in polls that claim people are willing to spend more," Mr. Celente says. "People say what they think they are expected to say, but not what they can afford to do.

"The green movement is stalling. Consumers are simply not responding to it because economic interests outweigh environmental interests. We're in a double-dip recession, and consumers are not willing to pay more even if they tell pollsters they are," he says.

"Has the disposable diaper market taken a pounding? No. Show us one mass-market product that consumers have shown they'll pay more for [because it protects the environment] and we'll change our opinions," Mr. Celente says. "But we don't see it."

At least one manufacturer of a "green" product agrees.

Magic American Corp. last year introduced EarthRite, a six-item line of non-polluting, non-toxic and biodegradable cleaning products. VP Scott Zeilinger says the company acted on that part of the research that shows consumer interest, but not consumers' supposed willingness to pay more.

"We believe the consumer wants to do the right thing, however, without sacrifice to their pocketbooks and product performance," he says. "That's why we made sure EarthRite was priced competitively. They're not gourmet, ecological catalog items.

"With the launch of any new product, if you want to win the hearts of consumers, you have to make it easy for them. You have to take away any objections, and higher cost is still an objection with most consumers," Mr. Zeilinger says.

"Launching EarthRite, we relied on a belief in human nature, not in the Roper poll." □

What separates true blues from basic browns

Like most things, there's no black & white definition of the green consumer.

"American Consumers: From Brown to Green," a study conducted last year by Roper Organization for household products marketer S.C. Johnson & Son, indicates viewing consumers simply as being green or not green is out of the question.

Based on in-person interviews with 1,413 adults, the survey divides U.S. consumers into five distinct shades of environmental commitment and buying behavior:

■ "True-Blue Greens" account for 11% of the population. They are the most affluent and the most involved in pro-environment practices. They're willing to pay an average of 7.4% more for the eight green products (recycled paper products, less-polluting gasoline, etc.) featured in the poll.

■ "Greenback Greens" also constitute 11% of the population. They are the youngest group and the biggest environmental spenders, saying they'd be willing to pay 19.6% more for environmentally friendly products.

■ "Sprouts," a swing group, account for 26% of the population and display both pro and con attitudes about the environment. On average, they say they'd be willing to pay 4.8% more.

■ "Grousers" make up 24% of the whole. They aren't very involved in environmental activities, mainly because they say others aren't either. They'd be willing to pay 4.4% more.

■ "Basic Browns" are the final 28% of the population. As the category title indicates, they don't believe individuals can make a difference in improving the environment, and they aren't interested in making an effort. Still, they say they'd spend 3.1% more, roughly the rate of inflation, for green products.

Dominic Cadbury says he finds confectionery brands difficult to make global.

Global potential sweet to Cadbury

Cadbury Schweppes is aiming to expand market share globally in both beverages and confections through joint ventures and acquisitions. The effort is being led by Group Chief Executive Dominic Cadbury, 51, who spoke to European Editor Laurel Wentz about the $5.3 billion marketer's plans.

Advertising Age: Where do you see Cadbury Schweppes heading in the next few years?

Mr. Cadbury: We continue to grow in our chosen fields of confectionery and refreshment beverages. I don't see the company moving outside those product areas because that's where our heritage is and that's where we've put up a good performance in recent years.

ONE ON ONE

AA: Your soft-drink businesses—Schweppes, Canada Dry, Crush—are international, but your chocolate brands are more local. Will that change?

Mr. Cadbury: Branded confectionery has been with us since the '30s. It's more difficult to change the composition of [that] market because people have grown up with these brands. There are markets where I think it would be very difficult for Cadbury to penetrate as an international brand.

AA: You don't see yourselves taking on Mars and Hershey in the U.S.?

Mr. Cadbury: We bought a considerable business in the States, but in the end judged that our best route was to franchise our business to Hershey. That delivered a lot more value than we were able to see looking ahead in an all-out contest with Hershey and Mars.

AA: You launched colas recently in Spain and Australia. Do you plan to enter the cola wars against Coke and Pepsi?

Mr. Cadbury: We only launched a cola where we don't have access to one, either Coke or Pepsi, to fill out our range. It's never going to be a major activity, and we have no intention of trying to become a player in the cola wars.

AA: How are you becoming a more global beverage marketer?

Mr. Cadbury: What we've done in refreshment beverages is to expand our range and broaden it from the pretty

Top ad spenders: Unilever, P&G

By Julie Skur Hill

For the fourth consecutive year, Unilever, Procter & Gamble Co. and Nestle have retained their rankings as the world's top three advertisers outside the U.S.

Unilever, doling out $1.4 billion throughout 25 countries in 1990, leads the fifth annual Advertising Age survey of leading ad spenders outside the U.S. (See charts starting on Page S-6.)

In comparing spending to 1989 in countries where Ad Age obtained data for both 1990 and 1989, the Anglo-Dutch conglomerate increased its outlay 16.8% from the previous year to nip archrival P&G, which boosted its ad expenditures 14.6%.

P&G spent $1.1 billion in 20 countries outside the U.S., breaking the $1 billion barrier for the first time.

Nestle, the Vevey, Switzerland-based food giant, spent $603.5 million in 21 nations.

When U.S. spending was included, Cincinnati-based P&G emerged as the leading advertiser worldwide, investing a whopping $3.4 billion.

Philip Morris Cos., New York, followed, spending $2.7 billion worldwide. Outside its home country, Philip Morris spent $511.2 million in advertising in 17 countries, placing fifth.

PSA Peugeot-Citroen, Paris, tallying $597.1 million in 11 countries, supplanted fellow French auto marketer Renault, Paris, as the No. 4 advertiser outside the U.S. Renault fell to No. 7, at $442 million in nine countries.

When U.S. spending is included, P&G becomes the top global advertiser.

Auto marketers dominate the rest of the Top 10.

Toyota Motor Corp., Toyota City, Japan, ranked sixth, spending $458.5 million in 10 countries; Fiat, Turin, Italy, tallied $440.9 million in seven countries for eighth place, and General Motors Corp., Detroit, spent $409 million, putting it 10th.

Canon, Tokyo, representing the only marketer ranked between No. 6 through No. 10

Reversal of 'Fortune'

Focus changes from local to int'l edition

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Time Warner has abandoned its European strategy of launching local-language editions of Fortune and instead will focus on aggressively promoting Fortune International.

When the U.S. publisher decided to negotiate Fortune joint ventures in all the major European markets to exploit the 1992 economic unification of Europe, the company had no idea the concept would flop before the end of 1991.

"The execution of the strategy was flawed, but I don't think that means the strategy is flawed," said James B. Hayes, New York-based publisher of Fortune. "We'll do better next time. We have not walked away from it, battered and beaten though we are."

European business publishing experts say the two main problems were clashes with local joint-venture partners or potential partners and the difficulty of competing for circulation and ad revenue against firmly entrenched local business magazines, especially during an economic recession.

Only two of the monthly European editions got off the ground—Fortune France, a joint venture with Hachette, and Fortune Italia, in partnership with Arnoldo Mondadori Editore. Both closed after two years. In Germany, negotiations with three publishers failed to produce a partner. A deal to do Fortune in Spain with Hachette fell apart, and the edition was never launched.

After local editions flopped, Fortune International is the magazine's focal point.

Mr. Hayes said he has a clear idea of why Fortune France and Fortune Italia failed.

Fortune's French partner wanted to publish a lifestyle magazine, not a management tool, he said.

"We did not want to

Notes and sources: Advertising expenditures are in millions of U.S. dollars for yearend 1990. In many countries, ad spending figures are estimates and/or gross figures. * indicates that U.S. spending figures include measured media only as reported by LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media reports. All other U.S. spending figures include estimated unmeasured expenditures from AA's 100 Leading National Advertisers, Sept. 25, 1991. Non-U.S. ad spending includes only countries in the column headed "Countries in which spending was reported." Rankings of the top 10 advertisers in 43 countries begin on Page S-12. Pan Arabia includes Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman. For more information, see "How to read these rankings," Page S-13.

Smart buy: Global weeklies

Healthy circulation—and ad rate—gains found with medium

By R. Craig Endicott

Advertisers with a bit more to spend on their print budgets in global media through mid-1991 found weeklies their most efficient buy.

As a group, the six international weeklies advanced only 1.1% in average costs per thousand, compared with 7.2% by dailies and 5.8% by monthlies. The weeklies also showed healthy circulation gains of an aggregate 4% while dailies remained flat and monthlies slipped 0.1%, according to Advertising Age's seventh annual Global Media & Marketing survey.

But weeklies did push up their ad rates an average 9.6% for a b&w page, substantially more than the average increase of 2.1% for monthlies, but less than the 12.3% hike for dailies.

Monthlies suited those seeking stable ad rates and low CPMs. Two monthlies, National Geographic and Scientific American, didn't raise rates, and World-Paper undercut its 1990 rate by 6.2% in 1991, according to the study, which included 17 global publications. (See "How to read these rankings" on Page S-13 for selection criteria that determined a "global" publication.)

But monthlies tend to have higher ad rates, particularly sector leviathan Reader's Digest, which charges $303,785 for a b&w page—nearly double the price of a b&w ad in Time, the second most costly publication. But Reader's Digest's CPM is $10.80, lowest on the chart. That compares with the International Herald Tribune's $229.74 CPM, the survey's highest.

Worldwide circulation among the 17 got a big boost from expansion in Europe, particularly Western Europe. European circulation grew 3.5% and Asia-Pacific advanced 2.7%, as Latin America dipped 0.6% and North America fell 1%, the latter accounting for nearly 70% of total circulation.

Circulation losses in North America were attributed largely to monthlies, down 1.7%, and dailies, down 5.9%, the latter solely the result of an 11.6% decline at The Wall Street Journal. The Journal's circulation rose 7.9% in Europe, where it was outpaced only by Time's 15.8%.

Time is in a five-year plan to raise its Atlantic edition (basically Europe) rate base to 750,000 by 1995. Both Time and The Wall Street Journal Europe have added U.K. printing plants in the past two years.

As in 1990, AT&T Co. was the most frequently mentioned source for ad revenues. Five publications named AT&T when asked to indicate their top five advertisers. Philip Morris Cos. was mentioned four times.

The recession's impact seemed to jockey leading ad categories among the publications: Autos were mentioned eight times in 1991 as a major ad source vs. 11 in 1990; airlines, six vs. 10; financial institutions, seven vs. 11. Computers, telecommunications and tourism picked up the slack. □ that isn't an auto marketer, spent $411 million, placing the Japanese company ninth.

Though only two Japanese companies rank among the top 10, 27 of the 50 marketers are based in Japan. Last year, 29 Japanese marketers made the top 50.

The majority of the Japanese companies are ranked from No. 22 to No. 46; 21 of those 25 marketers are Japanese.

Only nine U.S. marketers made the list, down from 10 last year. Of the U.S. companies on the ranking, five are food marketers, two are soap marketers and two are auto marketers.

German companies captured four spots, up from three.

Two and a half Dutch companies ranked. Italy and France each tallied three marketers, Switzerland placed one and the U.K. chalked up one-half. The split is the result of Unilever, which claims roots in the U.K. and the Netherlands.

Spending for the top 50 totaled $15.9 billion, up 8.2% from 1989 figures.

Auto marketers topped the list with 12 entries and $4.3 billion in spending.

Food marketers accounted for 11 companies spending a total of $4.3 billion, while electronics marketers logged in nine, investing a total of $2.7 billion.

In addition, four breweries, four retailers, three soap marketers and two personal care companies made the list.

A computer marketer, a photographic company, a cosmetics marketer, a post office and a utility round out the ranking.

Newcomers to the list are No. 9 Canon; No. 44 Barilla, Parma, Italy; No. 46 Matsushita Denko, Osaka, Japan; No. 48 Gervais Danone, Lavallois-Perret, France; No. 49 the German Post Office, Bonn; and No. 50 Daimler-Benz, Stuttgart.

Companies that made the list in 1989 but not last year were Tokyo Electric Power, Tokyo; Matsushita Kogyo, Yokohama, Japan; Suzuki Motor Co., Hamamatsu, Japan; Seiyu, Tokyo; PepsiCo, Purchase, N.Y.; and Standa, Rome.

Information for Ad Age's ranking of the top 50 spenders in non-U.S. advertising was compiled from data supplied by 43 major advertiser markets by Ad Age's international network. Information came from a variety of sources (see "How to read these rankings" on Page S-13). □

Cadbury

tight mixer heritage we'd had. We've done that in two ways, partly through repositioning Schweppes and making it more broad-range. For instance in the U.S., now we've added Schweppes raspberry ginger ale. The other way we've grown is through acquisition. We acquired Canada Dry and Crush without any dilution in earnings.

The levels of consumption in the U.S. are at least twice those in Europe, so we see potential for growing the soft-drink category in Europe. While the colas will take the major share, it still leaves a considerable amount of business for . . . the non-cola categories.

John Cleese combines the right sense of humor and Britishness for Schweppes spots in the U.S. and U.K.

AA: Why did you move the worldwide beverage headquarters from Stamford, Conn., to London?

Mr. Cadbury: I wanted to have a single strategic resource and headquarters. We originally went to the States with our beverage headquarters because the beverage part of our business was much smaller than the confectionery side. The U.S. has the most experienced management and the two major competitors are based in the U.S., so we needed to succeed [there]. Now with that knowledge, experience and team we can combine the confectionery and beverage teams and have one facility.

AA: What about speculation that Cadbury Schweppes could be taken over, perhaps by Philip Morris Cos.?

Mr. Cadbury: No company is invulnerable if it's a public company. I'm not a believer in the size idea that by being a certain size you make yourself less vulnerable. The only strategy I have for making takeovers difficult is to ensure we perform at a high standard and make ourselves very expensive.

AA: How much do you spend on advertising worldwide?

Mr. Cadbury: Our total marketing ratio is around 11% of sales. We're spending around $544 million on marketing and approximately half of that is advertising, so we would have an ad spend of around 5% [of sales] or about $289 million.

AA: Do you have an agency alignment policy?

Mr. Cadbury: We don't on confectionery. We have [developed] a single advertising execution for our Canada Dry brand, but we have not standardized or put all our business through a single agency. We have agencies like Foote, Cone & Belding we use pretty extensively on the beverage side, but we don't have a policy at this stage of one agency worldwide.

"We still have a long way to go before we can be satisfied that we are really a broadly based refreshment beverage company."

AA: Are you moving money from advertising to other promotional spending?

Mr. Cadbury: Over time, we've spent more on promotions as a percentage of the total budget. On the other hand, we've increased our marketing investment. During the last 12 months, price has obviously been a very significant factor to the consumer. So we have increased our promotional budget.

AA: What about Eastern Europe?

Mr. Cadbury: We have for a number of years franchised our beverage brands through Eastern Europe, primarily Schweppes. We've been looking at possible opportunities to take our confectionery business more directly into Eastern Europe.

AA: Do you see getting involved in celebrity advertising or entertainment marketing like Coca-Cola and Pepsi?

Mr. Cadbury: We are not doing anything that could really parallel the Coke or Pepsi investments behind personalities. Currently, we have campaigns running in the U.S. and U.K. using John Cleese as a spokesman for Schweppes. I think he combines the right personality, sense of Britishness and sense of humor.

AA: Do you plan more brand extensions?

Mr. Cadbury: Management is looking for any opportunity they can to exploit the brand franchise. In our case with the Cadbury brand, the [recent] extensions into ice cream, chocolate milk, chocolate desserts are all very compatible with the Cadbury heritage.

AA: What are Cadbury Schweppes' biggest problems or weaknesses?

Mr. Cadbury: We still have a long way to go before we can be satisfied that we are really a broadly based refreshment beverage company. And there are geographical weaknesses.

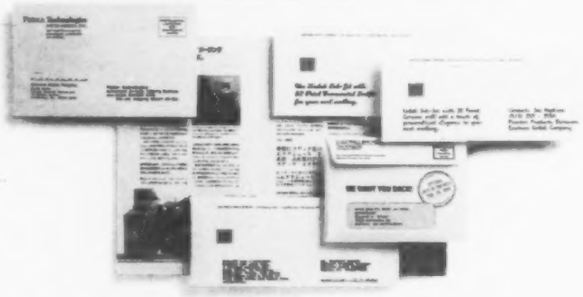
We have a much stronger position in the U.K., France and Spain than we do in Germany, Italy or even the U.S. market. In confectionery, equally we . . . have other positions where we're underrepresented. □

Ink makes it personal. There was a time when the most sincere notes and the most important documents were written and individually signed by hand using quill and ink. Since then, ink has been the long standing and classic means of expressing personal involvement in a message. Time has also proven ink to be a most powerful means of eliciting a personal response.

Now, Kodak combines the potential of advanced technology with the powerful personal touch of ink. Here are only a few examples of how high-quality, Kodak ink-jet technology can bring innovative solutions to personal printing.

If you're interested in improving your image and getting more personal with your customers, call (513) 259-3100, or write Eastman Kodak Company, Dayton Operations, 3100 Research Boulevard, Dayton, Ohio 45420-4099.

With direct mail ink-jet imaging not only avoids the perils of paper labels, but also provides greater versatility and improved response rates. Kodak ink-jet gives you the highest quality imaging for addressing and the flexibility to position personalized messages practically anywhere. You also get bar codes with tested readability rates of 100%. All Kodak products have received US Postal Service POSTNET bar code certification.



As a major player in high-volume, variable data imaging, Kodak offers the only imaging system capable of full-page variable-data printing at full production speeds. The system's versatility makes it perfect for everything from instant scratch-off lottery tickets to individualized sweepstakes mailings.

Dual image, ink-jet synchronization lets you move from conventional addressing to creative addressing. For catalogs you can address as well as deliver personalized messages both inside and outside. And, you can address and code inside order forms to solicit response and speed fulfillment. For magazines, Kodak's Selective Imaging and Gathering means ads can be selectively bound in and personalized. Individualized messages can be imaged both inside and outside for maximum impact and reader involvement.

How to read these rankings

Advertising Age's fifth annual ranking of major advertisers outside the U.S. and seventh annual Global Media lineup are compiled from data obtained from around the world.

Global marketers

The advertiser ranking on Page S-6 includes spending figures from 43 countries. Sources for the data include research companies, media tracking services, marketing publications and advertising agencies. Lists of data about ad spending within countries were obtained by Ad Age correspondents. The lists ranged from as many as 200 advertisers to only the top 10 spenders.

There is no standard procedure for monitoring ad spending worldwide. In some countries, lists are compiled by brand or by divisions or subsidiaries of companies. Wherever possible, spending reported for a brand, division or subsidiary is added to the parent company's total. The company names have been "Americanized" for the purpose of this ranking.

Ad spending in some countries is reported according to rate card figures. When appropriate, gross rates are discounted by AA editors to reflect more accurately actual spending in the market.

Sources for individual countries are listed below their respective country rankings in the tables titled "Top 10 advertisers in 43 countries," starting on Page S-12. All figures are reported in U.S. dollars, using conversion rates of 12-month averages for 1990 and 1989, respectively. Source lines include conversion rates for both 1990 and 1989, unless sources provided figures in U.S. dollars rather than local currencies.

Global media

AA requested circulation and other data from publishers for years ended June 1990 and June 1991. Ad rates reported were in effect at the end of June in both those years.

Criteria for inclusion of publications in the table on Page S-2 are:

- Substantial mass circulation on at least three continents.
- Worldwide circulation of at least 50,000 of international editions equal to at least 10% of the domestic circulation.
- Advertising in all editions purchased through a central office.

Trade publications are excluded because they aren't considered mass circulation magazines.

Licensed publications are also excluded because they lack central control over advertising. □

Asian satellite TV blasts off

By Andrew Geddes

HONG KONG—The battle in Southeast Asia's exploding commercial satellite TV industry is intensifying.

Spurred by the generally poor quality of services supplied by terrestrial broadcasters and the region's expanding economies, major English-language program suppliers are finding vast new markets for their products via systems employing direct broadcast by satellite.

One of the most ambitious ventures to date is HutchVision's Satellite Television Asian Region TV, known as STAR TV, which started regular broadcasts earlier this year. STAR TV channels are transmitted via the AsiaSat 1 satellite's signal, which shadows an estimated 2.7 billion potential viewers in 38 countries.

To date, STAR TV has launched Sports Channel and Music Channel, joint ventures with Denver-based sports programmer Prime Network and New York-based Viacom International's MTV Networks, respectively. BBC International made its debut Oct. 15.

A joint-venture agreement has also been signed with Hong Kong's Asia Television for a Chinese Channel that will make its debut later this year.

Negotiations for partners for STAR TV's English-language Entertainment Channel are yet to be concluded.

STAR TV provides its service free and relies solely on advertising for revenue. George Chan, VP-sales and marketing, said STAR TV hopes to reach 4 million homes by 1994.

STAR TV and MTV join forces in Asia for the satellite TV war.

Despite the absence of hard audience data and the relatively small numbers, Mr. Chan said STAR TV raised $65 million in advance ad revenues through a special plan.

Each advertiser, including Chase Manhattan Corp., Mobil Oil Corp. and Mitsubishi Motor Corp., paid $2 million for a package of spots and an opportunity to buy 0.25% of the company's equity, Mr. Chan said.

Single global buys on MTV are "not far away," he said.

"We're talking to people like Pepsi and Coke," MTV Chairman-CEO Tom Freston said.

"We really want MTV to be perceived as an indigenous network where it is," he said.

Mr. Chan said advertisers on STAR TV's transmission in August of the MTV Video Music Awards included Nike and Swatch International.

He said STAR TV is also actively marketing its channels wholesale to the region's some 150 terrestrial broadcasters and cable TV stations.

Initial rates are $1,200 for a 30-second run-of-schedule spot or $1,680 for a fixed-time spot, Mr. Chan said.

Two other networks seeking viewers, Cable News Network International and ESPN, won't be part of STAR TV's service. Those can be seen starting next month via the Indonesian government-operated Palapa B2 satellite.

Industry sources say STAR TV failed to sign CNN and ESPN because the two U.S. program suppliers disagree with STAR TV's policy of not scrambling signals.

On the Palapa system, CNN and ESPN will encode their signals and rely on subscriptions as a prime source of revenue.

CNN has been available for four years but has few viewers because consumers must have a 7.5-meter dish costing tens of thousands of dollars to receive the signal, beamed from an Intelsat satellite. A dish less than half that size, costing about $10,000, is needed to receive Palapa's signal, available to an estimated 40 million TV homes throughout the eight-country region.

A CNN spokeswoman said the network expects to have about 2 million subscribers in three to five years. Ad rates and subscription price for the Asian service aren't yet available.

Sources say U.S.-based Home Box Office, state-owned Singapore Broadcasting Service and TV New Zealand are also negotiating for space on the Palapa satellites. □

Publishers vs. EC proposals

Campaign addresses threats to ad revenues, jobs

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Publishers are mobilizing to fight proposed European Community legislation that could cause massive losses of ad revenues and jobs.

The European Publishers Council, formed to combat proposed restrictions on advertising, will break a campaign Nov. 11 in about 100 newspapers and more than 200 magazines.

"If revenue comes down 30% to 40% and you have to cut your editorial costs, newspapers and magazines won't have the same variety of information," said Hubert Burda, chairman, Burda Verlag, Munich.

The publishers' group saw work from 43 agencies and selected print ads created by three—Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising here; Antelme Potel & Associes, Paris; and Bro Annonsbyra, Stockholm. The line "Stop the EC taking liberties" will appear in each ad.

The agencies donated their time, and publishers are providing an estimated $50 million in space for the campaign that will continue into next year.

Legislation is most advanced for restrictions on tobacco and pharmaceutical ads. The tobacco directive is scheduled to be reviewed by EC health ministers Nov. 11, and the pharmaceutical directive is awaiting a second reading in the European Parliament. The European Commission's Consumer Policy Service is expected to make proposals in the coming months that could lead to a directive on food claims.

Up to 1,742 magazines across Europe could close and 16,110 jobs could be eliminated if all the measures under discussion are enacted, a study by another publishers' group found.

The Federation of Associations of Periodical Publishers, Brussels, issued a report this summer that studied the legislation's possible impact on the magazine industry, currently employing 200,000 people at 30,000 titles in the EC.

In 1990, magazine ad revenues totaled $10.9 billion, or 25.4% of all ad revenue in the 12 member nations, the report found. Magazines' share of total ad revenue ranged from a low of 9.6% in Ireland to a high of 32.6% in Germany.

At risk under the proposals are $180 million in tobacco ads, $565 million in pharmaceutical ads and $768 million in other categories, the report said. □

Mags beat tough times

By Laurel Wentz and Dagmar Mussey

The increasing independence of Spanish women, the birth of a baby in the U.K. and reunification of Germany have enabled three monthlies to thrive in hard times.

These success stories counter the downturn in circulation and ad spending that forced magazines such as Vanity Fair, Mirabella and Fortune to close local editions in Europe this year.

In Spain, Cosmopolitan claims it has become the largest-selling women's magazine. The year-old joint venture between Cosmo parent Hearst Corp. and German publisher Gruner & Jahr has turned a potential liability—the first audited circulation figures aren't available until mid-November—into a selling point.

"We couldn't wait that long," said Jorge Planas, manager of Gruner & Jahr Espana. "In March we made the offer that if we're not No. 1, we'll give [advertisers] back one of every three pages bought. If we're not [at least] No. 2, we'll give back two of every three pages bought."

Cosmo claims it seized the circulation lead by addressing readers in a more straightforward—even risque—way than other magazines in Spain, he said.

A daring print and TV campaign by etc, Madrid, challenges readers. One ad reads, "If you like sex in movies more than in bed, don't read Cosmopolitan. You decide." New executions broke this month.

Despite its claimed 171,000 circulation, Spanish Cosmo still trails its competitors in ad revenue, including the 129,000-circulation Elle, 98,000-circulation Marie Claire and 42,000-circulation Vogue

"The only weak spot . . . is that advertising money is not coming in as fast as we'd like it to," Mr. Planas said.

For the fiscal year that began July 1, Mr. Planas expects advertising to total 53% of revenues and circulation the remaining 47%. Long term, advertising should reach 60% to 65% of revenues, he said.

Spanish Cosmo takes about 50% of its editorial content from the U.S. edition.

Based on the success of Cosmopolitan in another market, the U.K., Hearst in 1989 relaunched She for women with children.

Linda Kelsey, then U.K. Cosmo's editor, returned from maternity leave in 1989 to discover there was no magazine aimed at the Cosmo reader who had married and had children.

"It's a terrible cliche that having a baby changes your life, but it does," said Ms. Kelsey, 39. "I thought, if I see life from a different perspective, where is the magazine that's right for me?"

Instead of launching a new magazine, Hearst's U.K. subsidiary, National Magazine Co., offered Ms. Kelsey an existing Hearst title, She.

In the relaunched magazine, Ms. Kelsey created a 16-page monthly section called "You & Your Child" that has attracted new advertisers, including Hasbro toys and Boots baby products. By segregating the section about children, She attracts more upscale advertisers such as Harrods in other parts of the magazine.

In Germany, meanwhile, Reader's Digest has grown by targeting the new eastern German market. Das Beste, the German edition, has increased sales by 434,000 in the last year, thanks to its new Eastern readers. The five east German states now account for 24.5% of the 1.8 million German circulation of Das Beste, up from zero before reunification a year ago.

Relaunched She addresses upscale moms with a lively format.

Other western German magazines have made only modest gains in the east. Two of the largest-circulation Western German weeklies, Gruner & Jahr's Stern and Burda's Die Bunte, have only added about 38,000 and 22,900, respectively, in eastern German sales.

"Das Beste has been accepted by east German readers because it offers help and advice in many situations, and that is what east Germans need," said Joachim Reischuck, the magazine's manager of marketing services and research. Articles in Das Beste's October issue include such as "You too can draw," "Are you only tired or are you sick?" and "Why I didn't lose hope." □

Share belittles int'l media's worth

By Nancy Giges

European media companies typically concentrate on home markets, but their importance to advertisers is greater than pan-European audience size would indicate.

The study by Young & Rubicam, London, published by NTC Publications, found more than 90% of what Europeans listen to, watch and read is owned by a company based in their country. But a few companies are becoming multinational.

Dominance—in both home country and in categories—makes the companies indispensable to advertisers, particularly as the publications expand, the report found.

"The big publishers who are strong in Europe—in Germany, the U.K. and France—tend to expand into the same media in different countries," said Jane Perry, research director, Young & Rubicam Media in Europe, London.

"Just as a large advertiser likes to deal with the same agency in different countries," working with the same publisher and title gives a sense of familiarity, she said.

Initially, "they are driven by a publishing rather than an advertising imperative and are looking for circulation," Ms. Perry said.

The study, prepared last spring, used material from published sources, including statements from the companies and financial reports.

Reader's Digest is the only truly international magazine publishing separate editions in all major Western European countries, except Austria, Ireland and Greece. It's among the top three paid-circulation monthlies in every country except Spain and is the No. 1 seller in eight countries.

Although Reader's Digest has 7.7% of European monthlies' circulation total, it trails the 8.5% of Bertelsmann, which publishes titles in a number of countries including Germany, Spain, France and the U.K.

Most of the multinational European media groups come from the four largest markets—Germany, France, Italy and the U.K. German publishers claim 38% of all European sales of both weeklies and monthlies as well as half of all women's magazine sales, according to the report. France holds the next largest share, with 12% of monthlies and 10% of weeklies.

Bertelsmann, whose major consumer magazine company is Gruner & Jahr, is the only German company whose media interests outside its homeland exceed those within the country. Non-German circulation accounts for 62% of Bertelsmann's total European circulation. The company sells 7.7 million copies of weeklies and 7.4 million copies of monthlies in Europe.

Bertelsmann also shows up as an electronic media player, primarily because of its 38.9% holding of RTL-Plus in Germany.

Capturing a big piece of the weeklies' market is Heinrich Bauer Verlag, Germany's largest magazine publisher with 40% of the women's market and 20% of general-magazine sales. Outside Germany, Bauer has concentrated on expanding its domestic titles. For example, the German Tina is called Maxi in France, Bella in the U.K. and Women's World in the U.S.

Another major player, Axel Springer Verlag, accounts for 8.8% of the weeklies' circulation in Europe, primarily via TV guides and sport and hobby titles.

Of the 12 countries included in the study, only Austria had more than 20% foreign ownership in all three print categories: dailies, weeklies and monthlies.

The greatest foreign ownership of monthly magazines is in Switzerland, where foreign companies own 60%, including Hearst Corp., New York, with 24%. Austria has the greatest foreign ownership of weeklies. Bauer holds 51% of women's weeklies and 14% of other weeklies.

TV across Europe is heavily state-controlled, with 61.5% of its audience viewing state-owned channels. Only Silvio Berlusconi's Fininvest controls more than a minuscule percentage of media outside its home country of Italy, with 6.6% of the total European audience. □ cloud perception of what kind of magazine Fortune is," he said.

During most of Fortune Italia's short life, a legal battle raged between Italian entrepreneurs Silvio Berlusconi and Carlo de Benedetti for control of Mondadori, Fortune's Italian partner.

"By the time the court battle was resolved, a lot of the damage had been done," Mr. Hayes said.

"Next time we'll have more control and not do it 50-50," he said. "And there will be more management involvement."

"I think they burned their fingers," said Gerd Hinske, publisher of Business Week International. "A good title is not automatically a recipe for success."

Business Week's only local-language, joint-venture arrangements are in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, where Mr. Hinske noted the editorial is translated from Business Week, costs are low and circulation is relatively small.

In February 1988, Hachette and Fortune teamed up in France in a joint venture presided over by Hachette Vice Chairman Daniel Filipacchi.

Marie-Solange de Vaugelas, former ad-

"I think they burned their fingers. A good title is not automatically a recipe for success."

vertising director of Fortune France, recalled the struggle between the Americans' desire to control the editorial content and the magazine's increasingly French touch.

"Fortune France was more glamorous, with a different layout and paper quality" than Fortune in the U.S., she said. She's now ad director of the French edition of Reader's Digest.

Faced with irreconcilable differences, Fortune France closed in 1990. That also doomed the Spanish edition that was to have been launched with Hachette.

In Germany, Fortune negotiated for several years with publishing giants Gruner & Jahr, Burda Verlag and Axel Springer Verlag.

"Fortune wanted to have the final say in editorial matters, and that was the reason G&J declined," said a German media executive.

At Axel Springer, a spokesman said German publishers are more interested in the eastern German market than other opportunities.

Burda, however, made a deal with Fortune rival Forbes to launch !Forbes von Burda in February 1990 as a 50-50 joint venture in Germany. Circulation reached 90,197 by September 1991, but ad pages for the first nine months of the year totaled 625, compared with 793 for all of last year, when the magazine published eight issues. Burda has the rights to launch Forbes in the rest of Europe but currently has no plans.

The Italian edition of Fortune was shuttered July 19. Launched in April 1989, it lost an estimated $3 million in its first year and $4 million the second. Ad pages fell from 80 a month in its early months to about 40 at the end.

With the recession deepening, Fortune and Mondadori executives met last summer to discuss Fortune Italia's future.

"It was the recession and lack of management attention" from Mondadori that led to the magazine's failure, Mr. Hayes said.

Now Fortune is redoubling its efforts in the pan-European, English-language niche. Fortune International is editorially similar to the U.S. Fortune, but with more international ads.

Mr. Hayes said the every-other-week Fortune International will increase its European rate base 4.3% to 120,000 with the January issue and is researching how to expand circulation.

Ad sales efforts are also being expanded and Fortune International will be repackaged to make it easier for international readers to understand, he said. □
